Eugene Hodges and Fred Chiverall accompany Co. C. to camp next week as cooks. There is no reason now why our boys should not live high during the encampment, and we trust they all will return with two inches of fat on their ribs.

Our genial friend Capt. Foster, clerk of the Lilley House, returned yesterday from an extended trip into New York state and up into Northern Michigan. He is much invigorated from the journey, and the traveling public will be glad to meet Capt. Foster in the hotel office again.

Dell Wood and wife were in Tecumseh from Monday till to day. They came upon a sad errand but among kind friends, who assisted in the last sad rites of their mother's funeral. Dell now fills a responsible position in the N. Y. P. & O. car shops and expects to make Cleveland his permanent home.

Sheriff E. H. Hyde, of Adrian, was in town yesterday in search of an individual who has come out $50 ahead by filling out a grain receipt and selling it after banking hours. Officer Schultz saw the man and talked with him and suspected he was not straight, but not knowing any of the facts at the time he did not detain him.—Jackson Patriot July 27.

Last Friday evening about ten o'clock, Ed. Clark of Clinton, and a man named Miller from Ridgeway, were driving on Evans street and met with quite a mishap. They were going in different directions and failed to turn out far enough in passing and the hind wheels of the buggies locked together with a crash, tearing Clark's wheel off and breaking it to pieces. Miller's hind axletree was bent nearly double. Fortunately no one in either buggy was hurt.

Happening in Adrian last Friday, we spent a few moments with County Clerk Hunter looking over the foundation of the new Court House. The walls are now all up, as far as the water table, and on two sides the window frames of the first story are in position. The work is progressing as rapidly as the proper seasoning of the walls will allow. We are indebted to Mr. Hunter for a fine photographic view of the new building, taken from the architect's plan of the elevation.

NOTICE.—To those of my friends who said they would patronise me if I could furnish them good coal as cheap as any one, I would say that I cannot handle coal at the margin I can get on it, hence shall not begin the business. I notified most of my friends some time ago not to wait for me, and I gave the names of some to S. W. Temple and asked him to speak to them to this effect, and if they wished to patronize him all right. It seems he took it for granted that those were positive orders for coal which they are not, hence this notice.
J. J. NEELEY.

At the blanket race held on Lawrence Park, Adrian, last Saturday, the stallion Banker Rothchilds acquited himself with a great deal of credit. After making a very large season, he trotted and won the free for all class with ease, defeating "Bessy Gay," also the game and speedy little gelding, that can trot on any good track in 2:30 or better. It was the opinion of good judges present that Banker R. can trot a good mile in 2:25 or better. "Lady Garfield," by Banker, also won the three year old race with ease, in two straight heats. Mr. Henry Keyser also showed his grey gelding, by Banker, which is four years old this spring. He can trot in 2:50.

Celery culture at Kalamazoo has grown to mammoth proportions. The Gazette of that place says: "Never since the city earned the title of Celeryville has the crop of that palatable article of relish been so large. Many acres have been added to the land cultivated for its growth, and the quality never was better. The various shippers of celery are doing a rushing business, their orders extending to the most distant places in the country. Texas, Dakota, Colorado and the seashore are daily supplied from Kalamazoo. One firm ships 2,000 dozen daily, and the season is hardly opened. Next month the orders will begin to come in from the heaviest dealers, and it is anticipated that the season will last until March next."

The Morenci band have purchased the old Adrian band uniforms for $75. The first cost of the outfit was $500, which indicates that the Morenci boys struck a good bargain.

The Dundee Gun Club will give its first annual tournament on Wednesday and Thursday, Aug. 6 and 7. Arrangements have been made for a good time and for a successful shoot.

On Tuesday next a match game of base ball will be played between the Detroit and Buffalo league teams at Recreation Park, Detroit. You can go to Detroit to see this game on the special excursion train for $1.25.

Tecumseh will be honored for the first time with the presence of a league base ball team this afternoon. The whole town should turn out to see the game. The HERALD goes to press two hours earlier than usual so we can lock up the office and all hands go to the show.

An "After Harvest Excursion" will run over the Branch from Jackson to Detroit on Tuesday, Aug. 5th '84. The Buffalo and Detroit Clubs will play on that day, which attraction of itself ought to draw a good crowd. A special train will run both ways, passing Tecumseh at 6:50 A. M. Fare for the round trip only $1.25.

Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Ide arrived in town Saturday on their wedding trip. In the evening a reception was given in their honor by the groom's parents Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Ide, when a large number of Lavern's old friends paid their respects. The happy pair returned to Detroit on Monday, where their future residence will be.

MR. EDITOR:—Permit me to say to the people of Tecumseh, that I have some acquaintance with the young Chinaman Chi Gin, who is to lecture at the Presbyterian Church on Friday evening, and I can cordially recommend him to their confidence. He and a companion, Huie Kin, were brought from California by Rev. Dr. Ells to Lane Theological Seminary, where for two years they studied for the ministry. They are continuing their studies now in Pennsylvania. They are lecturing in vacation on Chinaand Chinese Customs in order to support themselves. The last number of the Herald and Presbyter of Cincinnati says: "They are worthy of the help of the churches and will compensate the congregations which invite them by their interesting talks. etc." Admission to the lecture 10 cents.
WM. H. BABBITT.

Here is a little item taken from The Daily Inter Ocean, April 12, of Chicago, showing how it pays to raise grapes near Muskegon: "A. W. Slayton has a vinyard not far from this place that he wishes to put some man on—prefers to sell him one-half interest in his Peach, Plump and Grape farm, This is the way the Mowlton farm has paid for the last 5 years; it is a place of 15 acres. The receipts from these 15 acres for 5 years, 1878 to 1882 inclusive, are herewith appended. It should be borne in mind that these are the net receipts after freight and commission for selling are deducted, and the account sales of a Chicago Commission Merchant are open to public inspection to substantiate these figures:

1880	2,238.07
1881	3,887.06
Total	17,987.89

Deduct from this gross amount $1,000 per year for care of farm, cost of baskets and sundry expenses (a liberal allowance) leaves the sum total of net profits, $12,289.89 or $2,457.57 net annual income.

The management and members of the Tecumseh Bass Ball Association have every reason to be satisfied and encouraged in their efforts to produce a little diversion and avert the regime of quietness that usually reigns supreme in our midst, by liberality and interest evinced by the great majority of the admirers of the National game; while on the other hand it is a source of no little annoyance and surprise at the continual grumbling and fault finding of a small minority (emanating from a source where capital is the most plentiful) especially at the certainly very modest fee which has been deemed necessary to charge at the gate for admission and vehicles, in order to partially assist in meeting the necessarily large expences entailed. These people, although apparently intelligent, seem to be impressed with the idea that the incentive for which the association is working in supporting a club is not for the amusement, but as a source of revenue whereby they may reimburse their own personal exchequer, and that in lending their feeble efforts towards retarding the healthy growth of the organization that they are assisting to destroy some powerful monopoly. What position in history might not Tecumseh occupy if she but had a few more such illustrious and self sacrificing citizens?

Hereafter no admittance will be charged for carriages at regular ball games.

The sixth annual reunion of the soldiers and Sailors of Southwestern Michigan will be held at Battle Creek. August 19—32—four days. A fine program has been arranged and a large attendance is expected.

In 1883 the rank of Michigan in relation to the other states in general production, was third in buckwheat, seventh in wheat, tenth in oats and barley, fifteenth in corn and eighteenth in rye. Illinois is first in corn, wheat and oats, New York in buckwheat, Pennsylvania in rye, California in barley.

A firm in New Jersey has gone into the active manufacture of artificial eggs. Thus one by one the lawful prerogatives of the sedate, matronly old hen are being ruthlessly torn from her by the brutal hand of man. By and by some one will invent a machine for scratching up garden seeds, and then the hen's occupation will be wholly gone.

The Detroit Free Press, 24th inst., says: If the public could only have foreseen the fun, there would have been not less than 10,000 people at Recreation Park yesterday afternoon. There was fun enough to entertain several large chunks and a few basketful of fragments to spare. Most of it was condensed into the first inning, but there was enough distributed through the other eight to prevent them from getting gloomy.

The Cass boys were first at bat, and three bases on call balls, a wild throw, three passed balls, and a scratch hit gave them two runs.

Then the Cass showed what they could do in the way of errors, and the movement was as follows: A passed third strike, a steal, a base on called balls, a passed ball, a hit, another base on called balls, a wild pitch, another steal, a wild throw, another hit, another steal, another hit, another steal, a muffed thrown ball, a wild throw, another passed third strike and two more hits, netted precisely eight runs. After that the Cass boys played a good uphill game, but the hill they raised was too high to climb in eight innings.

BASE BALL.

The Corn City Unions of Toledo were shut out last Friday by the Tecumseh team, by a score of 12 to 0. It was the same old story of "three strikes and out." The same old crowd were present; the same "man with the uniform" on stood behind the catcher, and hugged him so close that every time he turned around he run into the aforesaid man; the same crowd sat out in the right field with an umbrella and opera glass, and the same "small boy" was there continually getting inside the ropes, and as continually getting fired out. The Unions didn't seem to catch on to Kelley's pitching and only made two base hits during the game. The Tecumsehs made six base hits and three two base hits. In the last innings it did look as if the Unions would get a run. There were three men on bases and not a man out. The next batter struck at the ball three times without hitting it, but was not caught out on the third strike, and thus forced the other three men off, and a tripple play was made by throwing the ball to third second and first and putting them out, and ending the game.

The people that attended Tuesday's game between the Mutuals of Jackson and our boys, saw a good game and got their money's worth. It was a splendid game all around although 7 errors were made on our side and five on the Jackson's. The score at end of the ninth innings stood 3 to 0 in our favor. The pitching on both sides could not have been better, not a man getting to first base on balls and neither one making a wild pitch. Faatz did not do as good work as generally, letting two balls pass, while E. Tray let one go by. Kelly struck out 21 men and W. Tray 9. Blair and W. Tray were the only men on the Jackson side that made base hits. Chapman did some heavy hitting, making a one and two base hit, and also making two out of the three scores. F. Bostwick also made a two bagger at the end of the sixth innings.

The following is Tuesday's score

DIED.

EDDY—On the 26th inst., at the residence of her son in-law, Wm. A. Wood, at Cleveland, Ohio Polly Diantha Eddy, relict of the late Jas. C. Eddy, aged 66 years.

The deceased was born at Earlville, Madison Co., New York, Aug. 15, 1818, and her home was in that village until her marriage in 1838. Soon after she removed to Michigan and lived nine years on a farm at Newburg. The family then moved to Ogden in this county, where they lived five years. Having sold the Ogden farm they moved back to Tecumseh where Mrs. Eddy, except for an interval of a year or two at Cleveland, has since resided.

The deceased was a woman of more than usual ability. She was a devoted wife and mother, of a genial, happy disposition, a great reader, and possessed of a remarkably retentive memory. These qualities made her a general favorite in the family and social circle. And yet it seemed as tho' more than her share of misfortune fell to her lot. She buried four children during her life time, and her husband Jas. C. Eddy, who enlisted in the 3d. Mich. Cav., was shot by a rebel guerilla near Huntsville, Ala., in 1862. She leaves but one surviving child, Polly Wood, who now resides at Cleveland, Ohio.

She left Tecumseh on the 17th of March last to visit relatives in Medina, Ohio, and then proceeded to her new home in Cleveland. At six o'clock on the morning of the 24th, a serious accident befell her which necessitated the amputation of a limb. She never rallied from the shock, and peacefully passed away at five P. M., on the 26th. Her remains were brought to this village on Monday and the funeral obsequies were held at Judge Stacy's residence at four o'clock that afternoon. Rev. Robert Wooden of Cambridge, a personal and religious friend of the deceased for thirty-nine years, officiated, at her own request. Many friends and relatives followed her lifeless form to the grave, in whose hearts the memory of "Aunt Diantha" will ever remain green. While mourning the lose of a fond mother and a kind genial companion, they rest in the assurance that her earthly trials are now over and that she has gone to a better land.

LIVES OF PAIN
RHEUMATISM and NEURALGIA have long enough run riot in the human system.
They have tormented the human family and defied the medical faculty from time out of mind. Everybody has suffered, or has friends who have suffered, from these diseases. Opiates only stupefy the nerves, benumb the muscles and racked the brain with wearying pain.
"Athlophoros" is the enemy of Rheumatism and Neuralgia, bought, like other diseases, by the blood, upon the joints, causing the pains, and the muscles, and nerves to the frontal brain and induce sleep.
"Athlophoros" is a new remedy, but it has been thoroughly tried from far and near, and testimonials from well known persons who had long been sufferers. It has earned their gratitude, it has cured them. That is all—and that is enough.
"Athlophoros" can do for you what it has done for those sufferers. It can drive out your Rheumatism and Neuralgia, and will do so if you give it a fair trial.
"Athlophoros" has so far proved such a great success that we feel sure that its merits are known, and its cure assured.
"Athlophoros" [illegible] "Athlophoros" [illegible] as a cure for the dreadful diseases [illegible] CONSUMPTION [illegible] have suffered. Not a mere temporary relief, but a permanent, enduring and [illegible] cure.
If you cannot get Athlophoros of your druggist, we will send it express paid, on receipt of regular price—one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it from your druggist, but if he hasn't it, do not be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us as directed.

was the first preparation perfectly adapted to cure diseases of the scalp, and the first successful restorer of faded or gray hair to its natural color, growth, and youthful beauty. It has had many imitators, but none have so fully met all the requirements needful for the proper treatment of the hair and scalp. HALL'S HAIR RENEWER has steadily grown in favor, and spread its fame and usefulness to every quarter of the globe. Its unparalleled success can be attributed to but one cause: the entire fulfilment of its promises.
The proprietors have often been surprised at the receipt of orders from remote countries, where they had never made an effort for its introduction.
The use for a short time of HALL'S HAIR RENEWER wonderfully improves the personal appearance. It cleanses the scalp from all impurities, cures all humors, fever, and dryness, and thus prevents baldness. It stimulates the weakened glands, and enables them to push forward a new and vigorous growth. The effects of this article are not transient, like those of alcoholic preparations, but remain a long time, which makes its use a matter of economy.

BUCKINGHAM'S DYE FOR THE

A Huge Electric Battery.

In erecting the great statue of Liberty, two things had to be considered that seem very trifling and yet, if neglected, might destroy the statue in one day, or cause it to crumble slowly to pieces. One is the sun, the other is the seabreeze. Either of these could destroy the great copper figure, and something must be done to prevent such a disaster. The heat of the sun would expand the metal and pull it out of shape, precisely as it does pull the Brooklyn bridge out of shape every day. The bridge is made in four parts, and when they expand with the heat of the sun they slide one past the other and no harm is done. The river span rises and falls day and night, as heat and cold alternate. The great copper statue is likewise in two parts, the frame work of iron, and the copper covering, and while they are securely fastened together, they can move one over the other. Each bolt will slip a trifle as the copper expands, in the hot August sunshine, and slide back again when the freezing winds blow and the vast figure shrinks together in the cold. Besides this, the copper surface is so thin and elastic that it will bend slightly when heated, yet keep its general shape.

The salt air blowing in from the sea has thin fingers and a bitter, biting tongue. If it finds a crack where it can creep in between the copper surface and iron skeleton, there will be trouble at once. These metals do not agree together, and where there is salt moisture in the air they seem to quarrel more bitterly than ever. It seems that every joining of points of copper and iron makes a tiny battery, and so faint shivers of electricity would run through all the statue, slowly corroding and eating it into dust. This, curious, silent, and yet sure destruction must be prevented, and so every joint throughout the statue, wherever copper touches iron, must be protected with little rags stuffed between the metals to keep them from quarreling. It is the same wherever two different metals touch each other. Imagine what a tremendous battery the Liberty would make, with its tons of copper surface and monstrous skeleton of iron. However, a little care prevents all danger, as provision will be made, of course, for keeping the metals from touching each other. — Charles Barnard, in St. Nicholas.

How Roman Women Beautify Their Complexions.

Complexions differ very much with the climate. The English have, beyond a doubt, the most beautiful complexions in the world. American girls possess more beauty of feature, perhaps, but their complexions are not nearly so fine. As one goes further south toward the equator, one sees darker skin and darker hair and eyes, for all these physical characteristics have reference to climatic influences. Upon two things the condition of the skin depends—oil and coloring matter. The skin of a very old man or woman, for want of oil, becomes like wrinkled, dried-up parchment; an Albino has scarce any coloring matter in his hair, eyes or complexion. To finish, I will give you a recipe for beautifying the complexion—the one used by the dames of ancient Rome. Probably it is familiar to many, but there may be others who have never read it. These ladies made a stiff paste of rye flour, and covered their faces with it on retiring. In the morning they washed it off with milk (they never used water), and applied a little powder if it was deemed necessary. This, we are told on good authority, is really the best method of improving the complexion that has ever been used, either in ancient or modern times. The rye flour is said to positively draw from the skin any marks that may have lingered on it. Moreover, it makes the complexion charmingly soft an effect which the milk helps to produce. Several Parisian belles adopted this plan, and it is rumored that the Empress Eugenie tried it. At all events the ladies who are known to have followed the recipe of the Romans are also those who have been celebrated for their lovely skins. In spite of the opinion of the clever druggist, this is doubtless very efficacious in softening and bleaching the skin. — Toronto Globe.

Believed to Be a Fiction.

Julian Arnold said that "his father, Edwin Arnold, wrote the most of 'Light of Asia' on the cuff of his shirt sleeve, while riding in the cars to and from his office. He says his father went into London every morning, and during the ride would write on his cuff with pencil. In the evening, after his return home, he copied the lines off on paper and in this way wrote most of the poem." If Julian Arnold really said that he probably told more lies in those few lines than he ever told in the same space before. This "cuff writing" business, dearly beloved, is a beautiful, but rather gauzy fable that exists in the highly imaginable intellects of young journalists, of some three or four days' experience in the dog fight and fire department of an able journal. A cuff is an awkward thing to write on at best, and it is very seldom that a newspaper man is so reduced for stationery as to be compelled to write poems and leaders on his cuffs. Especially when the "concern" furnishes note books and tablets. When you hear a man telling how he took down a three-colum speech, at midnight, in a pelting storm, on his cuff, ask him if he didn't see to write his notes by the lurid glare of his nose. The one is quite as probable as the other. No more of this "cuff" business, Julian. It does not need that any man should come all the way from England to tell us such stuff as that. We have some good old romancers right here in America. Honestly, we never knew but one reporter who claimed to take all his notes on his cuffs. And we never saw him but once with cuffs on his wrists. And they were so dirty he couldn't make a legible mark on them with anything except a piece of chalk. Call up the next scribe.—Burlington Hawkeye.

An Egyptian Battalion 1400 B. C.

The 100 Captains formed the front rank of the battalion, and each Captain had his 100 men in file behind him. A Corporal at the head of each nine men. The chief of each 1,000 men was in front of the center of the two companies, while the Colonel commanding the grand battalion was in front of the center.

The leaders were not mounted on horseback, but were mounted in two wheeled chariots drawn usually by two horses. In the chariots were carried a supply of javelins and arrows for the use of the chief, who usually had in the chariot with him a soldier, who held a buckler to cover him from the arrows of the enemy, while he dealt about him with his bow and spears.

In the early days, and down to the time of Sesostris, the officers and noncommissioned officers carried bucklers and swords, while the private soldiers of infantry carried each a buckler and a battle-ax. Sometimes the battle-ax was accompanied by, and sometimes replaced by, a spear.

It is easy to see that Moses drew from the military organization of Egypt that which he adopted for the Israelites and later on the Greeks their formations. Both these nations took their first lessons in civilization and organization from Egypt.

In the earliest monuments and records of the Egyptian army there is no sign of the existence of the horse as a military animal, while in the monuments of the eighteenth dynasty, the war-horse is everywhere indicated. It is probable that the war-horse was first introduced by the Shepherd Kings, who came in from Syria about 4,100 years ago. It is certain that the horse formed an important agent in the military establishment of Egypt, under the legitimate Kings of the country, 1,700 years before the Christian era, and the lack of monuments erected during the 500 years of struggle between the Shepherd Kings and the Thebans explains easily the lack of record on this subject. Sesostris had at one time 20,000 war chariots in line drawn by horses.—General Stone, in Journal Military Service Institution of the United States.

The Language of Umbrellas.

There is a language of umbrellas as of flowers. For instance, place your umbrella in a rack and it will change owners. To open it quickly in the street means that somebody's eye is going to be put out; to shut it, that a hat or two is to be knocked off. An umbrella carried over a woman, the man getting nothing but the drippings of the rain, signifies courtship. When a man has the umbrella and the woman the drippings it indicates marriage. To push your umbrella into a person and then open it means "I dislike you." To swing your umbrella over your head signifies "I am making a nuisance of myself." To trail your umbrella along the foot-path means that the man behind you is thirsting for your blood. To carry it at right angles under your arm signifies that an eye is to be lost by the man that follows you. To open an umbrella quickly, it is said, will frighten a mad bull. To put a cotton umbrella by the side of a silk one signifies "Exchange is not robbery." To purchase an umbrella means "I am not not smart, but honest." To lend an umbrella indicates "I am a fool." To return an umbrella means—well, never mind what it means, nobody ever does that. To turn an umbrella in a gust of wind presages profanity. To carry your umbrella in a case signifies it is a shabby one. To carry an umbrella just high high enough to tear out men's eyes and knock off men's hats signifies "I am a woman." To press an umbrella on your friend, saying, "Oh! do take it; I had much rather you would than not," signifies lying. To give a friend half of your umbrella means that both of you will get wet. To carry it home in the morning means "It will clear off."—Donahue's Magazine.

A Foiled Diplomat.

"George, dear," she said, entering the parlor with her bonnet on, "I guess we'd better take a walk; papa is expecting company to-night."

"Very well," added her lover, apprehensively, recalling the expensive consequences of previous walks. Before they had gone half a block, however, an idea struck him and he said:

"I was reading such an interesting article in the paper this morning."

"Yes: what was it about?"

"About the danger of eating ice cream. You can't imagine how many people have died from it, Lizzie. In eight cases out of ten it's rank poison."

"Oh, my, how glad I am you told me, dear," exclaimed the innocent girl, with a Chicago twinkle in her eye: "you buy me a couple of quarts of it and I'll take it home to kill rats."—Brooklyn Eagle.

—A good amateur actor carried a sachel into a Baltimore groggery and displayed contents that seemed to be money to the amount of $25,000, at the same time pretending to be demented. A companion soon intimated to the rumseller that the treasure ought to be taken care of, and agreed to leave it in his possession if he would hand over $500 as security. "But this must be your own money," said the friend, "for nothing in the bag must be disturbed." The sum was eagerly advanced by the saloon man, who, of course, intended to keep the bag, in which he subsequently found nothing but worthless paper.

—South Carolina raises no tobacco. More than one hundred years ago eight thousand hogsheads grown in the State were annually exported from Charleston. Last season the North Carolina yellow-tobacco belt produced crops which, in various instances, netted planters three dollars and fifty cents per acre clear profit. This result, so close to their own homes, is stirring up the South Carolinians to revive tobacco culture wherever the soil is favorable. They see an excellent chance to acquire another cash crop.

—A little girl in town was trying to tell her mother how beautiful a certain lady could trill in singing, and said: "Oh, mamma, you ought to hear her gargle, she does it so sweetly."

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA IN NEW JERSEY.

Facilities for Its Spread Afforded by the Trenton Stock-Yards.

TRENTON, N. J., July 29.—The pleuro-pneumonia cases reported from a farm near Hightstown has created great excitement among the cattle-dealers in the State, and especially those in this vicinity. Trenton is the great cattle center for the State. Cattle-raisers in the northern part of New Jersey put their sheep and beef in cattle cars on Monday night or Tuesday morning of each week. The cattle do not reach here as a general thing, until late on Tuesday. The butchers will not take them to their slaughter-houses after four o'clock in the afternoon owing to the complaints made by people residing near the houses. As a consequence, the cattle are often left from twelve to twenty-four hours at the stockyards without food. The railroad companies have more than once sent food out to the yards to be given to the cattle. Inspector Maguire, in an interview to-night, said that the keeping of hungry cattle in close cars for a number of hours bred disease. Mr. Maguire has known cattle to be kept forty-eight hours before being slaughtered. He thinks the present condition of affairs is cause for alarm. Should the cases reported prove fatal the infection will rapidly spread through the State and into New York and Pennsylvania, and from thence go west. Trenton's stock yards would be just the place for pleuro-pneumonia to start and spread. Mr. Maguire is of the opinion that a veterinary surgeon should be appointed at once by the State Board of Health to station himself here and examine all cattle ariving each day. At present all cases of the kind are reported to Prof. Brackett, of Princeton College, and he takes the necessary steps. One case of pleuro-pneumonia, however, in one of the cattle-cars reaching here in the afternoon would spread before Prof. Brackett could be informed. Mr. Maguire hopes the report from Hightown, and a later report from Mount Holly, may prove false. He thinks that precautions should be taken at once, however.

A Shooting Affray Among the Creek Indians.

FORT SMITH, Ark., July 28.—A shooting affray occurred at a dance at Deep Fork, in the Creek Nation, last Wednesday morning at daylight, in which Sam Haines and another Indian were mortally wounded by John Tiger, also a Creek Indian. Haines and Bonie McIntosh were endeavoring to settle an old feud when Tiger came upon the scene drunk, and after a few words began firing into the crowd, shooting Haines in the head and shooting off his nose; another shot took effect in the head of Sam Succie, a bystander, who died the next day. After the shooting Tiger fled, leaving his horse and hat behind, and escaped unhurt, although about twenty-five shots were fired at him. At last accounts he was still at large.

The Iron and Steel Workers.

PITTSBURGH, July 29.—The annual convention of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers will meet in this city August 5, and will continue in session five days. During the convention action will be taken looking to the strengthening of the association in the East, so as to be able to demand an equalization of wages and privileges next year, also to bring about a conclusion of strikes at Beaver Falls, Pa., Aurora, Ind., and Birmingham, Ala. Men have been out at these points a long time, because the manufacturers refuse the association recognition. There will be no change in the officers. About a hundred and fifty delegates from all parts of the country will be in attendance.

Old Lewis Spencer.

LOCKPORT, N. Y., July 26.—Lewis Spencer, better known as "Chuck-a-Luck," a colored man who had for many years lived in Niagara County, died Thursday night at the county poor-house of senile debility. His age, according to the most authentic records, was 115 years. He was probably the oldest person in the United States. In early life he was a slave in the South, and several years ago, before his memory failed, he could relate many interesting stories of his slavery days, and declared that he could remember the last days of the Revolutionary war. He was at one time a familiar figure at the different hotels throughout Niagara County.

A Monopoly Beaten.

PITTSBURGH, July 29.—In the United States Court yesterday the application for an injunction by the Atlantic Giant Powder Company, of California, to restrain Marquis Hulings, Wilson Barr Howe et al., from infringing upon nitro-glycerine, was dismissed by Judge Acheson on the ground that the method under which the parties have been operating had been distinctly and unequivocally disclaimed by Albert Nobles to whom the original letters patent were is sued. The case has been on trial a long time and excited a good deal of interest as a decision in the plaintiff's favor would have given them a gigantic monopoly.

The Notification Committee at Albany.

ALBANY, N. Y., July 29. Several members of the Notification and National Committees arrived Monday morning and the remainder last night. The formal notification to Governor Cleveland will take place at the Executive Mansion at half-past three to-day. The proceedings will be brief. The chairman will make a short address, to which Cleveland will reply. On account of the limited accommodations at the Executive Mansion none will be present but members of the committee and a few personal friends of the Governor.

The Cowboy Murderer Caught.

MINNEAPOLIS, July 29.—Brookings Boston, the cowboy who killed young Griffin at Elkton, this county, was arrested at Pierre and lodged in jail here. He was visited yesterday by his friends from the camp and an effort to effect his release may be made. Plans are perfected to hold the prisoner from these and to hold him from violence from others at whatever cost.

Three Murderers Arrested.

LANCASTER, Pa., July 28.—Charles Bently, who was shot in the affray at Columbia last Friday, is dead. Henry Cepiinn, who fired the fatal shot, and George Try and Emanuel Burkheiser, as accessories, have been arrested.

Train Wreckers Caught.

Determined on Murder.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., July 29.—Andrew Gorman, of Falls Village, was shot and instantly killed at his house at that town Sunday morning by Edward Halstead, who forced his way into the house. Halstead gave himself up.

OHIO GREENBACKERS.

DAYTON, O., July 29.—The State Convention of the Greenbackers was held in the city hall last night to put a State ticket in nomination. John Seitz, of Seneca, was chosen chairman, and upon taking the stand made a lengthy speech, presenting the principles of the Greenback party, and condemning the platform of both Democratic and Republican parties. He claimed that the greenback was the money of freedom, and that gold and silver were relics of barbarism; urged all to support their own organization, and work for that Presidential candidate who was nearest in harmony with their principles. J. W. Northwood, of Columbiana, and George Hofer, of Miami, were chosen Secretaries, and the following committee on resolutions was elected: John Aman, of Hamilton, J. G. Galloway, of Montgomery, J. Brooks of Lake, M. Krumer, of Franklin and J. W. Northword, of Columbiana. While the committee was preparing a report the following State ticket was placed in nomination: Secretary of State, Peter Harris, of Carroll; Supreme Judge, James G. Grogin, of Hocking; Members of the Board of Public Works, William Bangden, of Hamilton; Electors-at-Large, John S. Seitz, of Seneca, David Wells, of Tuscarawas.

Upon the call of districts the following State central committeemen were chosen: Thomas B. Ogden, Hamilton; James Robinson, Clermont; Colonel Lee Watz, of Montgomery; H. A. Ashley, of Clark; Joseph Watson, of Knox; John Seitz, of Senega; D. S. Schwisher, of Licking; D. C. Shidister, of Columbiana; Phi Shear, of Stark. The committee was authorized to fill vacancies.

The following Presidential electors were reported: David Darham, of Clermont; William A. Hardinger, of Clarke; Thomas N. Hickman, of Morrow; J. W. Vail, of Wood; A. B. Laird, of Licking; Phil Shear, of Stark; vacancies to be filled by the district.

At 11:30 p. m. the following platform was adopted:

Resolved, That the State Convention of the Greenback Labor party of Ohio assembled at Dayton, Ohio, indorse the platform adopted by the National Convention assembled at Indianapolis May 24, 1884.

Resolved, That we demand equality of taxation on all lands whether improved or unimproved.

Resolved, That we favor legalization of trades unions and granting them charters.

Resolved, That we favor the instituting of industrial schools for all children until sixteen years of age, so as to accomplish the abolition of children's labor for private employers, realize compulsory education and inaugurate a sensible system of apprenticeship.

Resolved, That this convention condemns the monopolization of the coal and iron lands of the State; the creation of fictitious values largely in excess of the actual cost of transportation lines leading thereto by syndicates and exacting dividends and interest on the same, out of which has arisen the present labor strike in the Hocking Valley; and that the earnest sympathies of this convention are extended to the miners struggling for their rights. We condemn the importation of labor to take their place, and the invasion of the State by armed forces, contrary to the laws of the State, at the instance of such corporation.

Resolved, That the hard times and stringency of the present money market are due directly to the financial system inaugurated and upheld by the power of leaders in the Republican and Democratic parties whereby many are robbed for the benefit of the few.

Resolved, That this is the sentiment of this convention that it is the imperative duty of the National Committee of the Greenback Labor party co-operating with the candidate named at Indianapolis, that it should immediately institute a vigorous campaign, and that the committee should promptly take such action as present and future exigencies may require to maintain and strengthen the organization.

Outraged by Tramps.

DETROIT, July 29.—Emma Kimball, aged fourteen, daughter of a wealthy farmer near Lyons, Ionia County, while walking in a lane near her father's house, between six and seven Sunday night, was attacked by two tramps and outraged. The men fled to Lyons and called for a lunch, but the news of the outrage coming in they left. One hundred citizens searched all night unsuccessfully, but Deputy Sheriff Devrick telephoned from Portland yesterday morning that he was on the track of the villains. If caught and fully identified, lynching is threatened. The neighborhood is greatly excited.

A Lake Disaster.

CLEVELAND, July 29.—A dispatch was received last night by Captain H. J. Webb, of this city, dated at Sault St. Marie, saying that the propeller John M. Osborn had been run down and sunk by the steel steamship Alberta on Lake Superior, off White Fish Point, late Sunday night. The mate, a fireman, cook and five deck hands went down with the wreck in twenty-seven fathoms of water. The passengers and balance of the crew were taken off by her consorts, the schooners Thomas Gawn and Davis, which are now on their way to this city in tow of the propeller Hecla.

Drowned From the Steamer Pearl.

TOLEDO, O., July 29.—At Put-in Bay yesterday three colored men, while scrubbing paint off the steamer Pearl, standing on a suspended scaffolding, turned to watch the steamer Waite go out. All fell into the water and two were drowned before assistance arrived. The other hung on the rudder of the Pearl till a skiff arrived.

Dashing Through a Bridge.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., July 29.—A special to the Express says: The passenger train on the Bedford narrow gauge went through a bridge at Bloomfield, Ind., the entire train going into the river, killing instantly William Hubbetts, of Switz City, Ind., and seriously injuring a number of others.

Abolishing Contract Labor

CHICAGO, Ill., July 29.—The City Council last night passed an ordinance abolishing contract labor for prisoners at the city House of Correction. The inmates of this institution number from 1,000 to 1,500. It has heretofore been self-supporting. If the ordinance goes into effect it will throw the cost of maintenance on the city.

Mrs. Greely on Her Way East.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 29.—The wife of Lieutenant A. W. Greely passed through this city last evening en route from San Diego, Cal., to Portsmouth, N. H., where she expects to meet Lieutenant Greely August 2. The lady is accompanied by her brother, L. S. Nesmuth, and her two children.

New York—The home team defeated the Bostons yesterday by a score of 7 to 0.

Chicago—Detroits, 3; Chicagos, 5.

By reason of Boston's defeat Providence goes to first place.

A Dakota Town Destroyed.

FARGO, D. T., July 29.—News reached here yesterday of a big fire at Devil's Lake City, which destroyed forty buildings, including the bank, hotels, stores, saloons, etc. The fire swept everything before it, there being no department.

A Noted Man.

Among the men who have made their names household words within the last half century, stands Mr Speer of Passaic, N J. He is the pioneer Grape grower of this country, and he has demonstrated beyond a doubt that the foreign grapes can be raised here and that as fine wine can be produced in this country as in Europe, and for medicinal uses Mr. Speer's wine surpasses that of the old country. Ladies indicate health and aged people find it to be the best wine they can procure.—Winsted Argus. For sale by C. A. Wright & Co.

Hay Fever.

For twenty years I was a sufferer from Catarrh of the head and throat in a very aggravated form, and during the summer months with Hay Fever; I procured a bottle of Ely's Cream Balm, and after a few applications received decided benefit—was cured before the bottle was used.

It costs nearly double to manufacture DeLand's Chemical Baking Powder, which is made from Cream Tartar and Soda only, then it does those filled with starch, flour, and other dead weights. Some manufacturers, to avoid the expense of Cream of Tartar, use Ammonia, Alum, Tartaric Acid, &c. You can detect the impure ones by boiling in water a small quantity. The ammonia will produce an odor; alum also, and taste bitter, and the starch and filling will not disappear, while Cream Tartar and Soda will leave clear water.

ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP

FOUR POINTS

Prepared by an entirely NEW METHOD.
Composed of the PUREST MATERIALS.
WILL NOT INJURE THE FABRIC.
WILL CLEANSE WITHOUT RUBBING.

You can do a large washing without any rubbing; use the boiling process instead. You can save Time, Labor, Fuel, Soap and Clothing.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.

Cut up fine and dissolve one half bar in half gallon of hot water. Pour half this dissolved soap into a tub with just sufficient hot water to cover a boiler full of clothes. Then put the clothes in to soak, rubbing plenty of soap in the most soiled parts. Be sure that the soaking water is hot; soak the clothes half an hour; stir them occasionally so that they may get the full benefit of the hot suds; pour the remainder of the dissolved soap into the boiler, adding sufficient water to cover the clothes; wring them lightly out of the suds. Soap the stained spots and place loosely in the boiler; boil 10 to 20 minutes, rinse well, blue and hang to dry. Do not crowd the boiler too full. The same boiling water may be used for further boiling by adding a little soap to each boiler-full of clothes. Flannels and prints should not be boiled, only a little rubbing required after soaking. This soap will cleanse clothing as thoroughly as any other without the use of the boiler. We prefer and recommend the boiling process as it is itself a cleansing process, saving labor, the wear of the wash-board, and being the best disinfectent known, it is easier to boil the dirt out than to rub it out. You can cleanse perfectly the finest fabric without injury, the finest point lace and lace curtains. Soak point lace in hot suds made with this soap, press water out with the hand; boil 3 to 5 minutes in clean suds made with this soap, rinse thoroughly, press carefully between the folds of a towel, roll in a dry towel, and iron between pieces of old flannel. Soak curtains 10 to 30 minutes and boil 5 to 20 minutes, rinse, stretch on frame, or pin every scallop to carpet over a sheet to dry; no ironing required.

Be sure and ask for ELECTRIC-LIGHT SOAP, and take no other.

Sold by leading wholesale and retail grocers everywhere. Dealers may obtain our goods upon application. ELECTRIC SOAP MANUFACTURING CO., Indianapolis, Ind., and 26-28 South Water St., Chicago, Ill.

CATARRH IN THE HEAD

TRADE MARK.

Can positively be cured by using DR. P. HALL'S CATARRH REMEDY. A new compound, entirely different from all other preparations. It is in the form of a fine ointment which is easily applied in the nostrils and ears, and reaches the seat of the disease by absorption. Pleasant to the smell, and most efficient in operation. For Hay Fever, also impaired Hearing, Sight, Smell and Taste, produced by Catarrhal disease, it is a positive cure. The most noted Physicians and prominent Druggists all over the land have given it their endorsement. We have the unsolicited testimonials of hundreds of prominent and reliable men, who have been permanently cured. Do not be humbugged by nostrums, prepared by the inexperienced and unreliable, but insist upon having this Excellent Remedy, compounded by a Physician who has made this disease a study for 30 years. Two to four bottles generally sufficient to effect an entire cure. Satisfaction guaranteed or Money refunded. It is a positive cure for Ear-ache. For sale by Druggists. Also sent by mail, post-paid, upon receipt of 50c. single bottle, package of two bottles $1.00. Circulars and testimonials free.

PROHIBITION CONVENTION.

At this stage of the proceedings Mr. Babcock of California, who had nominated Mr. McDonald, came to the platform and said Mr. McDonald was the vanguard and Mr. Stewart was the rear guard, but he could not stand by the action of the convention in nominating Mr. Black and that of Mr. Stewart was nominated by the Maine delegation with the remark that Maine expected to be the vanguard and that the rear guard would be mustered in by the Maine delegation. Mr. Stewart was nominated by acclamation with the remark that the rear guard had just drop P. S. John, and he was nominated for president and vice president, and the nomination of Mr. Black and that of Mr. Stewart was withdrawn by the Maine delegation. Mr. Black was nominated for president and Mr. Stewart was nominated for vice president. Several three speeches for St. John were made, the speech of Mr. Fairbanks, also withdrew, and the nomination of Mr. Black and that of Mr. Stewart was withdrawn by the Maine delegation. Mr. Black was nominated for president and Mr. Stewart for vice president. Several speeches

We notice our correspondent to the Exponent says: "A reliable rumor is afloat that a former citizen of this place spent the 4th at Sand Lake in an intoxicated condition, in company with a strange woman, and when he returned to the bosom of his family, he was informed that they did not want him any more. We suppress names for the present."

Now, Bro. correspondent, if this be as you state "a reliable rumor" we don't think that the name should be suppressed, for it may leave a base charge upon an innocent party. If on the other hand it is not a "reliable rumor," it certainly should not be published as such. We believe the rumor to be unreliable and that our correspondent of the Exponent will be ashamed that he ever caused to be published an article upon such a groundless foundation of facts, and hope that he has since been truthfully informed and can make an explanation.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Tariff: what to affix on, and how to collect it, is what agitates, roils and bubbles over the rim of our mess kettle. One dollar is the average valuation of gentlemen's heads, which some deem too much and refuse to pay, consequently the Marshall has a miscellaneous collection of bric-a-brac for sale. One horse and carriage escaped through an opening in a friends port-monaie and found its way back to the owner; but the barbers vacant chair, &c., await the day of doom while he idles away summer days, or pouts about his poll tax at the end of a fish pole. One lady remains in abeyance because search failed to reveal anything that was necessary to conduct her business. The one dollar due for the home protection of herself and three girls is unsecured, though there is a lace apron or two among them, nice enough to be classed as superfluities. Some assert they are too old (some men, I mean), others just won't, and invoke the protection of patron Saints when their statuary is removed, and a few of the Mother Hubbard persuasion ask what do you want to do with the money? Now that is the most provoking of all questions, when a woman finds money I have known the sky to grow cloudy because a man was curious on the subject, but Hubbard curiosity wakes thunder every time, and the irate officer vows that neither age nor infirmity shall thin revenue.

Students have petitioned the school directors to re-enlist Prof. Price. He has been a pleasant teacher, and is a great favorite.

Petty thieving is trying patience hereabouts. Not even a fish is safe in the pan, and ribbons, shoes, dress-goods, money or medicines, are absorbed as with a sponge. Whatever the other incentives to theft may be, the love of dress, minus the love of work, can graft an elastic conscience into healthy constitutions of otherwise pleasant people, and the woman who dresses nicely, without knowing the price of what she wears' is usually without means adequate to maintain her style, and a person that makes merchants watch more than pray. PEARLIE.

ONSTED ODDS.

Two daughters of George Van Alstine, of Port Huron, are visiting at J. O. Maxwells.

Addie Daniels and Jessie Short returned from Jackson last Saturday, where they had been for a few days visiting friends.

Ralph Taylor, of Rome, has commenced to build a harness shop here. His son will manage the business.

The Cambridge F. B. Sabbath School and the Springville Grange held a picnic at Putnam's Landing, Sand Lake, Aug. 5th. The attendance was good and all present seemed to enjoy themselves.

TIPTON TATTLE.

Mr. E. Camburn while cutting oats with a reaper on the 4th inst., allowed his team to stand unguarded a moment, when they started out on a brisk trot regardless of consequences, breaking and scattering parts of the machine in what seemed to be an irregular method of distribution, and though the event was quite serious it was not so bad as it might have been.

The ladies of the Congregational church held an ice cream social at the residence of C. Roberts on the 5th inst., for the benefit of the parsonage not yet finished.

Being quarterly meeting at the M. E. Church last sabbath, Rev. William Pierce of Sharon preached in the absence of presiding elder Campbell.

The Congregational people had preaching in their church both morning and evening last Sunday, and expect soon to have a settled minister, having been without a regular pastor for several years.

Misses Libbie Rice, Josie and Isa Campbell of Sharon, made a welcome visit at the Methodist parsonage on 2nd inst.

Harvesting is about over and the stripped grain fields suggest the near approach of fall, though the late rains have greatly improved the appearance of vegetation not yet matured.

The Sunday School of the M. E. church is to have a picnic in the near future.

Wm. Smith and wife have concluded to offer their place for sale, an excellent little farm of 20 or 25 acres in splendid condition and well located near the railroad station.

The State Fireman's Tournament will be held at Marshall Aug. 15th and 16th. The prizes include $25 to best appearing company in street parade; hand engine contest—first class—first prize $150 and state championship banner valued at $100, second prize $75; hand engine contest—second class $75 and $60; hose race—open to the state only—first prize $125 and state championship belt valued at $100, second prize $75; hook and ladder companies open to the state only—first prize $125 and state championship trumpet valued at $75, second prize $75; steam engine prizes $100 and $50; band contest, $100 and $50; best band drill under command of drum major, $50; sweepstake hose race—open to the world one prize $300 special medal prizes for bicycle races, open to amateurs of Michigan.

HOW TO WRITE FOR A PAPER.

A good many people are in possession of valuable information that they are deterred from giving to the public through the press, because they do not know exactly how to put it in shape. They have never read a book on composition, and have an idea that no one should write unless he has a good knowledge of rhetoric. Whoever can write a good straight letter to a friend, and give him in that letter the information that he would give to the world through the medium of the press, can generally write an acceptable article for the paper. A good many little blunders in captalizing, misspelling and grammar will be corrected by the compositor; and the proof reader, if he has not positive instructions to the contrary, will finish up the article in such a way as to make it appear to the best advantage. In the matter of punctuation, it is hardly necessary for the writer, unless he is himself good authority on the subject, to give any attention except to make his meaning well understood.

There are a few things, however, that a writer should observe; and by paying attention thereto he will, if there is any point to his article, find himself an acceptable contributor to the paper.

Use paper not more than eight nor less than six inches in width, and leave a blank space at the top for paging or through which the copy hook may be thrust.

Do not write the lines too close to each other, you may wish to interline, in which case you are liable to make your copy indistinct.

Write only on one side of the paper. Of course in writing letters almost everybody uses both sides of the sheet, but in the printing office rules are so generally followed, that unless a compositor's attention was called to the fact, he would hardly find the manuscript on the back.

Write plainly. No flourishes in penmanship receive any credit from the type setter or proof-reader, but a plain, bold hand is the delight of every one who has anything to do with your copy.

Be particularly careful to spell proper names correctly. If you should make use of the names of any of your friends in your articles and they should find them in print spelled incorrectly, they would not be likely to thank you for your interest in their affairs. In this matter the innocent proof-reader has no guide but you: copy.

There are few letters, such as n and u, a and d, g and q, h and b, I and J, S and L, B and K, that look so much like each other in manuscript, that unless their connection with other letters clearly indicates them, they are liable to cause mistakes, and you should be careful about these.

Do not try to make your communications long. Say so much as possible in as few words as possible, without making your articles seem rough. A great many good articles are consigned to the waste basket, just because there is too much chaff for the few grains of good wheat contained in them.

And finally, if you write to your publisher, and he does not see fit to print your article, do not jump at the conclusion that he is prejudiced, or that he wants to work it over and get the credit of it himself, or that he is afraid it may hurt the feelings of some of his friends or patrons, for there may be many good reasons why it should not appear, at least just then.

CADETS FOR WEST POINT.

Last Wednesday was the day designated by Col. Eldridge for the examination of young men desirous of entering the U. S. Millitary Academy at West Point. The examination was held at Adrian, and the committee to conduct the same consisted of the following gentlemen: Prof. Ira Waterman of Hudson; Judge Stacy of Tecumseh; Dr. A. M. Stephenson, of Adrian. The following applicants appeared:

Name.	Residence.	Age.
E. J. Townsend	Litchfield	20
Arthur Howell	Adrian	19
Dennis Van Buren	Dexter	19
Chas. L. Spence	Adrian	18
Clifton T. Geddes	"	18
Joe F. Gaghan	"	18
R. M. Coate	Dundee	20
Jacob Perego	Camden	21
Frank I Muir	Erie	20
James Schermerhorn	Hudson	19
Sigman Goldman	Monroe	17
Chas J. Becker	Bridgewater	18
Albert G. Lombard	Addison	19
Don C. Behman	Riga	18
L. W. Allen	Adrian	21

The forenoon was devoted to physical examination, which was conducted by Dr. A. M. Stephenson. Al were rejected on account of physical disability except Messrs. Howell, Schermerhorn, Becker, Muir and Perego. Mr. Perego was, however, obliged to drop out on account of his age, leaving only four actual contestants in the field.

The literary examination of the four remaining candidates was vonducted in the afternoon by Messrs. Stephenson and Waterman. The committee report that Mr. Becker stood 85 and Messrs. Howell, Muir and Schermerhorn 95 each in their studies, a good showing all around. Their standing being equal, in consideration of the fact that Howell now has a brother in the Naval Academy at Annapolis, and Muir a brother at West Point, Mr. Eldredge designated Schermerhorn for the cadetship.

The committee made the examination quite rigid, as required by the War Department, and the result was very creditable to the mental application and personal aspirations of the young men competing.

Judge Stacy said that of all the classes of young men which he had examined, he had never yet seen a class which was so nearly equal and stood so high in every respect. While the decision is naturally a disappointment, still it is not a cause for mortification, as in every respect they were equal, and they must be satisfied that the decision was not influenced by personal motives.—Hudson Gazette.

UNCLAIMED MONEY.

The "Unclaimed Money, Land and Estates Manual" is the title of a work just published by J. B. Martindale of 142 LaSalle Street, Chicago. It is devoted to the interests of all who are in search of unclaimed property of any kind, or who have an interest in any old estate; and contains the names of over eight thousand persons, supposed to be in America, who if living, or if dead, whose heirs are entitled to estates in this or some other country.

From advance sheets of the work we gather some strange facts in relation to this romantic subject. For instance: By the report of the National Debt Commission for the fiscal year, 1881-82, it appears that the Bank of England advanced to the Government as dividends on unclaimed stock in the bank no less than three and a half millions sterling; and for ten years preceding the amount had been annually about the same. This, as a three per cent dividend, represents the enormous sum of over one hundred and [illegible] or about $586,000,000. The interest on this unclaimed stock is forfeited to the government annually, but the principal is always there awaiting the rightful claimant. The Bank keeps what they call Unclaimed Dividend Books. They are now seven in number and date back to the year 1780, and represent the money deposited in that bank, and for various reasons never called for since the beginning of the last century. They contain the names of over 120,000 depositors, with description as to profession and place of residence of each. These books can be personally inspected and any name searched for.

Advertisements for Heirs at Law, Next of Kin, Owners of Unclaimed Money, etc., which have appeared in the newspapers of the United States, Canada, Great Brittan, France and Germany since the year 1600 have been carfully preserved, classified and numbered, and the names of persons wanted, numbering over 100,000 are in possession of the publisher.

In the list of names published appears this legend. "Helen Sheridan, born about 1800, representatives of supposed to be in America." Sandwiched in with the other 8,000 or more names there is nothing about it that would particularly attract the attention of any one, and yet the author assures us that there is a million and a half pounds sterling awaiting her representatives, should they ever be found. She was probably of Irish parentage, and married a wealthy Scotch nobleman, who died about thirty years ago, leaving her his entire estate, amounting to the above sum. She died some four years ago, intestate and childless, leaving this immense estate to next of kin, should any ever turn up. Mysterious as it may seem after she was dead it was discovered that absolutely nothing was known of either her or her family history. She had, after her husband's death lived the life of a recluse, associating with no one, and scarcely ever seeing any one except her servants. Ireland has been ransacked for next of kin but without success, and it is now believed they are in America. The amount in our money is about $7,500,000.

Mr. Martindale is the author of several well-known law works and was late editor of the American Law Magazine. His name ought to be a sufficient guarantee of the reliability of the work. His plan is to appoint one agent in each township throughout the United States, to assist in collecting information, all of whom will be liberally rewarded for services. The price of the work is $2.00. For further particulars address the publisher.

We take pleasure in recommending to mothers an exceptional medicine for their children. No medicine should be given to a child without the mother's full knowledge of its character. CASTORIA is a standard prescription of a distinguished physician—old Dr. PITHER—still living at Hyannis, Mass. A list of its ingredients accompanies each bottle. It is purely vegetable and is not narcotic. It may given without change of diet or fear of harm, and in its effects is superior to Paregoric, Morphine Syrups or Castor Oil, without the dangerous properties of the former or the nauseating effects of the latter. Of this preparation physicians speak in high terms. H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 1126 Oxford, St., Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me." ALEX. ROBERSON, M. D., 1057 Second Ave., N. Y. says. Especially adapted to the diseases of children."—Hall's Journal of Health.

WHO SHE IS.

TO MANY ANXIOUS INQUIRERS.

Who she is I dare not tell;
But I know I love her well,
And I think I always will.
Tho' she frowns up cool or 'cold,
Tho' she smiles to see me sigh,
Tho' she frowns when I pass by—
For a flower more fresh and gay
Never bloomed beside my way.

Who she is you have no clue,
You would love her if you knew!
Not a faultless one I ween
In her figure, face or mind;
Cruel Cupid never saw
In perfection, stain or flaw.
Love can only see the grace
Of the human form or face.

Who she is you must not know.
Pure as new-y-fallen snow.
With a wealth of common sense,
With a rare intelligence;
Always modest in a crowd,
Ever thoughtful, never proud;
Not a creature made by art,
But a woman with a heart.

Who she is I will not say,
Tho' I see her every day.
She is not ashamed to soil,
Handsome hands with honest toil.
She has eyes of truthful blue;
Cheeks that glow with healthful hue,
Like the red carnation's flame—
Warm and cheerful as her name.

Who she is you can not guess,
And I never will confess.
She has hair of lovely brown,
Neat and tasteful making gown,
Simple hat of plaited straw.
Teeth without a stain or flaw,
Daisies nestling on her breast;
Go to sleep and dream the rest.

Who she is you will not hear,
Angels oftentimes are near.
When you think they are afar,
When you know not who they are,
When you, with no thought or care,
Entertain them unaware.
There is nothing more divine
Than this paragon of mine.

COWBOYS ON THE SLOPE.

A Glance at a Modern Terror, Showing That This Necessary Evil Is Not So Black as He is Painted—How Vast Herds of Cattle are Managed by these Nomads.

Beef has been a subject much discussed this spring on account of the high price of the article, and ever since the junction of the Southern Pacific (with the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railroad) the cowboy has been the favorite theme of the paragrapher and border correspondent. The cowboy is little understood except where he works and plays, and of late the term has been so misplaced that every frontier ruffian who carries a six-shooter and rides a horse is so dubbed, even if he never "rounded up" a steer in his life. Long years ago, before the No-fence law was projected and the country was cut up with railroads, California's beef center was the southern counties of the San Joaquin Valley. Every year the stock-raisers took stock of their possessions, and the real cow-boy was numerous and flourishing. He was by no means the bloodthirsty, murderous, man-slaying creature of late years and the newspapers, and was only a dare-devil in his horsemanship and handling of cattle. True, he generally carried a six-shooter, but it was for his amusement rather more than for his protection, and brawls where blood was shed were more few and further between than they now are within the pales of civilization and street-car lines.

The cowboy was often a Spaniard or a greaser, but equally as often he was a native Californian of American parentage, but burned and tanned to such an extent that the difference between him and his Spanish companions was so slight as to be indistinguishable. His armament comprised an immense saddle, often fantastically decorated with silver, a bridle with a cruel Mexican bit, a hackamore, and a "McCarty," a pair of immense spurs, and a pair of blankets. His clothing occasionally consisted in part of a pair of buckskin leggings, but canvas overalls, a gray-checkered woolen shirt, and a stout, ready-made coat were much more common. In the spring every stock-owner employed from a score to fifty of them, according to his possessions and put them in charge of a foreman or mayordomo, as white and Spanish alike termed their bosses. Indeed, all the cowboys spoke a mixture of Spanish, Indian and English that made the conversation very amusing to the tender foot who might chance to fall in their midst. A horse was always a caballa (Spanish for caballa): a horse-herder, a cavarango: a drive of stock, a rodeo, commonly called "rodeer," and so on through the slang of the trade. The cowboys themselves were always vaqueros, a term which their combination idiom manages to make "buccaroes" out of.

But to resume. When the stock-raisers had engaged their men a number of the most prominent would meet and call a general rodeo, name some naturally favored spot as a rendezvous and also the country to be covered. On the morning of the appointed day the different bands of men would strike camp at daybreak, and, spreading over an immense tract, start for the rendezvous, driving before them every hoof and horn of stock encountered. If the country was thickly populated with bovines a forenoon's drive would gather up from three thousand to ten thousand head, which would be bunched in the most convenient spot for "parting out." The locality selected, if possible, would possess some natural advantages, such as the fork of a river, a bluff, a strip of fence, or something of the sort that would do away with the labor of guarding the herd on one or two sides. A peninsula of some twenty acres on the eastern shore of Tulare Lake, known as "the Pocket," was for many years a favorite spot. The "round-up" completed, it depended on the hour as to further operations for the day. If the drive had been long and successful camp was struck, and two or three men from each camp guarded the band while the others rested themselves and their horses for the labors of the morrow.

Before the dew would leave the grass the smoke of the camp-fires would be seen climbing heavenward, as the cook prepared breakfast of beans, bread baked in a Dutch oven, jerked beef, stewed apples or peaches (without which no meal is complete to the plainsman), and black coffee. By the time it is dispatched the lowing herd is beginning to evince symptoms of restlessness, and the score of vaqueros who stood by the morning watch are having their hands full in keeping their charges in subjugation. Great clouds of dust obscure the morning sun, and from their midst arise the hoarse bellowing of the bulls, the lowing of the cows, and the bleating of the new calves, in a gigantic chorus that makes the scene doubly impressive. The major-domo delegates some of his men for guard duty, others to attend to branding and marking, others to receive the stock from his hands, and still others to assist him in separating out. The men who go with him must be quick-eyed and clever manipulators and thoroughly know every brand and earmark in which their master is interested. At a given signal the herd is assaulted, and, from being impressive, the scene becomes interesting. Ponchos are tightened carefully, for a tumble in the midst of the herd means death, and then the boss and his men force their way into the uneasy mass of hide and horns. The well-trained horses move at a slow walk, and the vaqueros' eyes closely scan every animal that comes within their range of vision. Their master's brand is detected on the hip, flank or shoulder, or an ear-mark or dew-lap is seen that seems familiar.

Two men range themselves on either side of the wearer, and the animal is gently worked out of the drove and into the open. The men who are keeping the mass intact open a small passage, and the animal breaks for the plains and freedom. If the owner is simply branding the additions to his stock, and the "parted out" animal is a bull, or steer, or calfless cow, he, she, or it, as the case may be, will be allowed to go as instinct dictates, and return to the favorite haunts from which it was gathered the previous day. If the owner is selling cattle to fill for the market the animal, if meeting the requirements of the purchaser as previously expressed to the mayordomo, is picked up by one of the waiting vaqueros and run off to a distance of from half to three-quarters of a mile, and there guarded, with subsequent additions, until the parting-out process is completed. If a cow with a calf, two men take them in tow and drive them to where the camp fire has been fanned into a fierce blaze. The cow is separated from her offspring, the little creature's endeavors to return to her being rudely checked by a cast of the riata, and in a moment the men at the fire have the young unfortunate secured by the weight of their bodies. In a moment the red-hot iron imprints the letter or device known as the owner's "brand" deep into the tender hide, the equally sharp knife has inflicted a "cross crop," "half-moon," "upper bit" in the young ears, or a peculiarly constructed "dewlap" in the thick skin of the throat, and the singed, mutilated little wretch joins its mother. Perhaps if the mother catches sight of the damage that has been done her darling she does not wait to be joined, but proceeds to do the act herself; then if she manifests a desire to create unpleasant trouble about the fire, the riata of the horseman must be brought into play. A cast over one of her hind legs, a turn around the horn of the saddle, and the cow does not live who is capable of inflicting any serious injury upon any one, especially when the rawhide rope is manipulated by an expert on a horse trained to his business.

The parting out is accomplished with marvelous quickness, considering the difficult nature of the work, and if branding is all that is desired the immense herd is soon distributed over the plains again. If the owners, or any of them, have sales made, their stock is kept in hand by their men and taken care of in the vicinity of good grass and water until the rodeos are completed. The next day another tract of land is covered, and so on until every owner has gone over the ground or ranges of his stock. These were the general rodeos, and were held annually. Other rodeos were being made constantly by owners who have sold out their brands or bought others, or who desire to make a drive to the market, but they were small affairs compared with the general round-ups. While these were going on there was little time for sport, but when the drove was completed and the line of march taken up for the market the cowboys began to enjoy themselves. The commonest and wildest sport was coyote-hunting, indulged in something after the manner of pool-fishing. Oftentimes the stakes were one dollar a corner, the understanding being that on sighting one of these scavengers of the plains every man who could leave the herd should take after him, and continue the chase until the disreputable beast should be brought down by riata or revolver, or irretrievably escaped. The coyote is not a pet with plainsmen, on account of an irrepressible tendency to steal and chew up everything about a camp, from a saddle to a choice haunch of beef. Consequently, when one of the lean, hungry beasts crops up, and begins to make himself like a long, skeletonic, brown streak on the grass, half the vaqueros are in immediate pursuit, their yells, the merry crack of their revolvers, and the swish of their lassoes form a scene for a border drama that could not be well be put upon the stage. The coyote is a powerfully swift brute, but stands little chance against the hardy mustangs used in stock-hunting, and some lucky spur-wearer is tolerably sure to bring him down in a two or three mile chase. If he does it with his riata, the unfortunate scavenger is dragged down, and, if time is not pressing, the branding-iron is heated, and, in a spirit of facetiousness, his ears are cropped off and the brand of the owner of the stock is applied to his hide. If a pistol-bullet does the work, his scalp is lifted, but in either event the captor collects one dollar from each of his confreres in the chase.

Other sports are delayed until Sunday morning, when the stock is allowed to rest. Then all sorts of feats of horsemanship are indulged in for small stakes. A favorite pastime is to saddle a half-broken mustang, and, after inserting a half dollar in each stirrup, some expert rider will mount and back himself to keep the coins there for five or ten minutes, the horse being incited meanwhile to do his worst by way of rearing, backing, and jumping. Feats with the riata, or lasso, are also amusing. The skill of these nomads with the rawhide rope is wonderful. At a distance of forty feet an expert is unerring in getting his rope over the neck of any animal, and many of them will reach sixty feet. At half that distance the rope will single out any leg of a steer running at full speed and throw him down in a trice. The rope once fast, the work of the horse comes into play. With the tightening of the rope the intelligent little beast plants his fore-legs and awaits the shock of the sudden strain on the horn of the saddle. The steer may plunge and run, but he will never get a position except in front of a horse, the wiry little beast whirling about on his four legs like a pivot, and retreating or advancing as is necessary to keep the rope taut. On the drive during the day one man attends to the horses, generally hamstringing about four to each man in the company. The horned stock are scattered along a couple of miles of country, with the men along either side. At night they are compactly bunched, and a force of five or six men, by continuously riding in a circle in one direction keep them from separating. When the nature of the country will admit, a camp-wagon containing blankets and provisions goes with the party, but when otherwise every man is his own commissary and bed-bearer. Now, the business in California is pretty nearly over, the railroad and farms having forced the stock-raisers to fence immense ranches or else retreat to the foothills, and the work of the California cowboy is nearly ended.—Alta California.

Progress Among Redskins.

In the annual report of Mr. W. H. H. Llewellyn, agent for the Mescalero Apache Indians, there is a reference to some curious customs. "It is a fixed law with them," he says, "that the mother-in-law and son-in-law never visit each other, and never see each other, except when it can not possibly be avoided. I am not prepared to say whether this is a step in the direction of civilization or not.

"They are firm believers in witchcraft. Shortly after my first coming among them these people burned an old woman who was accused of practising the black art; but I did not learn of it until last spring.

"In May last great preparations were made to burn another witch. I visited their camp with the agency physician and told them how they would be held responsible if their intentions were carried out. Up to the present time they have refrained from committing this terrible crime. Many people will doubtless be shocked, but when we reflect that these Indians are but a little more than a century behind our Puritan forefathers we should not regard the custom which these savages still retain as so strange after all."

James McLaughlin, the agent at Standing Rock, Dakota, in his report, knocks out a good deal of the popular romance about Sitting Bull. McLaughlin says he is "an Indian of very mediocre ability, rather dull, and much the inferior of Gaul and others of his lieutenants in intelligence. I can not understand how he held such sway over and controlled men so much his superior in every respect, unless it was by his obstinacy and stubborn tenacity. He is pompous, vain and boastful, and considers himself a very important person; but as he has been pampered and lionized so much by the whites since the battle of the Little Big Horn, I do not wonder that he has an inflated opinion of himself.

Describing Sitting Bull's attempt at farming, Agent McLaughlin says that he finally convinced the old man that his war record would give him no standing at the agency, but that the Great Father recognized as the Big Chief the most industrious Indian and the one that did the most good and set the best example among his people. Then Sitting Bull, who is ambitious, decided to go to work, and, taking a hoe, began to help some of the other Indians to plant corn. "I visited him in the field," reports Agent McLaughlin, "and he seemed pleased that I found him laboring; and in reply to my question whether he found farming so very difficult he answered 'No.' I think he has now determined to be a farmer."

Mr. McGillycuddy, the agent of the Sioux at Pine Ridge, Dakota, says: "What earthly inducement or reason can be advanced why an Indian should go to work and earn his own living by the sweat of his brow when an indulgent Government furnishes him with more than he wants to eat and clothes him?"

"Select 8,000 whites of the pauper class, or send 8,000 of the assisted emigrants to this reservation, feed them as you do these Idians, and they would hold a caucus and vote to assassinate the first one of their number who became self-supporting.

"What we require are less supplies and more skilled labor and employes. What can I do as an agent in teaching 8,000 Indians agriculture with only one farmer? It is simply a burlesque. Our Indians are scattered along five creeks over 100 miles. There should be at least five farmers. The same is true of all the other employes. One blacksmith is all we have, one wheelwright, and one carpenter, for 8,000 Indians, and yet we are told that the Indians must be instructed how to become self-supporting.

"When I assumed charge of this agency in 1879 the entire duty of the agent was to act as sort of National poormaster and deal out rations. Since then the Indians have begun farming, erected 625 houses, engaged five hundred in freighting, built 145 miles of telegraph line, raised 1,500 head of cattle, employed 40 mowing machines in putting up hay, kept a saw, shingle, planing and corn mill going, and advanced in every respect in civilization, thereby necessitating an increased force of skilled white employes and instructors, and yet we are limited to $10,000 to pay them all. Without change in legislation and system in appropriating the funds for these Indians, without a change, giving them less food and more instruction, they will not become self-supporting until the Angel Gabriel sounds his call, and those poor heathens awake in the dim uncertain hereafter, when, subsisting upon a light diet of air, there will be no necessity for the self-supporting scheme."—*Washington Cor. WARREN LELAND,

of America, says that while a passenger from New York on board a ship going around Cape Horn, in the early days of emigration to California, he, himself and one of the officers of the vessel broke out himself, cured the very worst case of scrofulous disease by the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Since then Mr. LELAND has recommended AYER'S SARSAPARILLA in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failure to effect a radical cure.

Some years ago one of Mr. LELAND'S farm laborers bruised his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, an ugly scrofulous swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible itching of the skin, with burning and darting pains through the lump, made life almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. LELAND'S direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to use.

Mr. LELAND has personally used

for Rheumatism, with entire success; and, after careful observation, declares that, in his belief, there is no medicine in the world equal to it for the cure of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of high living, Salt Rheum, Sores, Eruptions, and all the various forms of blood diseases.

We have Mr. LELAND'S permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the extraordinary curative powers of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him personally either at his mammoth Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, or at the popular Leland Hotel, Broadway, 27th and 28th Streets, New York.

Mr. LELAND'S extensive knowledge of the good done by this unequalled eradicator of blood poisons enables him to give inquirers much valuable information.

How Watch Cases are Made.

A plate of SOLID GOLD 14 2-10 karats fine is soldered on each side of a plate of hard nickel composition metal, and the three are then passed between polished steel rollers. From this plate the various parts of the cases—backs, centers, bezels, etc. are cut and shaped by dies and formers. The gold is thick enough to admit of all kinds of chasing, engraving, and engine-turning. The composition metal gives it needed strength, stiffness and solidity, while the written guarantee of the manufacturers warranting each case to wear twenty years proves that it contains all the gold that can possibly be needed. This guarantee is given from actual results, as many of these cases have been worn perfectly smooth by years of use without wearing through the gold.

DUBUQUE, IA., Dec. 14, 1880.

I have used one of your James Boss' Gold Watch Cases for seventeen years. I bought it second-hand and know of its having been used before I got it, but do not know how long. It looks good for ten years longer. Did not suspect it was a filled case until so informed by a jeweler a short time since. I most cheerfully recommend your cases to be all they are represented to be, and more.

AMONG RAILROAD MEN.

Master Mechanic's and Superintendent's Office, Lowell Repair Shops of Boston & Lowell R.R., LOWELL, Mass., March 25, 1881.

Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N.Y.

Dear Sir,—I think it is due to you that I should make the following statement, and I make it voluntarily and willingly: On the 4th day of June, 1881, I was taken with what was called paralysis of the bowels. The seizure was unexpected and terrible. The stomach and other organs seemed to sympathize with it and to have lost all power of action. For a long time my life was despaired of, but at length I recovered so far as to be able to ride out. By the advice of my physician I visited Poland Springs, Vt., hoping to benefit from the waters. But they did me no good. Neither were the best physicians of Lowell and Boston, whom I consulted, able to afford me more than transient relief. I gained no strength and my case appeared almost hopeless. In the fall a friend advised me to try KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, and although opposed to patent medicines I made the trial. To make a long story short—Favorite Remedy, in my opinion, saved my life. I consider it the best preparation in the world for stomach difficulties, as well as of the liver and other organs. I am glad to say it is in general use among the R. R. men in this vicinity.

Yours, etc., A. J. GIFFORD.

Mr. Gifford is the Master Mechanic of the Lowell division of the Boston & Lowell Railroad, and his illness and recovery are known to many who can testify to the facts in his letter.

Use this medicine for all diseases of the blood, kidney, liver, stomach, bowels and skin. It may save you or yours from pain and death.

WARNER, N. H., Jan. 21, 1879.

Messrs. C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.: Gentlemen—For ten years previous to the early part of 1877 I had been a constant sufferer from scrofulous ulcers or sores, which had finally reduced me to a helpless condition, as described in my letter to you in September of that year. The continued excellent health which enables me to keep house for my aged father and to enjoy life, keeps alive my intense personal interest in HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA, and I cannot refrain from expressing my gratitude for the permanent cure this wonderful medicine effected in my case nearly two years ago, while living in Lowell, when all my physicians gave me up as being in an incurable condition. One thing before I close. I have recommended your Sarsaparilla to hundreds, and I think more than a thousand cases, and my faith in its invincibility in curing scrofula has become absolute by the wonderful cures it has effected aside from my own. I trust you will not be slow in making the merits of HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA known everywhere, for it is a duty you owe to mankind. With best wishes I remain very truly yours,

ILLINOIS—IOWA—MISSOURI

Rice Culture in the South.

A pound of the best rice in the New York market costs eight cents. It has a pearly, transparent glint, a beautiful polish and lustre, yet very few who use this very attractive article of food are aware of the labor and expense required to place it before them in this perfect state. As an article of food it is second alone to wheat, and is the grand natural cereal upon which at least four hundred millions, or nearly one-third of mankind, mainly subsist.

Almost incalculable areas of it are raised in India and China, the various varieties seeming endless. On the island of Ceylon alone no less than dix varieties are known, but the finest is raised in our own States of North and South Carolina and Georgia, where those vast expanses of low-lying swamp land and heavy vegetable soils render its cultivation comparatively easy and profitable.

The great fields lying low along the river banks are divided into sections, and trunks and canals carry the water to each one separately by smaller ditches, by which they are flooded whenever desired. The rice is frequently sown on the water-covered soil, where it quickly germinates, covering the fields with a beautiful velvet green grassy carpet, which turns a lighter and yellower tinge as it ripens.

As most of the fields have been reclaimed from the rivers near which they lie, they are continually subject to sudden overflows, the utmost vigilance being required to guard against this enemy, which often in one night ruins the fruits of months of labor. Some of the larger plantations cover two and three hundred acres, and employ several hundred men, women and children.

From 1720 to 1730 the export of rice from the Carolinas was 146,980 tons. For 1760 alone 60,000 barrels were shipped. At the outbreak of the war one million acres were under cultivation in South Carolina alone. In 1860 the production was 187,167,032 pounds, but the war almost ruined this immense industry, and in 1870 the combined production of the two Carolinas, Louisiana, and Georgia was reduced to 57,000,000 pounds. A steady improvement, however, toward the old-time prosperity is now seen by comparing the productions of later years with that of 1866, when it had dwindled to the comparatively insignificant amount of 12,002,000 pounds.

Very few besides Chinese and negroes can be kept on the plantations as workers, and owing to the enervating nature of the climate in summer, with its accompanying marsh fevers, the question of labor supply is a very serious one to the planters; but while the old-fashioned methods of cutting, sowing, and transporting still prevail on most plantations numerous labor-saving machines and improvements have been introduced with marked success in the various milling processes.

Many large mills are to be seen on the low shores of the Mississippi, in the vicinity of New Orleans, but those at Charleston and Savannah are perhaps the largest and most complete in their appointments. Many are lofty buildings of brick or iron, their many stories crowded with the latest improved machinery for hulling, dusting, cleaning, burnishing, and packing the grain ready for shipment. Situated at the water's edge, their tall chimneys pouring forth a heavy columns of smoke, their derricks lifting the rough grain from the decks of the river craft, while the elevators, with long-armed spouts, dip deep into and fill the great holds of seagoing steamers with milled grain, the clouds of drifting half dust, the whir of machinery, and hurrying of boats and tugs all present a most charming picture, and unmistakably indicate the rapid revival of one of the most valuable of our Southern industries.—Harper's Weekly.

You Can't Afford It.

You can not afford to throw away or waste wood ashes; to expose manure to sunshine and rain; grow weeds; haul manure; raise inferior fruit; keep poor, unremunerative stock; neglect your tools and utensils; use poor seed; get in green hay; have dilapidated, broken-down fences; let boards and nails get out of place; allow the milk to be exposed to dirt and vile odors; use impure water; neglect your personal appearance, always look sour, make home miserable; live on pork twelve months in the year; go without plenty of fruits and vegetables for family use; let your neighbors prepare better produce for market than yourself; work sixteen hours a day and sleep eight; neglect mental culture; neglect raising roots for stock; be cruel to the live stock, slight animals in sickness; farm without a profit-and-loss account; think you are smarter than your neighbors; mortgage your farm; spend five cents a day for tobacco, and do without an agricultural paper; be ignorant of the topics of the day; let insects eat your fruits and vegetables without making a prompt, practical protest; half feed your stock; run your farm without using oil to make things run smoothly; allow decaying organic matter to remain in the cellar; neglect underdraining when necessary; mow twenty acres with a scythe when it can be moved in one-eighth the time with a machine; neglect thorough cultivation; keep the pigs shut up when they can just as well be pastured; have a filthy, objectionable door-yard; let this year's planting of strawberry plants blossom and mature fruit; keep cows, but not a milk record; go without a good fruit garden and orchard; neglect sheep culture; expose the live stock to the burning sun and midsummer's heat; do without a few grapevines; expect to gather figs of thistles; or to let others think for you.—Ohio Farmer.

A Woman's Faith.

They were lovers. All the romance and sentiment of the world was theirs. There is something unfathomable in this thing called love. It tyrannizes over body and soul as no other feeling can. It creates happiness from the greatest sorrow, light from the deepest darkness. It builds such castles as money can not buy, and it binds stronger than any chains forged by human hands.

Through her tears as they parted shone such a light of love that he almost dared call her his. She knew that she was loved in return, and that knowledge created a faith in her heart was to endure even to the gates of Heaven and beyond.

"In a year!" he whispered as he left her.

And she answered:

"I will wait a year—a lifetime!"

When a year had passed and no word came from him they tried to shake her faith by creating doubts. Men had inconstancy they sneered; men would wring a woman's heart and have it pity. Tears came to her brown eyes, but again she answered:

"He will come back to me!"

When the one year had become five the old sailors in the taverns and lofts shook their heads and said to each other that the ship had surely been lost, and that her young captain would never be heard of more. Wives felt a pity for the heart longing and waiting through such uncertainty, and they whispered that it would be no sin to love again.

"I shall see him again—he will surely return!" was the answer of faith, with her sorrowful face and aching heart.

The five years became ten. The brown hair was streaked with gray, and the girl's fair face had become the face of a woman who carries a sobbing, wailing misery in her heart. Men showed their cruelty by seeking to awaken a new love; women exhibited their bitterness of heart towards their own sex by ridiculing her faith. But the light of a never dying heroism burned in her eyes as she answered them:

"He gave me his promise—I am watching for his ship!"

And the ten years became twenty. Men and women had gone to their last rest until scarcely one was left who remembered when the lost ship sailed or who was her captain. But there were children who had heard the story, and as they smoothed down the gray hairs with their soft hands they whispered:

"It is so sad. And he was lost at sea."

"Lost!" she answered. "Aye! even though the whole world told me so I should wait and watch for him!"

And the twenty years became thirty. One night when the storm-vexed sea lashed the shore in fury and men uttered brief prayers to God as they turned their faces upon the ships making a brave fight for life, Faith lay dying.

The end had come. A human heart, troubled and bruised and scarred by waiting in vain by hoping, to be ever disappointed, was about to be stilled. For a moment the storm pulled, just as a man draws a long breath before dashing into some great peril. As it screamed and roared again in its vengeance Faith lifted her thin hand and whispered:

"He is coming back to me! I shall see him again and hear his voice once more!"

The nurse moved nearer and whispered kind words, but Faith waved her aside and cried out:

"Do not come between us! I hear his footsteps—he is here! I loved him, and my reward has come at last! Let me clasp his hand—let me look at his eyes."

And again the storm lulled, until the gale died to sobs and whispers, and the roar of the surf sounded miles away. Before the fury gathered itself for a fresh attack two spirits passed out of the old house hand in hand and were afar on the path to Heaven. She had listened, and his footfalls had at last echoed in her ears. She had watched, and her glazed eyes had at last been gladdened. She had waited, and he had come to be with her through the perils of the dark valley.—Detroit Free Press.

He Thought It Best to Have a Sure Thing.

"Ezra," said a colored woman to her better half one day last week, "you got two dollahs las' week foh cleanin' up 'bout Master Winfield's house, an' yahd. Where is dat two dollahs?"

"Heah, Phoby."

"You jis' go an' put dat ar' two dollahs in one ob dem banks up on Pine street."

"An'—an'—de bottle's empty, Phoby." And he held an empty black bottle, from the neck of which there was a suspicious emanation of gin. Phoby squinted her eyes at the bottle longingly, but pretended not to see.

"Ezra, we's got to be sabin' ob de money now. Hard times is comin', shuah."

"You's right, Phoby. But dem banks is all got to bust, an' den no money, no gin, no nothin'." And he held the bottle up again.

"Well," she sighed sadly, "pears you's allers right 'bout de financial fairs, Ezra. But jis' go an' put dat ar' money in de bank, and don't spend a cent for rum."

He went out sorrowfully, and she raised the window and called after him:

"Ezra!"

"Hey?"

"Is dem banks bo'n' to bust?"

"Dem banks'll bust sho'ah, woman."

"Dat's too bad; but I don't wan' you to get any rum, mind. Has you got de bottle?"

"Yes, Phoby."

"Well, it's a heap waste o' bottle to bring it back empty, and I guess de banks will bust, Ezra. Hey?"

"Yas, Phoby."

"Whar' you goin' to git dat gin?"

"Some place, Phoby."

"Well, git it den, ef you's bound to contradict me eb'ry time. Nevvah saw suh a obst'nate niggah. Git a quaht, Ezra, heah goes."—Williamsport Breakfast Table.

It makes every humanitarian sad to see invalids seek such relief as is given them by the use of bitters, kidney medicines and other nostrums. The first few doses may make them feel better on account of its stupefying ingredients, combined with some strong cathartic and diuretic that are used in its composition, but they eventually grow worse. The only cure for weakness, nervousness, debility, aches, pains, rheumatism, sores, urinary and digestive troubles, is to make the blood rich, red and pure, by using Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla, a remedy widely endorsed by physicians who have examined into its composition and effect.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine.

The August number, abounding with edifying and pleasant reading, is already upon our table, and is always welcome. "New Zealand and the Canterbury Settlement" is the opening article, by Rev. F. Pember, B. A., with numerous illustrations. The late Lady Blanche Murphy, Rev. E. A. Rand, F. E. Weatherley, James Croll, James Buckham, Alfreton Hervey, Mrs. Alexander, J. Alex. Patten, and other favorite writers, have contributed to this number. The editor, T. DeWitt Talmage, D. D., gives some excellent "Advice to Young People," and the Home Pulpit has a sermon of of his, "Is Life Worth Living?" There are also [illegible] sketches, essays, poems, etc., a miscellany, interesting and instructive, and the usual record of important events, editorial comments, obituaries, etc., etc. Price 25 cents a number, $2.50 a year, postpaid. MRS. FRANK LESLIE, Publisher, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

Nervous, dyspeptic individuals whose distress of mind and body make life miserable, if your sufferings have been prolonged and increased by the use of bitters and pretended cures of kidney and liver diseases, throw all such nostrums aside and find health, strength and vigor in that simple remedy known as Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. It purifies the blood, strengthens the urinary and digestive organs, and infuses new life into all parts of the body. No other remedy equals it. Have your druggist get it for you.

KITTY KENT'S TROUBLES. By Julia A. Eastman. Illustrated. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co. Price 25 cents. The Publishers have shown rare judgment in putting this excellent story into their new and popular Young Folks' Library. Miss Eastman, it will be remembered, took the prize of one thousand dollars offered several years ago by this house, for the best Sunday school story, and the present book is in every particular its equal. The heroine is the daughter of a clergyman, "a girl who was neither all good nor all bad, but partly one and partly the other," and the narrative of her trials and experiences is intended as a guide and a help to other girls who have those of the same kind to contend with, and to impress upon them the lesson that "the only road to happiness lies through the land of goodness."

If your lungs are weak, if a cold causes you quick distress, you will breathe easier, you will cough less, you will strengthen the pulmonary organs, you will feel better every way if you will occasionally use Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. Ask your druggist for it.

ESTATE OF MARIA BREWER.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee—ss.

At a session of the Probate Court for the county of Lenawee, holden at the Probate office in the city of Adrian, on Thursday the 10th day of July in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four.

Present, Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Alonzo J. Brewer and Charles J. Brewer, sons of said deceased, praying that administration of said estate may be granted to said Charles J. Brewer, or some other suitable person.

Thereupon it is ordered, That Monday, the 11th day of August next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said court then to be holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said county of Lenawee, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT TECUMSEH, MICHIGAN, AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TECUMSEH, MICH., AUG. 7, 1884.

The people are now anxiously awaiting the epistle of St. John to the Prohibitionists.

Mr. Loudermilk is to be secretary of the Republican assessment committee. A very appropriate and suggestive name.

Cleveland and Hendricks are engaged on their letters of acceptance. They should remember that brevity is the soul of a political letter.

It begins to look as though Gen. Butler had quietly gobbled the "political situation" locked it up in his private office and put the key in his pocket.

Says the Evening News: The Ann Arbor Courier finds a general desire existing in Washtenaw county, to send Capt. Ed. P. Allen, of Ypsilanti, to congress. It does not say whether the consent of Monroe and Lenawee has been asked or not—especially Lenawee.

Gov. Cleveland's vetoes are terrible things. When Mayor of Buffalo he vetoed an appropriation of $300 for the observance of Decoration Day, on the ground that the city charter did not authorize the payment of public funds for such purposes. He then suggested that the sum be raised by voluntary subscriptions, which was done, and his own name headed the list with the largest subscription.

The Republican organs' view with holy horror the prospect of a Democratic and Greenback fusion in Iowa and Michigan this fall on state and electoral tickets. But in West Virginia a similar fusion between the Republicans and Greenbackers is hailed as a "magnetic" stroke of policy on the part of Mr. Blaine. And on the strength of this coalition alone the Blaine managers base their claim of carrying that state.

The Republican congressional nomination in this district seems to lie between Capt. Miller, Gen. Spaulding and Capt. Allen. Miller will have Lenawee county solid; Capt Allen will pocket Washtenaw and Spaulding will swing Monroe. Hillsdale will be left to fight for. Personally considered these men are all unobjectionable, but if fitness and political strength are to control the action of the convention, Capt. Miller will be the man.

The Saginaw Courier has these sensible remarks which we respectfully commend to the Detroit Evening Journal. The editor of the Journal should cut them out and paste them in his scrap book:

"The Buffalo Express, a staunch supporter of Blaine and Logan, in an article upon the personal charges against Grover Cleveland, says: "We can no more say, of our own knowledge, that they are false than we can say that they are true. What we can say, based upon our information and judgement, is this: We do not believe that the charges are, in any just sense of the word, true." The express has but rarely, if ever, meddled with the private affairs of public servants, though it has never been merciful with those who have betrayed the public confidence. For the rest, we have never advised any citizen, young or old, to vote for the present or any former Democratic candidate for President. We did advise everybody who could to vote for Mr. Cleveland for Mayor of Buffalo and for Governor of New York. We have never regretted doing so, and do not now regret his election to those places. But if we had then or ever believed his private character to be such as the Telegraph has now printed it, we would never have advised anybody to vote for him for any office." If all party organs, Republican and Democratic, would pursue the same manly course that characterizes the Express, the political atmosphere would be divested of much of its disgusting features, and political campaigns would be the better for it. The editor of the Express is a Republican gentleman who has been intimately acquainted with Mr. Cleveland for many years; he has had abundant opportunity to investigate the life and character of a citizen Buffalo has delighted to honor; he has supported him for the office of Mayor of that city, and subsequently for Governor of the great State of New York; he says he has never regretted having done so. Such being the facts let the scandal-mongers hold their peace, and hold it not only in the case of Mr. Cleveland, but of Mr. Blaine. The public life and record of either of these gentlemen will furnish all the topics for criticism and discussion that honorable people everywhere care to read or engage in.

TEXAS COTTON.

The Crop Throughout the State Seriously in Need of Rain.

GALVESTON, Tex., August 5.—The News to-day will say: "The reports from the growing crops of Texas are by no means favorable. While in some portions in North and East Texas during the past week rain has fallen in a refreshing quantity, still the greater portion of the cotton growing districts is suffering from continued drouth. In Central Texas this is especially the case, and unless rain falls in this district within the coming week the cotton crop will be cut badly. Still, in the large and productive section of the State cotton will stand the drouth well ten days longer. On the Waco division of the Central Railroad, through Falls and McLean counties cotton is still strong and vigorous. Beyond Waco, on the same line of railroad, there has been rain sufficient to make a crop. On the Missouri Pacific from Waco to Austin and again on the line of the Central Railroad from Austin to the Brazo bottoms the cotton is still in a promising condition in all that section of the State, embracing six or eight heavy counties, being able to withstand the drouth for some time to come. The situation is critical at many points, however, but with general rains in the next eight days a full average cotton crop may yet be made. On the line of the Transcontinental Railway, also the two branches of the Missouri Pacific, the prospects are fairly good, while in Southern Texas the cotton is spotted, being fair in some sections and bad in others. Central and portions of Eastern Texas are suffering worse at this time, and unless relief comes soon, this region will be seriously injured as far as the cotton crop is concerned. This is the actual condition at the present writing."

Bishop Grace Resigns and Is Succeeded by Bishop Ireland.

ST. PAUL, Minn., August 5.—Catholic circles are very much interested over the fact that Bishop Grace has issued an address to the clergy and laity of the Diocese of St. Paul that he has resigned the episcopal office to his coadjutor, Bishop Ireland, with the permission and approval of the Pope. The causes for his resignation are given as being failing health and the weight of years, and inability to longer fulfill the heavy and onerous obligations of the office. The letter to the clergy and laity is concise, but full of affection for the people and the clergy over whom the Bishop has presided for a quarter of a century, and during which time the church has had a wonderful growth, increasing from less than 50,000 to over 100,000 population within the diocese. Bishop Ireland was consecrated coadjutor December 21, 1875, and has labored faithfully and zealously ever since, and is now elevated to the full powers of Bishop by right of succession as well as by the right of inheritance through service and ability. Bishop Grace was consecrated July 24, 1859.

Pauper Emigrants.

NEW YORK, August 5.—The Anchor steamship Trinacria, which arrived Saturday evening from the Mediterranean, was boarded in the bay Saturday morning by Emigration-Commissioner Stephenson and two of the Castle Garden clerks. There were but seventy-six Italian immigrants on board. These were cross-examined by the Commissioner and his assistants, and it was found that there were thirty-four of them that might become paupers. Some of these claimed to have friends in this country, but had no money, and did not appear able to care for themselves. They were told that they would not be allowed to leave the ship, but their relatives were telegraphed to. If the latter are able to care for them they will be allowed to land. It is not probable that more than eight of the detained immigrants will be sent back to Italy on the Trinacria. The custom-house officers on the Trinacria have been instructed to watch the detained immigrants and to prevent any of them from going ashore.

Raids by Cowboys and Indians.

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 5.—It has been represented to the authorities here that an organized gang of American Indians and cowboys have crossed from Montana into the Canadian Northwest for the purpose of raiding upon the property of settlers between the Cypress Hills and Turtle Mountains. They have on several occasions come in contact with the mounted police whom they put at defiance, carrying off their plunder, generally consisting of cattle and horses, to their rendezvous in Montana. Extra efforts will now be made to put down this system of freebooting, and it is not improbable that the matter will be made the subject of official correspondence with the authorities at Washington with a view to obtaining their co-operation with the Dominion Government in bringing the outlaws to justice.

A Death-Bed Confession.

RALEIGH, N. C., Aug. 5.—Mrs. Francis Stegall, aged seventy years, died in Goose Creek Township, near Monroe, N. C., a few days ago. On her death-bed she confessed having murdered her husband by pouring molten lead in his ear. Thirty years ago her husband while on a drunken spree died very suddenly, but no foul play was ever suspected. None of the old residents had heard of any suspicious circumstances in connection with the affair. Mrs. Stegall never remarried, but lived rather a solitary life. She made the confession to a clergyman.

A Card from Miss Hill's Attorney.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., August 4.—The Chronicle publishes this morning a four column communication from W. M. Neilson, the original attorney of Miss Hill, in her suit for divorce against ex-Senator Sharon. After stating the reason for his withdrawal from the case he reaffirms that the word "wife" in the "My dear wife" letters, is a forgery.

Chinese Immigration.

OTTAWA, Ont., August 5.—The British Columbia Government are dissatisfied at not being represented on the commission appointed by the Dominion Government to inquire into the question of Chinese immigration into the province, which is at present sitting at Victoria. A representative of the Chinese Government has arrived to attend the sitting.

Small-Pox in Tennessee.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. Aug. 5.—Small-pox has appeared at Martin, creating considerable excitement. There are three cases in one family, the head of whom contracted the disease in Cairo.

Death of an Old Pittsburgher.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., August 3.—Robert T. Lynch, editor of the Los Angeles Herald, died suddenly of apoplexy last night at Santa Monica. He was a native of Pittsburgh, Pa., and was fifty years of age.

Killing Horse-Thieves.

SALT LAKE, Utah, August 5.—The vigilantes, numbering fifteen or twenty fearless men, hailed the steamer Benton at Fort Hawley last Tuesday to secure some provisions. They did not have much to say other than that they were rounding up the horse-thieves, and had still some work before them. On Sunday they had a fight with the thieves at Bateman's wood-yard that lasted two hours. It seems that a number of the thieves, probably twenty had gathered there to make a stand against the vigilantes. They occupied a cabin and a tent some distance from the house. As a matter of safety, they put out two sentries to look out for the cowboys, but the latter came up and took a position near the house without being seen, and at daylight opened fire on the thieves, protected by trees and stumps. The men in the tent were all killed, and some of those in the cabin, the others escaping. The house and stable were burned. The names of the victims are not known, and, in fact, the details are of a meagre and indefinite order. The James place was totally destroyed by fire, including the wood, and it is believed the father and his two sons were killed. Two or three other wood yards were burned out. The "Avengers" had the names and history of every one of the gang along the river, and they expressed a purpose of not letting up as long as there was one of them left. They expected to apply to the boat on its return trip for additional supplies to "carry on the war."

Got Away With $50,000.

PORTLAND, Oregon, August 5.—Frank Crisble, employed some time as exchange teller at the Portland First National bank, was discovered to be a defaulter, and has fled the country. Recently he asked for a brief vacation, which was granted. Taking his family he left in a very sudden manner for San Francisco. Suspicions were aroused and an examination of his accounts made. Only a partial investigation of the books reveals a defalcation of over $50,000. How much more Frisbie appropriated the officers of the bank are unable to determine at present. It is thought that Frisbie embarked on an Australian steamer at San Francisco and made good his escape. He recently came from Chicago bearing excellent credentials.

Lynched With Neatness and Dispatch.

RATION, N. M., August 5.—Yesterday a Mexican named Juan Costillo outraged a five-year-old daughter of Juan Iafoy. An hour afterwards a number of citizens took him into a stable and gave him a terrible horsewhipping. About two o'clock in the afternoon about thirty Mexicans managed to obtain possession of him and he is now hanging to a limb of a big cottonwood at the door of the little girl's home. The girl will hardly live. The lynching was quietly done at an hour when the deputy sheriff was at dinner. There was no crowd to speak of, and not a particle of excitement.

Drowned on the Way to Texas.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., August 5.—During last week's freshet reports were received that a family of immigrants had been drowned in War Eagle Creek while attempting to ford near Evansville. Saturday, the dead team and wagon and the body of one child in a drift, were discovered in the stream below the ford. The outfit has been recognized as belonging to a party consisting of man, wife and four children, who were bound for Texas from Missouri. A search is being made for the remains of the others.

An Old Citizen Gone.

PITTSBURGH, August 5.—Lewis Peterson, Sr., one of Pittsburgh's earliest and most prominent business men, died yesterday morning in his ninety-third year. Mr. Peterson was one of the proprietors of the Pennsylvania Daily Advocate, the first daily ever published here, formed the first Board of Trade, manufactured the first cotton and was largely interested in the iron industry of this city. He joined the Masonic order in Philadelphia in 1812 and came to Pittsburgh the year following.

Alabama Election.

MOBILE, Ala., August 5.—The State and county elections in Alabama yesterday passed off quietly as far as yet reported. There being but one State ticket, that headed by Governor E. A. O'Neal, the result can be anticipated. In several counties there were independent candidates for county offices, who have been defeated except here in Mobile, where the Independents obtained, by the help of the colored voters, a large majority over the regular Democracy.

The Fever Stamped Out.

OMAHA, Neb., August 5.—P. P. Shelby, General Freight Agent of the Union Pacific Railway, telegraphs that the infection among the Nebraska cattle was genuine Texas fever, but he believes that it has been completely stamped out. No new cases have been reported during the last two days, and extra precautions have been taken to prevent cattle from coming in contact with the infected spots and trails.

Base Ball.

CHICAGO, August 5.—The Clevelands were defeated yesterday by the Chicagos by a score of 9 to 2.

Detroit—Buffalos, 18; Detroits, 0.

Narrow Escape at a Fire.

NEW YORK, August 5.—Twenty-three occupants of a tenement on Charlton Street were endangered by fire yesterday morning and narrowly escaped in their night clothes by ladders from the street and by fleeing to the roof. Nearly all were slightly burned but no lives were lost.

A Base Ball Club Disbands.

FORT WAYNE, Ind., August 5.—The Fort Wayne base ball club, of the Northwestern League, disbanded and withdrew from the League yesterday. Financial embarrassment is the cause. The players received their salaries in full.

Rumored Lynching of Ten Negroes.

NEW YORK, August 5.—A special dispatch reports the lynching of ten negroes in Northampton County, Va., by a gang of Italians. The story is improbable and is unconfirmed. The place is remote from the telegraph.

Ross and Teemer Matched Again.

BOSTON, Mass., August 5.—A five-mile sculling match for $1,000 a side, between Teemer and Ross, was arranged to-day by representatives of these oarsmen, the time and place of the race being as yet in abeyance.

STEPHEN B. ELKINS, member of the Republican National Committee, has resigned the presidency of the First National Bank of Santa Fe, N. M., which position he has held thirteen years, in order to give more time to the duties of the campaign.

JOHN B. BANGS, of the well known publishing house of John P. Morton & Co., and one of the most prominent business men of Louisville, Ky., died on the 2d, aged forty-seven.

ROBERT T. LYNCH, editor of the Los Angeles, Cal., Herald, died suddenly of heart disease at Santa Monica, that State, on the 3d. He was a native of Pittsburgh, Pa., and about fifty years of age.

FOREIGN.

IT was reported at Shanghai on the 31st ult. that France and China have made a treaty of peace; China is to pay France an indemnity of 5,200,000 taels, also $7,280,000.

THE rebels attacked Suakim in force on the night of the 30th ult. They lost four killed and several wounded. The thermometer registered 120 degrees in the shade, and many sunstrokes have occurred among the troops.

CAPTAIN NEWTON, a passenger in the steamer Laxham, which sunk after the collision with the steamer Gijon, escaped with fifteen Spaniards and landed at Muros, Spain. He reported that immediately after the collision the captain of the Gijon shot himself. The Spaniards, he said, behaved badly. There is no news from the captain of the Laxham.

A SON of the British Vice Consul at Rodosto, Turkey, has been captured by brigands, who demand £7,000 ransom.

A PERSON who hides his name presented the Wesleyan conference at London with a theological library of thirty thousand volumes. The membership of the Wesleyan body was increased during the year by thirty thousand.

MINISTER MORTON has subscribed 1,000 francs toward the fund which the American artists of Paris are raising to present the city with a bronze model of Bartholdi's statue.

AT Airdrie, near Glasgow, Scotland, on the 1st, the magazine of Dickson's collieries was forcibly broken into with pickaxes and sixty-five pounds of dynamite carried off.

IT is reported that the Grand Duke Louis, of Hesse, will abdicate in favor of his son Ernest, under the advice of the Emperor of Germany. His morganatic marriage with Mme. Kolarmine and subsequent divorce have compromised his position.

THE trial of the dynamiters at Warwick, England, was concluded on the 1st. McDonnell, who pleaded guilty to treason and felony, was released on bail, to appear at any time if called upon.

Bert Watling, of Dundee, has a steam yacht on the river Raisin.

Rev. G. W. Hudson of this village preached in Morenci last Sunday.

Rev. W. Q. Burnett will occupy the Baptist pulpit in this village next Sunday morning.

Rev. C. E. Conley and family left town yesterday for a few day's vacation at Devil's lake.

It is expected that the Detroit league team will play at Tecumseh some time in September.

Wm. Snedecor has moved his bakery to the vacant store one door east of Sholes' harness shop.

Harry Lee has purchased 60,000 brick of Wm. Slayton, of Dundee, for use in his new hotel building.

Tho farmers' big picnic will take place at Devil's Lake on the 14th inst. next week Thursday. Remember the date.

The frame of Lee's new hotel is up and presents an imposing appearance. The work of laying the brick is now begun.

Operations have begun on the foundation for the new skating rink. It will be situated east of Hayden's warehouse.

L. F. Wheeler has photographed the elegant floral pieces which were used at the Masonic banquet last Friday evening.

The young boys of the village have organized a lacrosse club, and have procured the necessary instruments to bat the ball with.

Rev. John L. Trauger, wife and three children, of Columbus, O., are visiting at the residence of Henry Smith, in this village.

Hon. G. P. Waring and Dr. Loree, of Ridgeway, are gaining quite a reputation as good stump speakers. They talk for St. John.

Walter and Annie Powers of this village and Willie Graves of Milwaukee have been visiting the family of A. T. Graves in Cambridge.

The Tecumseh B. B. club will play a game of ball in Jackson to-day and from there they go to Plymouth and Brighton on Friday and Saturday.

Tecumseh's Chinese laundryman is called by Hudson Post 'Tee Dan.' Now, Bro. Scarritt, that's too thin; our washee man is named Yee Din.

J. C. Winnie, of Adrian, was in town yesterday on business. We understand that Mr. Winnie is a candidate for Prosecuting Attorney this fall.

Mrs. Ed. C. G. Leauer, who has been spending a few weeks in Tecumseh as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Smith, returned to her home in Monroe yesterday.

"Uncle Bill" Nixon was 77 years old last Friday, and the event was celebrated in the usual way by Uncle Bill and the boys with the fife and drum in the evening.

Co. C left yesterday morning for camp. The boys never looked or felt better and they anticipate having a pleasant and profitable week. They turned out forty-six, officers and men.

The excursion to Detroit last Tuesday was well patronized. Five coaches were filled and the train was run promptly on time. Many Tecumseh people took advantage of the occasion.

Archie Sherrard, who has been in business at Cleveland for the past few months, has been spending a few days with friends in this village, and yesterday took his departure for Milwaukee, where he enters the employ of a large jewelry firm.

On Thursday of next week Aug. 14, the Knights of Pythias of Battle Creek will run a special excursion to Detroit via the M. & O. and Wabash Railways. Fare for the round trip, only $1.35.

One of the happiest events connected with the Masonic banquet last Friday evening, was a present from Mrs. Spaulding, the florist, which consisted of a floral square and compass mounted on a base and composed of flowers of the choicest varieties. The letter G was composed of white and scarlet immortelles, and displayed artistic talent which reflected much credit upon the donor, while the entire piece was very beautiful and was valued at fifteen dollars. A maltese cross from Mrs. Smith's green house at Adrian, was also among the floral offerings, but in point of richness and arrangement was far inferior to Mrs. Spaulding's lovely offering.

ON THE DIAMOND.

The Tecumseh Club Defeated for the First Time this Season by the Buffalo League Nine.

It was a good game of ball that was played last Thursday between the Buffalo and Tecumseh teams, even if it was amateur vs. professional. Everybody expected that the home club would be defeated and of course were not disappointed when the end was reached and the score stood five to one in Buffalo's favor.

About a thousand people were in attendance, a good many coming from Clinton, Adrian, Manchester and other surrounding towns to see the sport. The home team were in good shape, and, considering the odds they had to contend against, played an excellent game. Of course the Buffalos played a good game; its their business to play ball, and they seemed well acquainted with their business too.

The game was called promptly at three o'clock with the Bisons at the bat. O'Rouke knocked a fly into one of the fielder's hands and retired. Rowe had better luck and made a safe two-bagger, stole to the third, and before the close of the innings made a score. Richardson got out on a fly and White struck out.

The Tecumseh side then came in to try their skill at batting a league pitcher's balls. F. Bostwick and Anderson were both put out at first, Kelly got to the second on a passed ball by the catcher, and got home on another one by the same, which tied the Buffalos. Faatz struck out. The second and third innings were goose eggs for both sides, and in fact all the rest of them during the game for Tecumseh.

In the fourth innings Lillie knocked a fly, which was beautifully muffed by Chapman, and got to first; Myers got out at first but sent Lillie to second. Force got out on a fly. Eggler got to first on six balls; Serad made second on a fly, and sent Lillie and Eggler home. O'Rourke struck out. The score then stood three to one in favor of the Bisons. In the fifth innings they run the score up to five on a fly muffed by Anderson. No runs were made after this. The following is the score:

If Tecumseh played a good game Thursday, they played a miserable one Friday. Every man with one or two exceptions seemed to be rattled or discouraged. G. Bostwick did some excellent fielding, and was about the only man that did anything. Most of the scores made by the Buffalos were made on errors by the home team. Burnham, league umpire with the Buffalos done the umpiring for Friday's game, and he made one horrible decision, calling a Tecumseh man out at first when the baseman was not within 4 feet of his base. We do not give the full score as the error column in the score book was not large enough to hold all the errors made by Tecumseh and content ourselves with the number of scores which was 15 to 3 in favor of Buffalo.

Arthur Burnett, a graduate of our High School, class of 1876, is spending a few days in town.

The Republican County Convention to nominate a county ticket will be held at Adrian on Saturday, August 30th.

The Sunday School connected with the Friends' church of this village had a picnic at Sand Lake on Tuesday last. There was a large company of little folks as well as some older people present, all of whom enjoyed themselves.

Daniel E. Soper, Esq. of Newaygo, was in town Tuesday, the guest of Wm. McCowen. His visit was altogether too short to satisfy his friends. Mr. Soper is flourishing in his present location and is becoming quite a prominent Democratic politician in those parts.

The Union Light of Adrian will soon be merged into a new state organ of the Union party to be published at Detroit. It will appear about Aug. 27th, under the management of A. H. Brown, of Jackson. The Union Light has been ably conducted, but as it has not been a financial success it was thought best by the stockholders to make this change. Its subscription list will be transferred to the new paper.

The following notice is clipped from the Oakland Daily Tribune of July 19th. As one of the contracting parties is a former resident of Tecumseh, the item will doubtless be of interest to our readers. Although many years have flown since Mr. Wastell lived among us, he has a host of friends here who will note his prosperity with pleasure.

At seven-thirty o'clock Tuesday evening last, the marriage ceremony of George F. Wastell to Miss Emma, daughter of Mrs. P. A. Allen, took place at the First M. E. Church. Both the matrimonial aspirants are well and favorably known in this city, and in San Francisco. The groom is in the employ of Murphy, Grant & Co. of San Francisco, the bride a favorite with all that know her. The church had been most elaborately decorated by the young lady friends of the bride. As the wedding organ broke forth in "Mendelssohn's Wedding March" the bridal pair entered the church. They were preceded by the ushers, H. W. Baxter, J. Clayton Hill, Fred. Carrick, and John Parsons; next came Miss Grace Wastell and Bell Allen as flower girls, then Mabel Terry and Bertie Wastell as bridesmaid and best man, followed by the bride and groom. Rev. C. V. Anthony, presiding elder of the M. E. Church, officiated, and soon the bridal pair were united in the holy bonds of matrimony. The presents were in great variety.

The Adrian Record of last Monday says: The Teachers' Institute for Lenawee county began its session this morning at ten o'clock. About sixty persons were in attendance but this afternoon the number swelled to nearly 100. Everything tends to the conviction that the coming two weeks will be spent to the profit of those present. Especially does this seem to be true when we remember that the Institute is under the leadership of Supt. Z. C. Spencer, of Battle Creek, formerly of the Tecumseh schools, assisted by Prof. W. W. Wendell and our Prof. Curtis. The mere fact that these gentlemen have charge should convince all that the Institute will be a success. The first things done was to organize and lay out a definite plan of work, which is something like this: Three classes were formed, to be taught by the gentlemen named. The subjects for this afternoon were "Languages," by Prof. Spencer; "History," by Prof. Wendell; and Physiology," by Prof. Curtis. An hour is spent with each class, and then one class changes with another; thus giving each class or section an opportunity to pass through the same drill."

MORENCI NOTES.

We took a trip to Morenci one day last week and spent four hours circulating around that lively village. We confess our surprise at seeing how the village has improved in general appearance and business thrift during the past four years. The business houses in the leading branches of trade will compare favorably with those in the older towns of the county. In the carriage, undertaking and brick making industries, Morenci has outgrown her strictly local patronage and is spreading out for twenty miles around. A call at the Observer office found that establishment flourishing under the charge of the younger Mr. Allen. E D. Allen was down to Fayette on business, but we had a chat with him at the depot as we took the train to return. The Observer is a well equipped office and is ably managed. In fact the present prosperity of Morenci is due, in no small degree, to the influence of the Observer. The Morenci Union Fair is another enterprise which has grown up within the past few years. It has developed into a strong society which has a great influence upon the business of Morenci. It has grown to be an institution of which that village may well be proud. We took dinner at the Exchange and found that the old corner hotel had lost none of its popularity in recent years. We visited some of the principal business houses and found the proprietors all busy. We shall make an effort to visit Morenci again at the time of the fair.

The regular union services will be held at the Baptist church next Sunday evening.

Ed. Rowland, is playing gentleman now days. He has a felon on his right hand, so he cannot work.

Dan Gibson, of Clinton, has his hands full now taking care of his honey crop. He has over fifty colonies of bees.

Miss Julia Wyrill has gone to her uncle's, Wm. Wyrill's, who lives near Union City, Mich., for a visit of three or four weeks.

Miss Gertie Burnham, who has been spending a few weeks as the guest of Allie and Jennie McCowen returned to her home in Detroit on Friday last.

George Williams, of Clinton, gets to Tecumseh occasionally. He is engaged in house painting this summer, and until recently has had a good run of work. As a house or carriage painter he ranks with the best.

Dr. L. H. Hallock has hung out his shingle, and commenced the practice of medicine at Britton. Dr. Hallock comes well recommended and hopes to merit success in his profession. See his card in another column.

The addition to Temple's planing mill is progressing rapidly. It is of brick two stories high and will increase the capacity of the shop fully half. An extension has been made to the side track which will enable him to unload coal directly from the cars into his coal bins.

The County Pioneer Society will hold its next annual meeting at Ogden Center, on Wednesday, August 27th; among the exercises will be a paper, prepared by Supervisor McComb, on the early settlement of Ogden township.

Addison Courier: Last Friday night, while Sheriff Crandall was doing his chores at his barn, Pat. Dillman, who was his prisoner, made a brake for liberty, but our sheriff was too quick for him and he only ran a short distance when he was captured and taken to Adrian. It is rumored about Hudson and Adrian that Sheriff Crandall was badly pounded while trying to catch the escaped prisoner, but this is untrue. We haven't got that kind of a sheriff up here.

The Union party held a ratification meeting last Thursday evening. It was quite stormy in the afternoon, but the prohibitionists are not at all frightened over a little cold water, and their arrangements were completed just the same. The Clinton band came down to help out on the music, and their part of the program was well performed. The crowd assembled on the corner by Kinney's furniture store and was called to order about eight o'clock P. M. by Rev. G. W. Hudson, who introduced E. B. Sutton, state organizer of the Union party. This gentleman is a pleasing, effective speaker, and held the audience for an hour and a half with a telling speech which gave evident satisfaction to the Unionists present and seemed to displease no one. The meeting was a good one throughout. The Unionists of Tecumseh have opened the campaign in a creditable manner.

MASONIC BANQUET.

Last Friday evening was the "regular" of Tecumseh Lodge No. 59 F. and A. M. The work on hand was in the third degree. Members of neighboring lodges had been invited and when the hour arrived for the Master's gavel to fall the assembled crowd had swelled to such proportions that fifty camp chairs were brought in to furnish seating capacity for the visitors. The degree work was admirably gone through with, W. M, Conklin of our Lodge being assisted by the masters of Clinton and Milan Lodges, David Woodward and I. S. Hitchcock. In the long ante-room adjoining the hall on the South side, tables had been prepared which the Masonic ladies of this vicinity had loaded down with eatables, and after the degree work was closed the visiting bretheren were invited to the feast. The tables accommodated sixty two and they were filled twice and partly filled a third time. The Clinton, Manchester, Milan, Dundee and Adrian Lodges were represented, and Cambridge sent a large delegation, the Masonic fraternity of this town being scattered among different lodges. Altogether there were nearly one hundred visiting Masons in attendance and although our accommodations were severely taxed, we believe they were all properly entertained. Among the table ornaments were three elegant floral pieces, a square and compass and a sickle donated by Mrs. D. P. Spaulding, and a Maltese cross donated by an Adrian florist. The Tecumseh Lodge return their thanks to the visiting brethren for their attendance and hope they may find it convenient to repeat the visit at some future time.

Ben Butler in Detroit.

Ben Butler, the hero of Tewksbury, and a prominent presidential candidate is announced to speak at Recreation Park, Detroit, on Saturday, Aug. 16th. The Knights of Labor have a picnic that day, and in addition to other attractions, they propose to put up several hundred dollars worth of prizes. Gen. Weaver of Iowa, Gen. West of Mississippi, and Asa Parker of Ills., have also promised to grace the occasion with their presence. For the accommodation of the people of this section, an excursion will be run over the Lake Shore, on the 16th, going by the way of the Dundee branch, making the round trip for the low rate of one dollar and twenty five cents. The train leaves Adrian at 7.30 in the morning, and returning, will leave Detroit at 6.00 P. M., precisely. Aside from the attractions offered in Detroit that day, the trip is a very cheap one to those who want to visit the city that day, to do business, or enjoy a visit. The excursions over the Lake Shore have always been safely conducted, and all should avail themselves of this chance. Excursionists can take the regular morning train from Tecumseh, returning by the same in the evening.

A Polite Invitation.

Many people when ordering photographs or other work in the picture line, do not stop to think of the probability of their being able to pay for the work when it was done, and when it is delivered request the artist to wait a day or two for it. I have been waiting for a day or two, for a long time, for some of my customers to settle up for work done and delivered. My creditors want their pay for stock used in doing the work, and their just demands should be promptly met, but there's the rub. If my customers do not pay me, how can I pay my debts? I now politely invite my friends who owe me for work, to settle at once, and by doing so save me a great deal of annoyance and trouble.

Most Respectfully,
L. F. WHEELER.

Preparing the Soil for an Orchard.

Many people do not think that an orchard needs any special care. They do not grow fruit as they grow other crops, or which they carefully prepare the soil and carefully cultivate for the purpose of making the crop both good and many abundant. The orchard, in too many instances, is set out without care and never has any care afterward. It is true that an apple orchard will often do well even under such neglect, but care in the preparation of the soil and good care afterward will pay a fine per cent. of profit for all the money and labor that is expended. The subject of drainage will be the very first to present itself in the consideration of a site for an orchard. Everybody knows that wet land will no answer and nobody would select a low wet field for an orchard site. Many times, however, a portion of a field which elsewhere is all right for an orchard, is too wet for trees, and it is folly to plant trees on that portion unless it is drained. It is of no use to think that, perhaps, they will amount to something even if they are not as good as the balance of the field will produce. Either drain or do not plant the trees, and whenever drainage is attempted for an orchard, or for other purposes, it should be thorough and systematic. No fruit grower should be content with surface drainage. Underdraining is expensive, and much more so than it ought to be, but as we have said so many times, it will pay to underdrain. On our level prairies we can hope for success in apple culture only by thoroughly draining. In many portions of the West, as we need know, the soil is often too wet to grow anything. Millions of dollars are lost every year because drainage has not yet been extensively adopted as its merits would warrant.

Having selected the site with a view to dryness, put the soil in good condition, remembering that when the soil is not too thin, it may be plowed deep with good results. The orchard should never be set on uncultivated land, and that so many orchards have done reasonably well by setting the trees in a space dug in a pasture, is no argument that this is the way to set trees. Thoroughly cultivate the soil, and when it can be done just as well, as not, cultivate it deeply, as we said before, though we do not attach so much importance to trench plowing or subsoiling as some do. The roots will penetrate anyhow, and will at least in a measure prepare the soil for the use of the tree. If there is in the ground in available shape what the tree wants, the roots will find it.

Whether or not to apply manures will depend upon the condition of the soil, and no rule can be laid down that would answer for the vast territory over which the Rural circulates. It must be remembered that trees are great feeders. If the soil is worn out, lime with clover as a green manure, will prove very valuable. If on such soils from twenty-five to fifty bushels of slacked lime are applied to the clover, it will both improve the clover, and act directly upon the soil itself. No one thing will do as much to prepare a field of comparatively poor land for an orchard as clover. Its roots penetrate deep into the earth, and disintegrate the soil besides drawing up a vast amount of hidden treasure. Wood ashes will be found valuable either when the soil is being prepared or afterward. Besides these, composts and stable manures are valuable at least in bringing up soils that are comparatively poor. If there is a necessity for planting such soil immediately, thoroughly decomposed compost, mixed with the soil, should be applied about the trees, but the entire surface of the field will also have to be manured afterward several times. Fresh stable manure should never be placed about the young tree.

Now we come to digging the holes for the trees. If the ground is well prepared, as we have indicated, the holes need not be very large, either in width or depth. Some lay great stress upon wide and deep holes, but such holes are a matter of greater expense, and when they are not needed the expense should not be incurred. If the field is in grass the holes should be wide, about as wide as the field, we think. And where a few trees are to be set in grass, why, of course, make the holes large. The holes prepared, take the tree and carefully examine the roots, cutting away mats of fibers and any roots that are bruised or ragged. Now set them out, spreading out the roots carefully and packing the soil about them firmly. Then cultivate for several years.—Western Rural.

Living From the Garden.

Gardeners, and above all, farmers, have no business to live meanly, or to think of themselves as obliged to drudge ceaselessly without the indulgences of other classes. One has no business to see town folks having early vegetables and berries a month before his tardy supply comes on, to be out of them in dog days before the merchants and cheap boarding house keepers in the city have begun to see the end of fresh things; he has no need to live on doughnuts and boiled dinners the year round, when others try the changes of spring lamb, fresh fish, boiled chicken salads, ducks and green peas, capons and veal till turkey time comes again. He ought not to see town homes fragrant with flowers, while his wife has only a bunch of syaringa and cinnamon roses, with a tuft of asparagus, to sweeten her parlor when she thinks to pick them. What better right have rich men to sit over desserts of choice pears, plums, grapes and apricots, while he must content himself with a Baldwin apple in midwinter? Who should have a becoming home with its lawn in front, and wide borders of the richest flowers; his house, one story and small, perhaps, yet hung with woodbine, wild grapes and roses against the back ground of orchard and nut trees, spreading their flanking boughs with good effect as if it were a cottage ornee, with its acres of shrubberies. Why should he not have in his garden choice of fruit for the season, strawberries, currants and gooseberries jostling each other in earliest perfection red and black cherries, golden and purple plums, plenty of black caps to make up for the lost strawberries, and grapes as soon as raspberries are over, big blanched salads and peas in succession, as well as his town neighbor who sells him groceries and cotton? Why should he not have as fine pears, peaches, winter apples and grapes at Christmas as well as the President of the horticultural society, and why should not his girls have big French roses and tuberoses as well as the solitary dahlia and China aster, which decorate the yard, and the common geranium indoors? Why doesn't he have a herb bed to make his plain dinner savory, and lavender to sweeten his sheets at night? A poor English cottager will have all these by thrift and contrivance. Why not put it in front of his house, instead of behind it and instead of making his cabbage and potatoes his main features of the place, why not screen them from the road and from sight by a belt of choice fruit trees, and have trees to shelter his cattle outside the barn fence, shutting off all that is unsightly? Why doesn't he raise plenty of fowls, pigeons, and a sheep or two on his lawn, to supply his tables, to find fertilizes for the pining garden, and yield his wife pin money, instead of paying so much to the butcher and buying salt fish by the box? Plants cost money, do they? Your wife spends enough for baking powders weekly to buy a fine tree or choice rose, instead of making good yeast bread as her folks did. She buys a shilling's worth of cheap edging for the pinafores instead of making neat hemmed ruffles, and spoils more cretonne and red canton flannel with bad fancy work than would stock a garden year by year. Then the children must have their five and ten cents worth of candy every time one goes to the store, when fruit would be much better for them, and the money would buy flowers and flower seeds. You might have enough to stock the garden, buying groceries by the month's supply, instead of from hand to mouth, or by taking care of the tools and things you have, so as not to pay so much for repairs. I won't say anything about the fireworks you subscribed for election night, or the excursion that gave your wife a sick headache the week after, nor the jig saw or card printing press you must buy for your hopeful, because the other boys each have one and you are tired of his teasing. Nor of the horse you lost by leaving him sweating at the grocery door one cold day while you stopped just to get a pound of soda and hear what all the loungers had to say. Of course you can't have anything like the rest of folks; it is not in nature, your own nature, that you should.—Susan Powers, in Vick's Monthly.

A Flower-Bed Clock.

The Judge's house was over in the French quarter of New Orleans, unattractive outside, but as soon as you got into the broad hall a cool breeze struck you, laden, without exaggeration, with the balm of a thousand flowers. The hall led right through the house and opened into a regular fairyland of flowers—a garden the like of which I had never dreamed of. It was surrounded by a high wall, and had plants in it from every country under the sun. The white-haired old gentleman and a group of grandchildren hanging about him took us about, and the first thing we stopped at was a large oval plot, set out with small plants around the edge. "This," said the Judge, "is my clock. What time is it Clara?" he asked of one of the children. The girl ran around the plot and said it was about four o'clock, and so it was. The four o'clock was in bloom. "In fact," said the story-teller, "the clock was made up of flowers." In the center was a pair of hands, of wood, covered with some beautiful vine, but they had nothing, however, to do with the time-telling.

The plan was this: The Judge had noticed that almost every hour in the day some plant bloomed, and working on this principle he had selected plants of different hours and placed them in a circle, twenty-four in number, and for every hour. For example, at the top of the earthen clock, at twelve o'clock, was planted the portulacca, and he told me that it would bloom within ten minutes of twelve, and rarely miss. At the hours of one, two and three he had different varieties of this same plant, all of which bloomed at the hour opposite to which it was planted. At four o'clock he had our common plant of that name, and you all know how you can depend on that. At five the garden nictago came out, at six the geranium taste and at seven the evening primrose. Opposite eight o'clock he had the bona nox, and at nine the silene noctiflora—all these blooming at or near the time given. At ten o'clock, if I remember rightly, he had a cactus, at eleven another kind, and at twelve the night-blooming cereus.

Half of the year some of the plants don't bloom at all. The plants opposite one and three in the morning were cacti that bloomed about that time, and at three was planted the common salsify, at four the chicory, at five the sow thistle, and at six the dandelion—a rare flower in New Orleans, curiously enough. At seven was a small pond of water in which bloomed the pond-lily.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

—James Joy is the foreman of the quarry of the Kilgour Blue Stone Company, on the Hawley branch of the Erie Railroad. He stepped upon the tail of a rattlesnake that thrust its fangs into his leg with such force that they could not be removed until he had killed the snake. When the snake rattled others showed themselves and about him, and Joy shouted for help. After the battle twenty-eight rattlers, ranging in length from three to five feet, lay dead upon the ground. "Humpy" Williams, a fellow-workman, volunteered to suck the poison from the wound. He did so, and saved Joy's life. Williams is none the worse for his act. The quarry explosions continually unearth snakes from their lodgings among the ledges of rock.—Chicago Times.

—A man in Pittsburgh had his mother in law arrested for using his wooden leg as firewood to cook the breakfast. The Judge decided that as the complainant had eaten part of the meal he had breakfasted off his own leg, and the charge was dismissed.—Pittsburgh Post.

ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP

FOUR POINTS

Prepared by an entirely NEW METHOD.
Composed of the PUREST MATERIALS.
WILL NOT INJURE THE FABRIC.
WILL CLEANSE WITHOUT RUBBING.

You can do a large washing without any rubbing; use the boiling process instead. You can save Time, Labor, Fuel, Soap and Clothing.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.

Cut up fine and dissolve one half bar in half gallon of hot water. Pour half this dissolved soap into a tub with just sufficient hot water to cover a boiler full of clothes. Then put the clothes in to soak, rubbing plenty of soap in the most soiled parts. Be sure that the soaking water is hot; soak the clothes half an hour; stir them occasionally so that they may get the full benefit of the hot suds; pour the remainder of the dissolved soap into the boiler, adding sufficient water to cover the clothes, wring them lightly out of the suds. Soap the stained spots and place loosely in the boiler; boil 10 to 20 minutes, rinse well, blue and hang to dry. Do not crowd the boiler too full. The same boiling water may be used for further boiling by adding a little soap to each boiler-full of clothes. Fannels and prints should not be boiled, only a little rubbing required after soaking. This soap will cleanse clothing as thoroughly as any other without the use of the boiler. We prefer and recommend the boiling process as in itself a cleansing process, saving labor, the wear of the wash-board, and being the best disinfectant known, it is easier to boil the dirt out than to rub it out. You can cleanse perfectly the finest fabric without injury; the finest point lace and lace curtains. Soak point lace in hot suds made with this soap, press water out with the hand; boil 5 to 5 minutes in clean suds made with this soap, rinse thoroughly, press carefully between the folds of a towel, roll in a dry towel, and iron between pieces of old flannel. Soak curtains 10 to 30 minutes and boil 5 to 20 minutes, rinse, stretch on frame, or pin every scallop to carpet over a sheet to dry; no ironing required.

Be sure and ask for ELECTRIC-LIGHT SOAP, and take no other.

Sold by leading wholesale and retail grocers everywhere. Dealers may obtain our goods upon application. ELECTRIC SOAP MANUFACTURING CO., Indianapolis, Ind., and 26-28 South Water St., Chicago, Ill.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

A coolness has come between admirers and Sylvan Scenery, and tho' a few hardy ones presist in dining where spiders make a cup of hot coffee an excuse to suicide, the majority either stay at home and mend torn dresses, or sleep away daylight, in order to be wide awake for the evening dance.

So little real news is afloat that people who can enlarge the loss of a galvanized nickel to the dimentions of a hundred dollar gold coin, are almost a blessings and what is known as small talk is about all that keeps us from rusting. There is a faint plaint about frost bitten vines and spoilt corn, but that only adds dullness to the refrain chirped by cricket and katy-did when we light the evening fire to drive out November chill.

A whisper concerning the Union Light not being a profitable investment has crept through the gloaming, and adds a trifle that don't sweeten the cup of disappointment for those who have an abiding faith that Prohibition journals can be made lively trade papers, during this and coming campaigns. Temperance is a very worldly idol, and the best weapons to kill it with are those sharpened by its worshipers. They are so plenty you can't reach up chimney in the dark without grasping a handful. It is not those who buy license that war need be waged against. It is those who sanctify agents to sell these high priced indulgences to them; and a very large percentage of votes that invest two or three in each community with authority to coin wealth for themselves and want for their neighbors, is the result of thoughtlessness and morbid shrinking from disturbing party land marks. Must be, is the word, for who can believe that men we are indebted to for a thousand acts of kindness, who are courteous, peaceable, and pretty good fellows in general, will forge such chains of disgusting habits, ignorance and brutishness to blight the happiness of women and children, and perhaps germinate ruin in their own homes, with premeditated malicious intent. Nothing but neglect to analyze the result of casting their individual influence on the side of wrong, makes men so tenacious of the right to make fools of themselves and all around them, in case they should ever happen to want to. They make all sorts of excuses perpetuating this kind of slavery, and the saloon-keeper makes but one. His is, I have paid for my license; but he gets up a diverting variety, just the opposite of a lecture on Life in China, compiled from the expense column of foreign missions. His method is worthy of being copied, for it is older than Prohibition, and that is old enough to stop creeping under party wings and coaxing everybody to be its stepmother. A paper with an editorial for those who digest reason, news, nonsense and nerve tonic, for those who will not, would form a union light, even its opponents must buy in order to see where to locate their line of defense.

MACON MUSIC.

The "Corners" is prospering. We now have a barber shop.

The ice-cream festival given under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society on the evening of Aug. 5th, was a success in every respect.

David Hatch, who has been away visiting for a number of weeks, returned home recently.

Fred Morley of Ann Arbor, spent Sunday with Macon friends.

Rev. Mr. Frazee, formerly pastor of the M. E. church here, but now of the M. E. church of Flint, preached to the Macon people Sunday.

A large number of young Maconites hied away last Saturday to regale themselves on the placid waters of Sand Lake. They returned looking regaled.

Hon. George Howell was appointed a delegate to the State convention by the county convention held on Monday.

Mrs. St. John of Clinton, has organized a singing class among the little people, which meets at the school house every week day. After a two weeks' course, Mrs. St. John and her class will give a concert.

Friday Aug. 8th, the Republicans of Macon held their caucuses, and appointed delegates to the district and county conventions.

The following individuals comprise the delegation to the county convention to nominate county officers: W. S. Morden, C. E. Triplet, J. B. Camburn, John Boyd, Jas. F. Gilmore and Ransom Remington. Anxious would-be office-holders may now plead their cause and make known their claims.

The Band boys are making preparations for a bowery dance Friday, Aug. 22. As the boys are all persevering fellows, we predict that everything will be in first-class order.

Ridgeway speakers will address the Prohibitionists of Macon at Grange Hall, Saturday evening, Aug. 16th. As Ridgeway is enthusiastic on the subject of Temperance, we may expect rousing addresses. Turn out and countenance the party that is endeavoring to rid the land of the great curse to society and all good government.

TIPTON TATTLE.

Mr. Hiram Leonard fell into the cellar one day last week, and hurt his head so badly that he has been in a very precarious state of health ever since with the balance of chances strongly against his recovery. But a short time before this fall Mr. Leonard had a very threatening cancer removed from near the eye by a mixture prepared and administered by a farmer who lives at Addison, rendering the cure complete to all appearance leaving a very smooth and healthy looking dent.

Rev. Giddins of Ionia county having preached several trial sermons in the Congregational church, is likely to become the settled pastor thereof.

Joseph White, for a number of weeks has been afflicted with a painful swelling on the side of his face refusing to decline or come to a head.

George Tripp having engaged the village school at Addison, will remove there next week. We congratulate the Addisonians in procuring the services of a teacher so efficient and successful as he.

Miss Sarah Whiteley is spending a few days in Sharon with friends of former years.

RAISIN VALLEY REUNION.

The regular annual meeting of the Raisin Valley Reunion Association was held at the Seminary on Friday afternoon of last week. The weather could not have been more favorable, and the attendance was good, the large Seminary hall being filled at the literary exercises.

At three o'clock the assembly was called to order by Mr Robert Glenn, one of the Vice Presidents, when the following program was presented:

Instrumental Duet.

Impromptu Address by Aaron Taylor. His remarks were somewhat humorous in character and were well received.

This followed a vocal solo and a poem by Miss Minnie Westgate, which was brief but good.

A vocal quartette by four young men was next presented, and then brief remarks were made by Prof. White and others.

The minutes of the last annual session were read and approved.

The election of officers came next, and the following persons were chosen for the ensuing year:

President—Fred Hathaway.
Vice Pres.—Wm. Bartlett.
Rec. Sec.—Libbie Stanley.
Cor. Sec.—Susie Brown.
Treas.—W. A. Sutton.
Marshall—Ralph Webb.
Orator—Celia Jones.
Poetess—Anna Bartlett.
Music Com.—Satie Stanley, Susie Brown, Will Bartlett.

After the collection, the audience was dismissed and the attendants passed an hour or so in social converse, when they were invited to the well laden tables spread beneath the old oaks on the lawn. The picnic dinner was one of the prominent features of the entertainment, and it was heartily enjoyed. E. V. DePuy of Tecumseh furnished the ice cream and confectionery. Not until the sun had dropped behind the western clouds did the last of the visitors leave the grounds.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY CONVENTION.

The republican county convention, held at Dean's opera house, Adrian, last Monday, was one of the largest, most united and most numerously attended gatherings of the kind that have ever assembled there. The representative men of the party were out in force, and it was evident with all that they were determined to present a united and enthusiastic front to the enemy in the coming campaign.

Hon. Samuel Morey of Cambridge, was chosen chairman and D. B. Morgan, of Seneca, secretary.

The committee on resolutions made a report, which report was adopted.

Hon. John K. Boies, of Hudson, was then unanimously named as delegate-at-large to the state convention, by acclamation.

Hon. W. S. Wilcox, of Adrian, was then similarly named as delegate-at-large to the congressional convention.

We append a report of the proceedings in the caucuses:

FIRST DISTRICT.

In the first district M. T. Cole, of Palmyra, was called to the chair, F. W. Freeze, of Clinton, being made secretary.

To the state convention the following delegates were elected: M. T. Cole, Palmyra; Geo. J. Kline, Blissfield; T. G. Chandler, Riga; F. J. Temple, Ridgeway; Oscar Bliss, Deerfield; Geo. Howell, Macon; H. W. Stevens, Tecumseh.

On motion each delegate was authorized to select his own substitute.

SECOND DISTRICT.

John Townsend was chosen chairman and Dr. Allen, secretary.

The following were chosen delegates to the congressional convention: H. A. Colvin, H. N. King, C. E. Weaver, T. M. Camburn, Wm. B. Myers, Hiram Ferguson.

On motion of W. S. Wilcox, the delegation, as a whole, was ordered to fill vacancies that may occur.

The following were chosen delegates to the state convention: George M. Hoch, A. W. Carey, Dr. Rynd, J. G. Savage, Samuel Wilson, H. C. Pratt, John W. Dalton.

On motion of Dr. Rynd, individual delegates were given the power of substitution.

Following were the names presented for delegates to the state convention:

Woodstock—Eugene Woodward.
Rollin—J. U. Harkness.
Cambridge—C. E. Jessup.
Dover—M. P. Stockwell.
Seneca—John C. Porter.
Rome—Ezera Bertram, jr.
Medina—R. H. Rogers, jr.

The names were placed in a hat, the secretary blindfolded, and that of John C. Porter, of Seneca, being drawn out, the others stood as the delegates chosen.

The delegates to the congressional convention were then chosen in the same manner, the following names being presented.

Woodstock—M. Carpenter.
Rollin—B. N. Hathaway.
Cambridge—Samuel More.
Dover—F. Math, Jr.
Rome—Winslow Bates.
Seneca—D. B. Morgan.
Medina—C. C. Morse.

The name of Manson Carpenter was drawn from the hat, and the balance stood as delegates.

THE PROBATE COURT.

Following is the record of business transacted at the probate court for the week ending August 9, 1884:

Estate of William Waring, deceased; report of sale of real estate; affidavits of publishing and posting notices of sale; order of confirmation.

Estate of Joseph Slater, deceased; petition for allowance of final account; hearing August, 1884.

Estate of Albert Rose, deceased; warrant and inventory filed.

Estate of Percival A. Fitzsimmons, et al, minors; guardian files bond; letters issued.

Estate of George A. Monroe, an et al minor; report of sale of real estate; affidavits of publishing and posting notices of sale; order of confirmation.

Estate of Joseph Webster, deceased; warrant and inventory filed.

In the matter of the complaint of Alfred E. Millard vs. Joseph Strach, defendant; summons returned; order of continuance until Aug. 6, at ten o'clock a. m.

Estate of Elizabeth Houghwout, deceased; warrant and inventory filed.

Estate of Phebe Lester, deceased; will, proof and probate; bond filed; letters issued; order appointing appraisers and commissioners.

Estate of Hiram C. Colbath, an alleged insane person; petition for appointment of guardian; hearing Aug. 16.

Estate of Clarissa A. Carpenter, an insane person; appointment of appraisers.

Estate of Harriet Jeffery, deceased; petition for proof of will; hearing September 8.

In the matter of the appointment of three special commissioners for Garnsey drain, township of Ogden; application filed; order for citation; hearing August 27, at 10 o'clock a. m.

Estate of Lucy J. Arnold, deceased; petition for administration; hearing September 8.

Estate of Stephen H. Aldrich, deceased; affidavit of publication; will, proof and probate; bond and letters, appointment of appraisers.

Estate of John S. Butrick, deceased; affidavit of publication; will, proof and probate; bond, $1,500.

Estate of Josiah Love, deceased; order of continuance until October, 1884, at ten o'clock a. m.

Estate of Francis A. Howard, deceased; affidavit of publication; will, proof and probate, bond $1,000.

The North American Review for August contains an article by Justice James V. Campbell on "The Encroachments of Capital" which will command the serious attention of all readers. Richard A. Proctor threats of "The Origin of Comets," and succeeds in presenting that difficult subject in a light so clear that persons who have little or no acquaintance with astronomy can follow his argument. "Are we a Nation of Rascals?" is the startling title of an article by John F. Hume, who shows that states, counties and municipalities in the United States have already repudiated, or defaulted in the payment of interest on an amount of bonds and other obligations equal to the sum of the national debt. Judge Edward C. Loring finds a "Drift towards Centralization" in the recent judgement of the United States Supreme Court on the power of the Federal Government to issue paper money, and in the opinion of the same court rendered in the suit for the Arlington property. Julian Hawthorne writes of "The American Element in Fiction," and there is a symposium on "Prohibition and Persuasion," by Neal Dow and Dr. Dio Lewis.

REAL ESTATE TRANSFERS.

Following are the real estate transfers in this county, as recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the week ending August 9.

CLINTON.

Mary Kelly to Mary E. Thomas. Land on secs 31 and 18, Macon. $3000.

FRANKLIN.

B. C. Knapp to Rachel J. Bouck. Land on sec 21. $300.

MACON.

Thos. F. Chase to Thos. A Liddel. Land on sec 6. $1,200.

RAISIN.

H. H. Baker to A. W. Flowers. Land on sec 19. $700.

TECUMSEH.

Egbert Anderson to B. A. Sutton. Land in vil. $560.

A. D. Hall to J. I. and B. J. Rector. Land on sec 22. $300.

Hudson Post. A farmer living south west of this village bought an unbroken mustang last week, but before he reached home was tackled by one of his neighbors, who wanted to trade horses, saying the man with the mustang could do nothing with his newly purchased property. The mustang was taken home and in being handled with a rope threw himself and broke his back. The owner went back and said he could do nothing with the animal, and the trade was consumated, the original owner of the mustang taking another horse and the party traded with went after the mustang, but had to draw it home on a stone boat. He didn't squeal, however.

HER BROTHER'S CIGARETTE.

FIFTY YEARS.

Like a raven's wing her locks of jet,
Her soft eyes touched with fond regret,
Tight and severe her mouth is set,
Fondling her brother's cigarette.

FIFTY YEARS SECOND.

Roses, with dewy diamonds set
Upon the sill of the window's parapet,
Worn grace slip turned a match to get,
And lit her brother's cigarette.

FIFTY YEARS THIRD.

Her purple of smoky velvet,
Twined in fantastic filigree,
She layed, laughed, coughed a little, yet
She smoked her brother's cigarette.

FIFTY YEARS LAST, AND WORST,

Her eyes with brim tears were wet,
Her hair grew limp beneath its net,
Her face was crimmed with beaded sweat,

HAWKS AND FALCONS.

The noble sport of hawking, or falconry, as it is often called, was formerly one in which, according to the earliest English treatise upon the subject, "gentil men and honest persons had greete delite." In this country it is almost unknown, and even in England and France, where up to a century ago it was in high favor, it is practiced by but a few enthusiasts.

To discover the origin of hawking one would have to go back beyond the beginning of history. An English explorer found among some ruins in Asia Minor a sculptured stone representing a falconer with a hawk perched upon his wrist, which must have been made about seventeen hundred years before the Christian era. In China, where almost everything seems to have been known thousands of years before we moderns discovered it, hawking was practiced as long ago as 2000 B. C. Some authorities say that our old friend Ulysses introduced the sport into Greece after the siege of Troy, and others hold that the Turks or the Arabs were the first in historical times to practice it.

Be that as it may, we know that Alfred the Great was fond of hawking, and indeed one of his biographers implies that skill in this sport was a d[illegible] "His skill in hunting and hawking, as well as in all the other gifts of God, was really incomparable." But to trace hawking through the long line of the English Kings, or to relate one-tenth of the many interesting anecdotes connected with it, would be an almost endless story. Let us take its antiquity for granted and see what it was and how it was done.

The words "falcon" and "hawk," though often used without distinction, really apply to two kinds of birds. Both are birds of prey, and both have characteristics very much alike. The falcons are the falcon proper, the merlin and the hobby. The hawks are the goshawk and the sparrow-hawk. The principal distinction in form between the two—falcon and hawks—is that the former have long wings, which, when closed, reach to the end of the tail, while the hawks have short wings, beyond which the tail projects some distance. In their methods of taking their prey, too, there is a difference. The falcon descends upon the object of its pursuit from a great height and with great rapidity, but the hawk pursues its prey and clutches it as it flies, seldom dropping upon it, or "stooping," as it is called, from a height of more than a few feet.

Falcons and hawks are the only birds of prey that can be trained for hunting, and of these the merlin is the most readily trained. Some falconers take the young birds from the nest, when they are called "eyesses"; others prefer grown birds, known as "passage hawks," from their being caught during their passage in their annual migration. The training in each case is much the same, for after the eyess has been allowed to fly "at back"—that is, at liberty—returning every day for food, as its habit is, it has already begun to learn its business by itself, and in tameness it will be far ahead of a passage hawk at the time when the actual training begins. Nevertheless, an old hawk will so her provide sport for its trainer than one that has been handled from the nest, for during its period of freedom it has been obliged to develop its instinct for hunting, and it is this natural instinct that the falconer tries not to subdue, but to encourage and guide for his own purposes.

The first impulse of any one who has caught a bird alive is to put it into a cage; but in the case of a hawk this is never done. He is kept confined, but not by "prison bars." As soon as taken he is blindfolded with a "hood" made of soft leather, and fitting closely over the head, an opening being left for the beak. This is to render him quiet, for, being unable to see, he is not so likely to fight for liberty. Then "jesses" (thin leather thongs) are fastened to his legs, jesses being used for the same purpose as the collar on a dog, while the "leash" (a strap about four feet long) corresponds to a dog's chain.

The hawk-house should be an airy though not a draughty room, and it should be quite dry. The accommodations for the bird are of two sorts—a block and a perch. The former is often made of turf, and is formed by placing two thick sods one upon the other, and passing a stick through them so that it projects a few inches on each side. To the projecting ends is fastened the "leash," thus securely confining the bird. The perch is generally about four feet long and three feet above the ground. It is strongly secured, for the weight of a hawk is considerable, and when it flutters off its perch it exercises no little force. A simple but ingenious arrangement is used to assist the hawk in regaining his position when it has fluttered off the perch. This is a curtain of coarse canvas hanging from the pole as from a curtain rod, up which the bird can climb to his place, and without which, having lost his hold, he would surely hang, head downward, until at last released by death.

But it must not be supposed that the noble falcon passes all his leisure time in-doors; on the contrary, it is necessary for his health that he should be out-of-doors as much as possible, and in a convenient place both block and perch are provided for his occupation in fine weather. When the bird has become tame enough to take his food regularly and freely, and has grown to know his master, the early stages of his training may be begun. His hood is then removed, in order that he may see the "quarry," though the jesses and leash will be required until he is sufficiently well trained to be allowed to fly at large.

When a hawk has learned to jump from the perch to the hand for a piece of meat, and from the perch down to the ground and back again, it is fed with a live bird, generally given. A small bird, often a pigeon, is fastened down by a string to a peg in the ground, and the hawk is allowed to "stoop" to it from the length of the leash. If it kills the live bird it should be allowed to eat it, for it must be remembered that the hawk kills other birds, not out of wantonness, but for food. If it is not hungry, it will not seek to kill the "quarry." Hence a hawk is always taken out hungry both for training and actual hunting. It may be said that although it is necessary to use and kill live birds in the training of hawks, live birds are indeed the natural food of birds of prey, and the hawk, unlike the cat, does not play with its victim, but kills it instantly, hence the small bird suffers no pain.

The training of a "passage hawk" is shorter than that of an "eyess," because the former has already learned his business; indeed, when a bird has been taught to allow himself to be taken up after a flight, he is quite ready to be flown at large. One would think that having been set free from hood and leash, the hawk would bid a long last farewell to his late master and home, and return to the freedom of his native rocks and woods. But this is not the case. If his training has been at once gentle and thorough, he will have become domesticated, and while he may not show much attachment to his master, he will allow himself to be recaptured, for he knows that he is sure of a good home and good living—considerations which weigh heavily with other bipeds and many quadrupeds.

Hawks are flown in England at partridges, grouse, wild pigeons, rooks (a kind of crow), and small birds. Of these the rook gives the best sport, since his size is almost equal to that of the hawk and his flying powers very great. Some wonderful flights have been known, and frequently a strong, well-grown rook, in good condition, has mounted higher and higher in the sky until both he and the pursuing falcon are lost to view—and lost forever, leaving their lives up among the clouds, perhaps, while their bodies fall to the earth no one knows where.—Sherwood Rise, in Harper's Young People.

Going to Form a Society.

"I think it is shameful, the way some people talk about their neighbors," said Mrs. Whistleloud to Mrs. Blababout the other day. "If there is anything I do detest, it is folks who talk about their neighbors."

"Yes, it is awful the way some people tattle. There is Mrs. Tellall, over on Prairie street. She goes from house to house and tells all she knows and a good deal she suspects about all her neighbors."

"Yes, and Mrs. Gossiper is even worse than she is. She has something ill to say of everybody she knows."

"And they do say she, herself, is not above suspicion."

"I have heard that she is a grass widow, and that she was such a termagant that her husband could not see a moment's peace."

"And Mrs. Tellall is none too good, either. She has the name of being a mean, hateful old thing."

"I have heard the neighbors say that her husband is jealous of her, and I would not be much surprised if he has good cause."

"I've heard some pretty bad stories about her, and her eldest daughter is but little better, from all reports."

"And some people say that Mrs. Billsinger, her sister, is no better."

"I am not much astonished to hear that, for the whole family is none too good."

"It is too bad about the Solfarino family, aint it?"

"Why, what of them?"

"Oh, the folks that live next door say he beats her awfully."

"Well, that is to be expected. His father is a drunkard, and he could not be expected to amount to much."

"Well, it is a shame for him to beat his wife, but she is nothing to speak of."

"No, I suppose she can't be very refined. Her father was a gambler, if all reports be true."

"And had you heard about Mrs. Obadiah Smith?"

"No; what has she been doing? I half expected a scandal in regard to her two months ago."

"They say she took on awfully when one of her boarders was sick the other day, and it is whispered around that she thinks too much of him for the peace of mind of her husband."

"Yes, I expect it goes pretty hard with him. It is said he has been drinking a good deal lately."

"I just think we ought to form a society to prevent gossiping."

"So do I."

"Let us do it."

"We will."—Bloomington Throughs Mail.

The Old, Old Story.

Little Tom—"You are going with us to our picnic, ain't you?"

Young Squipps—"Yes, my dear child. Your sister honored me with an invitation, and I would not miss such an opportunity for the world. By the way, Tom, here is a new silver dollar. Now I want you to tell me something I want to know. Mr. Gayfellow isn't going, is he?"

Tom—"Oh, yes."

Squipps—"Hang him! I thought I would have your sister all to myself today."

Tom—"But you shouldn't want to hang Mr. Gayfellow. He was the one who told sister to invite you."

Squipps—"He? Why what did he want me for?"

Tom—"To carry the baskets."—Philadelphia Call.

Timely Health Hints.

The farmer, of all men, should enjoy good health. He can have the best and freshest of nature's productions for food and drink; his work is healthful exercise, and the air he breathes is free and pure. Yet statistics show that the life of the farmer is below the average, and that several classes who lead sedentary lives in the city are longer lived than he. This must proceed from a gross disregard of the requirements of health on his part, and if we look at the matter critically we must confess that many of us farmers treat ourselves as if we did not care particularly whether we lived or not. Now I shall, perhaps, say some plain things, and I say them without excepting myself. Do not think that I speak from a high pinnacle of fancied personal perfection. I am quite willing to admit that I am as much at fault as any of my brethren.

We must confess that we are uncleanly about our bodies. All over the surface of the body there are many little glands, opening upon the skin, whose office it is to excrete from the body the particles of broken down, dead tissue. This effete matter is cast upon the skin, and must be frequently removed with soap and water, or it will finally close up the glands, and the dead matter must be retained in the body, producing disease. There are also other glands opening on the surface of the body, whose office it is to pour out an oily liquid. This liquid soon becomes unfit for the purpose for which it is designed, and other must take its place. But unless that first thrown out is removed, it will close up the mouths of the glands, and prevent the exit of fresh matter. It is plain that if no matter fell upon the surface of the body from external sources, frequent ablutions would yet be necessary. But our work is such that the body must continually receive dust from the air. Carrying the horses, milking the cows; plowing, harrowing, or dragging the land; binding or handling the grain, all are attended with the settling of dust upon the body. At this season, when the sweat-glands are unusually active and keep the skin damp, this dust is more than usually liable to adhere to the body. Thus from both within and without the body is contaminated and made unclean. So rapid is the work at this season that the body should be cleansed every twenty-four hours, and it is best to do this when the day's work is done, for then the body's liability to receive dirt from external sources is small, and the functions of the glands can be properly performed during the night, insuring healthful slumber.

But how many of us do cleanse the body each night? I am afraid the truth would be that full as many cleanse the body only once a week, as those that cleanse it once a day. Not one farmhouse in fifty, take the country over, has a bath-room; and I doubt if one farmer's family in twelve has even a bath-tub. This is a sad commentary on our way of living, and explains the prevalence of fevers in the country, where they should be almost unknown.

I know only too well how tired the plowman is at the close of the day, and the fatigue is yet greater if the day has been spent in the harvest field. It seems a great task to drag the wearied body even twenty feet to bed. The thought of going to the trouble and expense of time of bathing may appear almost absurd. But my word for it, that you will be largely the gainer by so doing. To bathe will not require more than ten minutes, and you will have added two hours to your slumber. You have shortened the time for sleep by ten minutes, but you have made slumber so much more sounder and sweeter that you have gained a dozen times the time expended. Try bathing each night for a week, and you will no more think of retiring without first cleansing the body of sweat and dirt than you would of going to bed with your boots on. And remember that while you have gained so much in rest and comfort, you will ultimately gain more in health.

During warm weather meat and oily food should be almost entirely discarded, and fresh vegetables, and ripe fruit should make up the bill of fare. As a people we eat too much meat; yet New Englanders do not sin so greatly in this respect as their Western brethren. Yet it is safe to say that even New Englanders eat too much meat in warm weather. At this season of the year, comfort, which is another name for health, demands that we keep the bodily heat at the lowest possible point while exercising in the hot sun. The bodily heat is produced by a slow combustion, the fuel for which is carbon. Meat and oils are rich in carbon, and when used for food increase the bodily heat. Vegetables and fruits for diet keep the bodily heat at a minimum figure; hence the wisdom of the use of the latter for food. But folly half of the farmers do not have a good garden or a good orchard. It is hard to account for this, for when properly attended to, no other part of the farm is more profitable than the orchard and garden. From a money point of view alone the farmer should be convinced that good policy dictates an early and productive garden.—John M. Stahl, in New England Farmer.

—The family of the late Samuel Reifsnyder, a farmer of Pottsgrove Township, Montgomery County, Pa., who died recently, have discovered some $4,000 in cash about his house, which he had stowed away in various places. One thousand dollars was in silver—whole, half, and quarter dollars—and the rest in notes and gold. Among the silver were many old coins, and the collection of half dollars represented the coinage of every year from 1806 to the present date, with the exception of 1815 and 1816.—Philadelphia Record.

—A countryman went into a saloon for a lunch the other day, and while he was swallowing the feed he heard the telephone bell ring, and the bartender went to the telephone and began to converse with somebody in a loud voice in the German language. The countryman opened his mouth wide, then turned to a city gentleman at the same table and said: "That's the first Dutch telephone I ever heard." The city man said he had one at his house that a Chinaman could talk through, and the countryman was paralyzed.—Post's Sun.

KING'S EVIL

Was the name formerly given to Scrofula because of a superstition that it could be cured by a king's touch. The world is wiser now, and knows that can only be cured by a thorough purification of the blood. It affects the whole system, the disease perpetuates its taint from generation after generation. Among its earlier symptomatic developments are Eczema, Cutaneous Eruptions, Tumors, Boils, Carbuncles, Erysipelas, Purulent Ulcers, Nervous and Physical Collapse, etc. If allowed to continue, Rheumatism, Scrofulous Catarrh, Kidney and Liver Diseases, Tubercular Consumption, and various other dangerous or fatal maladies are produced by it.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Is the only powerful and always reliable blood-purifying medicine. It is so effectual an alterative that it eradicates from the system Hereditary Scrofula, and the kindred poisons of contagious diseases and mercury. At the same time it enriches and vitalizes the blood, restoring healthful action to the vital organs and rejuvenating the entire system. This great

Regenerative Medicine

Is composed of the genuine Honduras Sarsaparilla, with Yellow Dock, Stillingia, the Iodides of Potassium and Iron, and other ingredients of great potency, carefully and scientifically compounded. Its formula is open to known to the medical profession, and the best physicians constantly prescribe AYER'S SARSAPARILLA as an Absolute Cure

For all diseases caused by the vitiation of the blood. It is concentrated to the highest practicable degree, far beyond any other preparation for which like effects are claimed, and is therefore the cheapest, as well as the best blood purifying medicine, in the world.

How Watch Cases are Made.

It is a fact not generally known that the James Boss' Gold Watch Cases really contain more pure gold than many "solid" gold cases. The demand for these watch cases has led to the manufacture of a very poor grade of solid gold watch cases—low in quality, and deficient in quantity. These cases are made from 4½ to 10 karats, and a 5 or 6 karat case is often sold for 12 or 14 karats. It is NOT economy to buy a watch case so poor in quality that it will soon lose its color, or one so soft that it will lose its shape and fail to shut tight, thus letting in dust and damaging the works, or one so thin that a slight blow will break the crystal, and perhaps the movement. It IS economy to buy a James Boss' Gold Watch Case, in which NONE of these things ever occur. This watch case is not an experiment—it has been made nearly thirty years.

HAZLETON, PA., Oct. 24, 1882.

I sold two James Boss' Gold Watch Cases thirty years ago, when they first came out, and they are in good condition yet. One of them is carried by a carpenter, Mr. L. W. Drake, of Hazleton, and only shows the wear in one or two places; the other by Mr. Bowman, of Cunningham, Pa., and I can produce one or both of these cases at any time.

HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA

Is designed to meet the wants of a large portion of our people who are either too poor to employ a physician, or are too far removed to easily call one, and a still larger class who are not sick enough to require medical advice, and yet are out of sorts and need a medicine to build them up, give them an appetite, purify their blood, and oil up the machinery of their bodies so it will do its duty willingly. No other article takes hold of the system and hits exactly the spot like

It works like magic, reaching every part of the human body through the blood, giving to all new life and energy.

My friend, you need not take our word. Ask your neighbor, who has just taken one bottle. He will tell you that "It's the best dollar I ever invested."

LEBANON, N. H., Feb. 19, 1879.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Dear Sirs—Although greatly prejudiced against patent medicines in general, I was induced, from the excellent reports I had heard of your Sarsaparilla, to try a bottle, last December, for dyspepsia and general prostration, and I have received very gratifying results from its use. I am now using the second bottle, and consider it a very valuable remedy for indigestion and its attendant troubles.

Yours truly,
F. C. CHURCHILL,
(Firm of Carter & Churchill.)

WABASH ROUTE!

THE BUSINESS MAN

When he travels wants to go quick, wants to be comfortable, wants to arrive at destination on time, in fact, wants a strictly business trip, and consequently takes the popular Wabash Route, feeling that he is sure to meet his engagements and continue to prosper and be happy.

THE TOURIST

Has long since chosen the Wabash as the favorite route to all the summer resorts of the East, North and West, and winter resorts of the South, as the Company has for years provided better accommodations and more attractions than any of its competitors for this class of travel. Tourist Tickets can be had at reduced rates at all principal offices of the Company.

THE FARMER

In search of a new home, where he can secure better returns for his labor, should remember that the Wabash is the most direct route to Arkansas, Texas, Kansas, Nebraska, and all points South, West and Northwest, and that round-trip land-explorers' tickets at very low rates are always on sale at the ticket offices. Descriptive advertising matter of Arkansas and Texas sent free to all applicants by addressing the General Passenger Agent.

THE INVALID

Will find the Wabash the most convenient route to all the noted health resorts of Illinois, Missouri, Arkansas and Texas, and that the extensive through car system and superior accommodations of this popular line will add greatly to his comfort while en route. Pamphlet descriptive of the many celebrated mineral springs of the West and South sent free on application.

THE CAPITALIST

Can get the information necessary to secure safe and profitable investments in agriculture, stock-raising, mining, lumbering, or any of the many inviting fields throughout the South and West, by addressing the undersigned.

An Old Miner's Story.

According to my memory the story which an old miner told me at the Grand Pacific the other day was this: "We had put up the cabin that was to be home to us away up on the Yaller Stone, and it was in them times away out ov sight ov civilization. Thar was seven ov us, and we was all men who had met the world all our lives the wrong way. I reckon thar wa'n't a man who hed'nt hed the iron driv into his soul and clinch'd on the t'other side. Thar wa'n't a man in the crowd that ever hed a pleasant story for to tell. Thar wa'n't a man as ever I know'd who ever sang a song. We called the place Lonesome Ledge. We didn't git together in any formal way, and we niver past any resolution about how good we were before or how as we was goin' to reform. Ever' man jist seemed as if he know'd t'other one hed a tombstun in his heart and it were sacrilledge to gog nigh it. All but one. He were a young chap that we picked up on our way out. He had hair as yaller as my hands and a kind ov a stoop in his shoulders as if he hed hed a burden put onto him afore his time. But he had awful blue eyes that was as soft and pleadin' in thar looks as the sky above us. He sed his name was Brixie. If he hed enny other we never know'd it, and we didn't know whether Brixie were his front name or his back name, and we niver axed him. He were as frail in his looks as one ov them beanpoles that used to be in the garden. If thar were ennything about Lonesome Ledge that was easy Brixie allus got it. One evenin' we was all settin' 'round Lonesome Ledge, each man lookin' into the fires of 'he expected it was goin' to speak. Finally one sez, 'Whar's Brixie?' sez he. Nobody could answer. 'Ever' man seemed to say in his face 'Well, he's gone, and that's the way ov all life.' We all laid down on the floor, and I reckon we all went to sleep. Men in our station don't stay wake ov nights. Next mornin', when we woke up Brixie were on hand, but nobody axed him whar he'd been, and he never sed. Well, that thing happened ever' few nights for nigh onto three months, and still nobody axed what it meant nor Brixie never sed a word. One night we saw him wash his face and comb his ha'r. He hed some trouble to git it to lay down, but he got it. Then he put some bar ile on his boots, and then he tuck his coat and beat it agin a cedar that was about as frail as he were. And then he put it on and walked away. Still no man axed a question. He were gone the next night, and the next, and the next, until thar wuz enough nights to make a week and enough weeks to make a month. Still no man axed a question. One night when we wus all about to stretch out we heerd a knock on the door. If a bar or a painter or a kyoot hed walked in we would hev thought nothin' about it, but to hear a knock on the door of Lonesome Ledge were a strange thing, and made us all look at each other. We didn't know what to say or do. I reckon no man in Lonesome Ledge hed heard a knock on the door for more'n a year. But finally one ov the boys got up, and, shakin' as ef he hed the ager, he sez: 'Why don't you come in, thar's the latch string on the outside,' sez he. The door opened and thar were Brixie, and by his side thar were a shy-lookin' thing that were a woman. It were the fust woman we'd seed in over a year. Brixie jist brought her in, and he jist sez: 'Mrs. Brixie, wife ov Brixie.' I never forgit that night. She made us a supper with them little hands; she washt up the tins and then she sot down in front ov the fire and I know hers were the sweetest song that were ever sung in them mountains. Then we all got up and formed a circle about her and took her hand, and all at on et somethin' seemed to loosen the iron in our hearts and thaw us out. We knowed now why Brixie hed gone away ov nights, and that night we all slept out on the ground, except Mr. and Mrs. Brixie. Well, sir, not to tire you, Lonesome Ledge were broke up, and we are all goin' back to whar we come from in the East years ago. All on account ov Mrs. Brixie, whose purty face and sweet songs fetched us back to our senses and made men ov us. That's how I hev pen to be here to-night."—Chicago Herald.

Brandy Bursting Its Barrels.

The trouble in Egypt affects all Europe, even including the brandy merchants of Russia. The quantity of spirits exported last year from Odessa exceeded that of any previous year. The reason given for this is that last summer an agency was established at Alexandria by the Russian Steamboat and Commercial Company, which undertook the sale of Russian spirits in the Alexandrian market. At the beginning it promised well, and the Constantinople and Greek markets lost for the time being in importance. But owing to recent events things have taken another turn at Alexandria, and a large quantity of Russian spirits have been stowed away in the vaults of the Custom-house to save it from the heat. The effort has been vain, for the heat is bursting the barrels and a recent inspection has shown that the prospects of the Odessa merchants are anything but satisfactory as far as their goods in Egypt are concerned.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Texas Humorist.

Several Austin gentleman were talking about Mark Twain and other humorists, when young Monroe Jeffries, who had only been married about a year, remarked that there was a humorist in Austin, compared with whom Mark Twain was nowhere.

"Who is it?" asked one of the gentlemen.

"Pete Lawless, the ticket agent at the International depot."

"Is that so? What did he say that was so humorous?"

"Well, last month, you know, my wife and her mother took me down to Houston, to see the Inter-State military drill."

"Yes, I remember seeing you all there."

"Well, when I was buying the tickets, Pete asked me if I was going on a pleasure trip. That struck me as being the most humorous thing I had heard in a long time."—Texas Siftings.

Russo-Greek Marriage.

As the marriage service of the Russo-Greek Church differs considerably from that of the English, a glance at its chief features may prove interesting. Nothing can be done in Russia without a passport. The orthodox Russian may neither live nor die without one. It is not to be wondered at, then, that marriage should be preceded by the production of the young people's passports and an exhaustive inquiry into their birth, breeding, station, calling, circumstances, and orthodoxy. The information thus diligently gathered by the priest is put down in the parish registry, and the first thing the bride and bridegroom and their witnesses have to do is to attest its accuracy with their signatures. Then follows the betrothal, once a separate ceremony, and not necessarily gone through in church, but now the immediate prelude to the sacrament of marriage the reason assigned for the change being that in the interval between the two ceremonies the betrothed used sometimes to quarrel and refuse to carry out their mutual promises. The betrothal takes place near the porch, the bride room standing on the right, the bride on the left. The priest takes from him a golden ring, from her a silver one, carries them to the altar, and there deposits them as a sign that the Almighty sanctifies the union. Returning to the young couple, he gives each a lighted taper and pronounces the Blessing. The clergyman invites all present to pray for them, that their love may be perfect, their faith firm, their living pure, their union fruitful. Then, with another prayer, the priest places the gold ring on the bridegroom's finger, the silver on the bride's, repeating over each three times: "N, the servant of God, is betrothed to M, the servant of God, in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, now, ever, and in all eternity, amen." Then he who stands godfather, "who answers for the agreement of the young couple, being himself experienced in married life," removes the rings from their fingers and replaces them, the gold on the bride, the silver on the bridegroom. The church holds that the lighted tapers symbolize spiritual joy and the purity of the motives by which the betrothed are inspired, while the rings signify the indissoluble bond between them. The bridegroom's ring is of gold, the bride's of silver, to show the dependence of the one on the other and her inferiority in matters of right. When the bridegroom accepts the silver ring he shows his willingness to love and cherish his wife, and condescend to her natural weakness. She, on the other hand, acquires a share in the rights, privileges and honors of her husband. The priest prays "that the Lord may confirm their betrothal in the faith, unity of thought, truth and love, and that the Angel of God may go with and before them all the days of their life." Prayer for the Czar and the Holy Synod bring the betrothal to an end. It will be observed that the lighted tapers recall a similar custom amongst the Greeks, and the learned say that the gold and silver rings represent the sun and the moon, whose union the ancient Slavonians held to be symbolized in marriage as their descendants that of Christ and the Church. For the marriage itself the young people advance to the reading desk in the center of the church, and kneel down before it on one kerchief (to signify that henceforth they have but one lot): the officiating priest asks them if they marry of free will and with a thorough appreciation of the importance of the step. Then follow prayers on behalf of the bridegroom and bride, that they may be endowed with all virtues and vouchsafed every blessing, after which the priest places on the head of each a crown "as a reward for the preservation of chastity and as a sign that they may be the originators of a numerous and honorable posterity, and also to remind them that they are first to rule their own passions and then by God's blessing have dominion upon earth, according to the word of the Lord to Adam and Eve."—Cor. London Standard.

Summer Jewelry.

Very little jewelry is used with summer toilets; only the necessary articles, such as a breastpin and cuff-buttons, are seen on ladies of refinement with the simple costumes worn in the daytime, with perhaps the exception of bangles and narrow close bracelets. The antique silver pins, coin bracelets and bangles are in favor at present, and there are also short fob chains of dull silver, with a quaint coin on one end to balance the watch and prevent it falling low inside the corsage when there is not a small pocket made for it outside, high on the left side of the dress waist. There are also many Rhine-stone brooches worn at present, while for more costly lace pins are the enameled flower pieces representing a large English violet, a wild rose, a buttercup or daisy, and on these sometimes sparkle dewdrops of diamonds, or else the stamens and pistils are diamond-tipped. Earrings are not worn in the daytime, and only those with jewels and rare stones are fashionable in the evening, with perhaps the exception of fanciful hoops of gold of different colors and of quaint workmanship, of open filigree, or curiously chased, or else beaten or hammered gold. The bangles most used are chains from which a single coin or bar with a Greek inscription may hang, or else there is a charm or coin of some kind pendant from almost every link. The gold or silver bead-like bracelets that lap on the arm are also fashionable. For full-dress occasions the bracelets are a narrow riviere of diamonds, with scarcely any setting visible, or else they are square block-shaped stones that may be of several colors—rubies, emeralds, sapphires, and diamonds—in one bracelet, or else the pearls of various tints are seen in gray, rose, cream, and white shades. Very small scarf pins and brooches of precious stones, representing bees, butterflies, flowers, crescents, etc., are thrust about irregularly in the lace on the dress corsage, and one or two may be put in the velvet bow at the throat of a dressy bonnet.—Harper's Bazar.

A lady, who suffered from weakness peculiar to her sex, in writing to a friend, said: "I tried various kidney medicines, but only found myself growing worse. A friend told me to use Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. Its effect on me was soon indicated by a clear and beautiful complexion, a freedom from aches and pains, a complete removal of nervous depression, painless regularity in habits of digestion and otherwise. I can not praise the remedy too highly as a true friend to suffering womanhood and as a strengthening medicine.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine.

The August number, abounding with edifying and pleasant reading, is already upon our table, and is always welcome. "New Zeland and the Canterbury Settlement" is the opening article, by Rev. E. Pember, B. A., with numerous illustrations. The late Lady Blanche Murphy, Rev. E. A. Rand, F. E. Weatherley, James Croll, James Buckham, Alfreton Hervey, Mrs. Alexander, J. Alex. Patten, and other favorite writers, have contributed to this number. The editor, T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., gives some excellent "Advice to Young People," and the Home Pulpit has a sermon of of his, "Is Life Worth Living?" There are two interesting serials, and sketches, essays, poems, etc.; a miscellany, interesting and instructive, and the usual record of important events, editorial comments, obituaries, etc., etc. Price 25 cents a number. $2.50 a year, postpaid. MRS. FRANK LESLIE, Publisher, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

The best interests of humanity depend on the good health of our women folks, and yet those with the brightest intellects seem to suffer most with ailments peculiar to female life. It is well to remember that the whole female system can be built up to a proper state of endurance, pimples sores, swollen limbs, monthly pains, and other indications of female disease, made to disappear and robust health of mind and body take the place of illness and distress, if timely use is made of Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. It restores the blood to perfect health, it strengthens the muscular and nervous system. It gives tone to the digestive and urinary organs. It allays all irritation of the mucous membrane. In a word, it is a perfect female medicine, and aids every function of female life. No other remedy equals it. Have your druggist get it. Take no substitue.

KITTY KENT'S TROUBLES. By Julia A. Eastman. Illustrated. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co. Price 25 cents. The Publishers have shown rare judgment in putting this excellent story into their new and popular Young Folks' Library. Miss Eastman, it will be remembered, took the prize of one thousand dollars offered several years ago by this house, for the best Sunday school story, and the present book is in every particular its equal. The heroine is the daughter of a clergyman, "a girl who was neither all good nor all bad, but partly one and partly the other," and the narrative of her trials and experiences is intended as a guide and a help to other girls who have those of the same kind to contend with; and to impress upon them the lesson that "the only road to happiness lies through the land of goodness."

Everyone should tell his neighbor that the best remedy for curing coughs and colds, and the sure cure for consumption, is Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. It is pleasant to take and very soothing and healing in its effect.

Aaron B. Turner has published the Grand Rapids Eagle for 40 years, and in the mean time has caught more fish than any other man of his age and inches, in America.

Ayer's Sarsaprilla is designed for those who need a medicine to purify their blood, build them up, increase their appetite, and rejuvenate their whole system. No other preparation so well meets this want. It touches the exact spot. Its record of forty years is one of constant triumph over disease.

GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS are the great blood purifier, liver and kidney remedy and life giving principle, a perfect renovator and invigorator of the system carrying away all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease. Every moment of our lives, every pulse of our bodies, is wearing out and is being built up anew. This work is accomplished by the blood. The blood if pure makes the entire circuit of the body every seven minutes. But if it becomes weak or vitiated and does not perform its work properly the system is actually poisoned by the worn-out matter clogging the vital organs instead of leaving the body. Cleanse the blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, sores, etc. Keep the liver in order, the blood pure, health of the system will follow. Take GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS and no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

The Republicans of Ohio have done one thing which deserves hearty commendation. They have given Keifer the "grand bounce".

And now comes the Chicago Times with a ventilation of Mr. Blaine's private life during the years he was a pedagogue in Kentucky. It has been a secret among newspaper men for some time that a big sensation could be worked up on that line. The respectable papers in both parties however, take no stock in this mud-slinging mode of warfare.

The Buffalo Courier, which occupies a similar position in Buffalo to that of the Free Press in Detroit, publishes a two column article on the Cleveland scandal, in which it literally makes mince-meat of the Governor's slanderers. It proves conclusively that every charge made by the Telegram was false, just as every fair minded man believed from the start.

St. John's turn will come next. The campaign Slanderer is abroad and as soon as the Union movement shall develop enough strength to make it dangerous, some scandal will be manufactured against him. He ran away from home when twelve years old, was married at nineteen and was a widower at twenty. The chapter of his life between twenty and twenty-five would furnish a good field for the scandal-mongers.

Uncle Josiah has made a good governor. He is not an accomplished scholar, neither is his orthography beyond criticism. But he is a strong honest, level-headed man. He has performed his duties faithfully, and it would be an act of base ingratitude to withhold from him the honor of a renomination. The opposition to him is wholly of a personal character and is confined to a few persons who have been disappointed in their political aspirations. With a hearty endorsement from both the Greenback and Democratic conventions he will stand an even chance of being elected. He will certainly run stronger than any new man who might receive the nomination, at the cost of doing an act of injustice to the present Governor.

Ben Butler has finally shied his castor into the ring. Now look out for fun. Opinions differ as to the effect of his candidacy upon the Blaine and Cleveland tickets. The Republicans claim that it renders Blaine's election sure. The Democrats argue that it will benefit Cleveland. The probabilities are these: A Butler ticket will stand a good show of carrying Massachusetts and Michigan, which will take these states out of the Blaine column. It will weaken Cleveland in New York, perhaps sufficiently to give that state to Blaine. It will injure the Republicans five votes to the Democrats one in Ohio, Illinois and Wisconsin, and render those three states almost certain for Cleveland. Butler cannot be elected by the popular vote. That is a self-evident assertion. But he may throw the election into the House, and thus make Blaine's defeat an absolute certainty. Our private opinion publicly expressed, is, that this is the real object of Butler's candidacy.

As the time approaches for holding the county conventions, candidates for the various county offices are making themselves known. Among those mentioned for clerk is the present incumbent, Thos. M. Hunter, who seems to have a decided lead for the Republican nomination. The Republican could certainly go farther and fare much worse for that nomination. Mr. Hunter has filled the position most acceptably. He is well liked both by the legal fraternity and by all others with whom he has had official or business relations. Aside from personal preferences there seems to be an excellent practical reason for keeping him in his present position. He has been associated with the building committee of the new Court House, and more than any other county official has had charge of that important work. The supervisors on that committee, both Republicans and Democrats, were all re-elected last spring, and an application of the same rule would keep Mr. Hunter in his office until the completion of the Court House.

THE EARTHQUAKE.

The Shock of Sunday the Topic of General Conversation in New York and Vicinity.

The Municipal Buildings of Brooklyn, L. I., Rocked in Such a Manner as to Sicken the Inmates—Many Amusing Instances.

COMPARISON OF OBSERVATIONS.

NEW YORK, August 12.—The shock of earthquake felt here and this neighborhood Sunday afternoon was the chief topic of conversation in this city yesterday. A comparison of observations and sensations at the time of the occurrence being made wherever friends or acquaintances met. The excitement in Yorkville was not only great but in some instances amusing. The immense breweries that are located in that section were full of workmen, who, not understanding why their lofty structures should be taken with an insane desire to reel, unless on the principle that they were full of beer, rushed into the streets with bewildered looks. In many of the houses the glass globes were shaken from the chandeliers and shivered to atoms. Most of the flats are provided with huge water tanks on the roof and under the apprehension that these tanks had bursted, the janitors rushed to the roofs while the occupants believing the boiler in the basement had given way rushed to the basement. Another impression prevailed that by some means the dynamite used in excavating Hell Gate had exploded, and there was a rush for the river only to be met with constant inquiries. Sergeant Luerson, who was at 125th street at the time said that soon after the cross-town cars were filled with panic stricken people who had fled from Ft. Lee, many of them under the belief that the palisades had fallen. At Huntington, L. I., a heavy rumbling noise was first heard, followed by such a shaking of the earth that people sitting in their houses could feel them tremble and see the rocking of vases, etc., very distinctly. It lasted about a half a minute. At Hempstead, L. I., a very preceptible shock was felt, shaking all the houses in the place. The occupants generally rushed out of doors fearing their houses were about to topple over. The shock lasted about forty seconds. At Perth Amboy, N. J., the earthquake lasted from five to ten seconds. Glass, crockery and windows were rattled, water was spilled, bricks dislodged from chimneys, but no injury to any person is reported. At Eatontown, N. J., a very severe shock was felt, doing considerable damage and running from west to east. Several women fainted, children screamed and consternation prevailed. At Long Branch a violent shock was felt and lasted a minute. Many people were driven by fear from their houses into the streets. Furniture and crockery in many houses were badly shaken up. In Brooklyn the earthquake shock continues to be the absorbing topic of conversation. Upon all sides people are exchanging their alarming experience. The municipal buildings shook and rocked in such a manner as to sicken several of the inmates, while nearly everybody sought the streets thinking the walls were crumbling. The bell ringer in the City Hall tower says the tower rocked as though about to topple over. Coroner Meininger, who had his watch in his hand at the time, says the shock lasted just seven seconds. He knew what it was, having experienced a shock in 1847. At Norwalk, Conn., the shock lasted nearly a minute, and shook the houses and furniture to such an extent that people rushed from their houses anxiously inquiring its cause. At Yonkers the earthquake was most perceptible on hill tops and along the river's edge. Its apparent motion was from north to south and its duration from five to ten seconds.

PROHIBITION.

SARATOGA, N. Y., August 12.—Political prohibition was the subject under discussion at a meeting of one hundred ministers here yesterday. Rev. Dr. S. T. Spear, although a strong Prohibitionist, declared his intention of voting for Blaine and not for St. John, for the reason that the judgment of practical voters has been hitherto overwhelmingly against a Prohibition party. The great body of temperance advocates are opposed, he thinks, to prohibiton as a distinct issue and the strict prohibitionists are so few in number compared with the whole mass of voters that by acting as a separate party, they simply annihilate their own power. Dr. Spear called attention to the fact that the liquor interest has never set up an independent ticket of Presidential candidates who would support the free use of rum, but has allied itself with one of the existing parties and through that alliance sought to secure favorable legislation. In Maine, Iowa and Kansas, he contended, the recent success of prohibition was won by the friends of temperance voting with the Republican party. Absolute prohibition did not furnish a basis broad enough for the perpetuation of a party which could ever gain control of State or Federal Government. Dr. Spear, therefore, argued in favor of an alliance with the party that most encourages temperance, and that party is led by James G. Blaine. This deduction seemed to be well received by the Doctor's brother ministers.

The Amalgamated Association.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., August 12.—The convention of Iron Workers held a session yesterday, the proceedings of which are kept secret in accordance with the rule of the organization. Secretary Martin was seen and while declining an interview remarked that the morning session was occupied mainly in discussing the report of the committee on constitution. He refused to say what alterations had been proposed or adopted. A delegate spoken to afterwards said a portion of the report had excited some very animated discussion. The difficulty between the nailers and the feeders has not yet come up, and some doubt is now expressed as to whether it will. The convention will scarcely reach final adjournment before Wednesday evening. On that day the election of officers for the coming year will be held. It is generally conceded that the present incumbents will be re-elected without opposition.

Sweeping Reduction.

NEW YORK, August 12.—A sweeping cut in rates for both day and night messages is announced by the united telegraph lines which embraces the B. & O., B. & M., and Postal Telegraph and Cable Companies. That the reduction is large can be seen from the fact that on all day messages the charge for additional words over ten in number will be one cent, instead of two cents and on night messages the rate will be fifteen cents for fifteen words and one cent for each additional word. Over 1,800 offices are now controlled by the one management as far west as Kansas City and connections are being rapidly made with for southern points.

POLITICAL.

General John A. Logan Visiting Senator Miller—John Kelly at the Grand Union, Saratoga.

ALBANY, August 11.—General John A. Logan passed through this city at twelve p. m., on his way to Herkimer, where he will visit Senator Miller for several days. A large crowd met him at the depot and Mr. Logan addressed them for some time amid the booming of cannon. At the Executive Chamber it is said no news has been received from Governor Cleveland since his departure for the north.

SARATOGA, N. Y., August 11.—There is but little new to report of the various political leaders here. Kelly, the Tammany Chief, remains locked in his room at the Grand Union most of the time and refuses to see any one except his most intimate friends and adherents. The Hon. Thomas F. Grady spent considerable time in Kelly's company, but is very close mouthed and refuses to talk with any one in regard to the course Tammany will pursue in regard to the coming canvass. In fact, he refuses to discuss politics in any shape or form. The report that Kelly wants the second place on the Butler ticket is not believed. Mr. Kelly is also very reticent and refuses to say anything in regard to politics except that Tammany must decide for itself at a meeting of the society next month as to what course it will pursue. It is said that one of the measures to be adopted to bring about the healing process between Tammany and the Clevelandites is the acceptance of Judge Hilton as the compromise candidate for the Mayoralty of New York. Butler's candidacy does not appear to trouble Cleveland men in the least. They say the General will start off with a great hurrah, but before election day his boom will have fluttered out and nothing will come of it.

Missouri Democratic State Convention.

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., August 12.—The delegates to the Democratic State Convention which is to be held here to-day have nearly all arrived. The hotel accommodations are very poor and much grumbling is heard on all sides. It is thought that the convention will finish its work and adjourn to-day, but there are several contesting delegations and the fight may be a prolonged one. It is certain that General John S. Marmaduke will be nominated for Governor. There are three ex-Confederates on the slate for nomination. General Marmaduke, Robert McCullough for Register of Lands, and D. W. McIntire for Attorney-General. Charles Hardin is named as permanent Chairman of the convention. The other officers to be nominated are Lieutenant Governor, Secretary of State, Auditor, Treasurer, Judge of the Supreme Court.

Shocking Case of Cruelty.

BUFFALO, August 11.—A shocking case of cruelty to children has just come to light at Tonawanda. Godfrey Detman, fifty years of age, married a year ago a young woman of about twenty-five years. Detman had two children by his first wife and to them the step-mother took a strong dislike. Detman, naturally brutal, was encouraged by his wife to ill-treat the children and it is claimed by neighbors repeatedly struck them senseless to the floor and beat them until blood gushed from their ears, nose and mouth, and locked them in a room and almost starved them. The case was brought to the notice of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and an inquiry resulted in the children being sent to relatives in Canada. Much excitement was caused by the brutality of the parents, and threats of violence had been made when the authorities stepped in.

Brown, Bonnell & Co.'s Mill at Youngstown Resume.

YOUNGSTOWN, O., August 11.—All of Brown, Bonnell & Co.'s mills started up this morning except the nail mill and nail factory. A steady run of three months is assured and every prospect of a permanency. This will give new life to the business interests of the city, which has recently been almost at a stand-still.

The starting of the mills give credence to the rumor that Herbert C. Ayer, who is now in Europe, will likely control the work. The only way he can do it is to lift the debt of over $1,000,000. The hearing to dissolve the corporation of Brown, Bonnell & Co., brought by the Cleveland stockholders, begins on Wednesday next. Henry Crawford, the noted Chicago lawyer, to whom Ayer transferred his interests, will fight the dissolution strenuously.

The Investigation of the Dayton, Ohio, Soldiers' Home.

DAYTON, Ohio, August 12.—The subordinate officers of the Soldiers' Home were examined by the Congressional Investigating Committee yesterday. Sergeant Leechman thought the discipline of the institution was too severe. He himself had not attempted to enforce it to the letter. Sergeant Gannon found fault with the police. He said they were too harsh in their treatment of the men. With the exception of these two witnesses and one or two others, all the testimony of the day was favorable to the present management of the Home, and was to the effect that there is no just cause for complaint. The sergeants say they have orders from General Patrick to treat the men kindly, and that whisky is the cause of most of the trouble.

A Desperado Shot.

GEORGETOWN, O., August 11.—Fred Hochberger fatally shot Warren Goodwin at the house of Samuel McNish at about ten o'clock Saturday night. Goodwin had attended a political meeting and got very drunk. Going home he stopped at McNish's house, roused the family from bed by threatening to search the house, and finally drove them into the orchard. Hochberger came riding up the road and was halted by Goodwin and searched. He then went into the house and McNish begged him to defend him. Goodwin again advanced and Hochberger caught up a double barreled shotgun and emptied both barrels into Goodwin's body. He then came here and surrendered to the officers.

A Locomotive Dashes into a Street Car.

NEW YORK, August 11.—A fatal accident occurred at the junction of Broadway and Atlantic Avenues, East New York at, midnight last night. A "wildcat" engine of the Manhattan Beach railroad dashed into a horse car, No. 22, of the Broadway horse railway which was just crossing the track. There were six passengers, the driver and conductor on the car. A passenger named McCullin, living in Brooklyn, was instantly killed and another passenger, Rudolph Smith, also of Brooklyn, was seriously injured. The car was completely wrecked. The escape of the other passengers was miraculous.

Deadly Duel.

DECATUR, Col., August 12.—William Monaghan and Edward Lindley, settled an old feud at Burleson, this State, yesterday, with pistols. Both fell dead at the first fire.

N. B. Board of Health on Wine

Dr. E. H. Janes, of the New York Board of Health says:

"I take great pleasure in testifying my approbation of the superior qualities of the Port Wine produced by Alfred Speer, of Passaic, New Jersey. After a prolonged trial I recommend his Port, Burgundy, and Claret as superior Wines for the sick and debilitated, and all those who require Wine. His claret is used in the small pox Hospital with great advantage to patients." For sale by C. A. Wright & Co.

A NARROW ESCAPE

Sleep after fatigue, and health after disease, are two of the sweetest experiences known to man. Fourteen years is a long time in which to suffer, yet Mr. Peter Lawler of Dalton, Mass., had led a miserable life for that period through the presence of stone in the bladder. That he sought in all directions for a cure is an almost superfluous statement. He did obtain temporary relief, but nothing more. Last January he called on Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who said after examination: "Mr. Lawler, you have stone in the bladder. We will first try DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY before risking an operation." A few days later the following letter passed through the Rondout postoffice:

DALTON, Mass., February 6.

Dear Dr. Kennedy:—The day after I came home I passed two gravel stones, and am doing nicely now. PETER LAWLER.

Dr. Kennedy now has the stones at his office, and they are sufficiently formidable to justify the claim that Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is the leading specific for stone in the bladder. In this letter Mr. Lawler mentions that Favorite Remedy also cured him of rheumatism. The subjoined certificate tells its own story.

OLD BERKSHIRE MILLS,
DALTON, Mass., April 27, 1882.

Mr. Peter Lawler has been a resident of this town for the past seventeen years, and in our employ for fifteen years, and in all these years he has been a good and respected citizen of the town and community. He has had some chronic disease to our knowledge for most of the time, but now claims to be, and is, in apparent good health. CHAS. O. BROWN, President.

DALTON, Mass., June 9, 1884.

Dr. Kennedy—Dear Friend:—Thinking you might like to hear again from an old patient, I am going to write you. It is now three and a half years since first I went to see you. As I told you then I was troubled with kidney disease for about fifteen years, and had seven of the best doctors to be found; but I received only temporary relief until I visited you and commenced taking your "Favorite Remedy." I continue taking the Remedy according to your directions, and now consider myself a well man. Very gratefully yours, PETER LAWLER.

Our letter of April 27, 1882, holds good as far as Mr. Lawler's testimony is concerned regarding his health. CHAS. O. BROWN.

MACON BRICK & TILE WORKS.

A Saw Mill, a Feed Mill, Sorghum Works and Brick and Tile Factory, all Under One Management.

The Macon Brick & Tile Works are located about half a mile East of Pennington's Corners in the township of Macon. The name of the establishment, although indicating the business done, does not reveal the entire scope of the works. In this article we propose to give a sketch of the works as they are and to show our readers what the business actually is. The present proprietor, Milan Sage, bought a half interest in the property of Israel Pennington and ran it one year with Mr. Wilson. Eighteen years ago in this month of August, John Niblack purchased Mr. Wilson's interest and Niblack & Sage conducted the business about twelve years when Mr. Niblack's death terminated the partnership. Since then—for the last six and one-half years—Mr. Sage has been the sole owner and manager of the concern.

The first brick machine used was a small horse power which turned out forty thousand brick the first season. One of the first tile machines built by H. Brewer & Co. in Tecumseh, was used in these works, which was a crude cheap affair compared with the Tiffany machines now sold by them. The buildings were small and worth but little. The present saw mill is a solid two story structure about forty by sixty feet, with two floors, which is equipped with the best circular saws and other modern machinery. It is one of the best mills in Southern Michigan. The engine room of brick adjoining, contains a fifty horse boiler and forty-five horse engine, which furnish all the required motive power. The saw mill is run about seven months each year. In an addition east of the engine room is a run of stone for grinding feed which is in use about two days each week. In another room near by is a sorghum crusher, which is utilized about two months each fall. Under a shed ontside is one of Cook's evaporators for boiling the sap. Although these branches of Mr. Sage's establishment make a good business, still the main spoke in the wheel is the brick and tile department, especially the latter. He will turn out about 150,000 brick this season and one and a half million of tile. Brewer's improved Tiffany tile machine is the one used. But the best machines made would fail to manufacture good tile without the kind of clay required, and here Mr. Sage has a decided advantage. His clay bank is a bonanza. It is several acres in extent and is a solid stratum of blue clay from ten to fifteen feet in depth, which is taken from the pit directly to the machine. It needs no doctoring or combination with other material. It is without doubt one of the best clay banks in the state. Having the best clay that Michigan soil affords and the best tile machines, it is still necessary to have good drying and burning appliances. He has both. He has two sheds 150 feet long by 28 feet wide and two stories high, and one smaller shed 50 by 24 feet. These sheds are provided with slate floors and the sides can be opened or closed at pleasure. The tile are corded up in these sheds to dry out four or five days and are then placed in the fire kilns. There are two kilns, built of brick, and constructed on the new down-draught plan. Mr. Sage adopted this plan after examining the kilns of the Jackson Sewer Pipe Co., and he finds it a great improvement over the old plan. He gets a much evener burn and with less fuel. The kilns hold about 30,000 tile each. He burns regularly three kilns every two weeks.

It takes fifteen cords of wood for each burning. Mr. Sage keeps all size of tile on hand in any quantity, being 2, 2½, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 8 inch diameter. The large sizes are coming into use more each year. Many farmers are taking up their small tile and putting in larger sizes. Fifteen hands are kept constantly employed in the concern. Mr. Sage adopts the plan of hireing good men and keeping them, some of his hands having been with him ten years. They have become experts in the business. Every branch of the establishment is as good as money, enterprise and skill can make it, and it bids fare to grow into a business of mammoth proportions within the next ten years.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH., AUG. 14, 1884.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Lots of excursions and picnics now days.

School commences on Monday Sept. 1st.

Johnny Trann was in Tecumseh on Tuesday last.

H. C. Wilson, of Blissfield, gave us a call on Tuesday.

Woolston Comfort has fifty acres planted to cabbage.

Danforth Keyes, of Clinton, was in town on Saturday last.

Quite a large "hen party" went to the lakes last Tuesday.

Ab. Wilson went to Battle Creek last Saturday on a business trip.

A large party of Brownvilleites will go to Sand Lake to-morrow.

A son of William Platt, of Adrian was killed in a Wisconsin mine, a few days ago.

The Opera House is engaged for a number of dates during October and November.

The Gazette says that Hudson has an esthetic drug clerk who subsists on angel's food.

The Democratic State Convention will be held at Grand Rapids next week Wednesday.

Will Carleton will contribute a long poem, "The Hero of the Tower," to the September Harper's.

Delos Whitenack and wife and Augusta Whitenack are visiting friends in the northern part of the state.

The Republican County Convention for the nomination of county officers will be held on Saturday Aug. 30th.

The Michigan & Ohio has secured through traffic arrangements between Toledo and Muskegon, by way of the Chicago & West Michigan.

The first home raised water melons were brought to town by Fred Frary and were placed on sale at Lew Herning's market. Lew keeps a full assortment of vegetables.

The Detroit Post and Tribune has been denominated the Post, and is advertised as under a new management. The matter still remains however a matter of grave doubt.

There will be a meeting of the citizens of Tecumseh and vicinity in the vacant store of John Usborn on Friday evening Aug. 15th for the purpose of organizing a "Butler club." All are invited to attend.

W. H. Passmore and family left Tecumseh Tuesday afternoon for Detroit, and on Wednesday morning they took a steamer for a trip around the lakes to Chicago. They will be absent about three weeks.

Prof. Hammond leaves town tomorrow for Mt. Pleasant where he will conduct an Institute during the succeeding week. During the last week in August he will be engaged in similar work at Richmond, Macomb Co.

Adrian Press: A word to farmers who are troubled with big or little burdock. Just cut the stalk down even with the ground and then turn on a spoonful of kerosene. It will be good bye burdock, for ever and aye.

The Macon cornet band will give a bowery dance and ice cream social at Pennington's Corners on Friday eve, Aug. 22. Good music in attendance. Dance per set 10 cents. Ice cream 10 cents. The public are cordially invited to attend.

An old cannon, a relic of the war of 1812, and of the battle of the Raisin, which for 10 or 12 years past has been owned by the Monroe foundry, has been bought by the citizens. It will be properly mounted and placed on the public square.

Elder McLean, of Morenci, has bought an unbroken mustang, and the ungodly are making bets as to which will break first, the pony's neck or the worthy pastor's piety. It might be well to state that the preacher is the favorite as against the field.

There was a slight change in the running time of trains on the M. & O. commencing Monday last. Trains now arrive at Tecumseh station as follows: East, passenger, 9:32 A. M. passenger 3:37 P. M. freight, 3:37 P. M. West, passenger, 11:39 A. M., passenger, 6:41 P. M., freight 9:32 A. M.

Few people are aware of the important work now under way in Northern Minnesota, to guard against the dangers of high-water and the inconveniences of low-water in the Mississippi River. A number of lakes in that region are being connected into a reservoir system, which is to collect and feed water as it may be required. A full account of this great engineering work is promised, with illustrative diagrams, in the September Harper's.

The Annual Reunion of three organizations, veterans of the late war, will hold a Basket Picnic at Devil's Lake, as follows: Eighteenth infantry, Tuesday, August 26th. Lenawee county soldiers and sailors Association, Wednesday, August 27th. And Posts of the G. A. R. of Southern Michigan, Thursday, August 28th. Good speakers, good music. A cordial invitation to all soldiers and citizens and their families.

Oysters next month.

Thanks to Elder Price for a basket of very nice apples.

C. T. Gridley is clerking in H. Anderson's grocery store.

The Circuit Court will not be in session until next Tuesday.

Mrs. Wm. Ives, of Jackson, is visiting her daughter Mrs. L. L. Bates.

Farmers who have thrashed complain that the wheat turns out beyond their expectations.

Lon Bean of Jonesville has been spending a few days among his old Tecumseh acquaintances.

Miss Gracie Hobart, of Jackson, is spending her school vacation with her cousin Miss Hattie Bates.

Misses Nellie and Jennie Nyland and Dena Heesen attended the Teacher's Institute at Adrian last week.

Dr. Abe Pelham of Plymouth was in town last week on a flying call. He only remained a part of one day.

Mrs. Abner Wilson entertained her neighbors one evening last week with a beautiful night blooming cereus.

Under the new order of things the gates of the cemetery will be locked at 6 P. M. each day. A very sensible move.

A steam thresher set fire to the stacks of E. M. Brown, Hudson, and burned 300 bushels of wheat and the separator.

Col. Fowler, of Reading, is going to erect a soldiers' monument in that town, at his own expense, to cost from $1,500 to $2,000.

O. C. Kneale of Fort Wayne was in town last Friday. He is still acting as general agent for the Standard Life Association.

The great Barnum show exhibits at Toledo, August 19th. The M. & O. road will sell tickets at this station on that day at greatly reduced rates.

O. H. DeSales, of Detroit, was the guest of Mr. Gainsley over Sunday. He assisted in rendering some very fine singing at the Baptist church during the evening.

L. R. Gainsley, who is now traveling for an Albany house passed Sunday at his home in this village and assisted in the singing at the Baptist church in the evening.

About twenty young men from Tecumseh spent Sunday in camp at Brighton, with Co. C. They went out on the M. & O. Saturday afternoon and returned Monday morning.

We are in receipt of a complimentary ticket to the next Michigan State Fair which will be held at Kalamazoo Sept. 15th to 19th inclusive. The fair bids fare to be the best ever held in the State.

The Tariff question is to be thoroughly discussed in the North American Review. Free Trade arguments will appear in the September number, and Protection views in the October. The ablest writers on both sides have been engaged.

Deerfield Record: Hon. B. L. Baxter of Tecumseh, is spoken of in connection with the Republican nomination for State senator from this county. Mr. B. can rely on a handsome majority in this township, where he is well known, if successful in securing the nomination.

The M. & O. railway company has completed arrangements with the Chicago & West Michigan railway to run its trains through to Grand Rapids and Muskegon, commencing with last Monday. This is a great point and gives this road what it has long desired, an outlet on Lake Michigan.

The national greenback county convention will be held at the council room in the city of Adrian, on Saturday, Aug. 16th, at 1 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of electing delegates to the state convention and also to the congressional convention.

J. W. HELME, SR.
Chairman of Co. Committee.
H. F. BAKER, Sec.

The eleventh annual meeting of Lenawee County Pioneers, will be held at Ogden Center on Wednesday, August 27th, at 10 A. M. (Refreshments basket picnic.) A cordial invitation is given to all both young and aged. There will be an address by the President and others. Also a historic account of the town by Hon. Supervisor T. McComb.

F. A. DEWEY, President.
E. D. ALLEN, Secretary.

The Clinton base ball club defeated the second nine of Tecumseh last Thursday by a score of 18 to 8.

Rev. H. F. Cochram will occupy the Baptist pulpit in this village, both morning and evening, next Sunday, Aug. 17, 1884.

There will be a lecture in the Methodist Episcopal Church next Sunday at 7.30 P. M. Subject, "Our Brother in the Orient."

A. E. Kennedy and wife returned yesterday from a few days sojourn at Devil's lake. They report having had a splendid time.

A good single buggy, newly painted, practically as good as new, can be bought at a bargain by enquiring at the HERALD office.

A large audience attended the union services in the Baptist church last Sunday evening. Rev. Babbitt gave them a good sermon.

The regular semi-monthly meeting of the W. C. T. W. will be held on Friday afternoon, at 3 o'clock in the M. E. church—room No. 1.

Sutton Minor, who is on the Cleveland, Ohio, police force, is spending his summer vacation of six days with his father in this village. It is four years since he visited Tecumseh.

Rev. Frazee, of Flint, formerly pastor of the M. E. church in Ridgeway, was in town last week visiting friends. He preached a fine sermon in the Methodist church on Sunday morning.

Fred Hillman has a class of six pupils receiving lessons on the violin. Fred is an enthusiast on the violin and is becoming quite an expert with that instrument. He ought to secure a large class.

Next Sunday will be "Missionary day" in the Methodist Episcopal church. The pastor, Rev. Geo. W. Hudson will preach a missionary sermon in the morning, and take the annual subscription for the support of mission. At 7:30 P. M. he will lecture on the social and moral condition of Oriental people.

Last Monday night the Tecumseh base ball club took the 10 o'clock train and started for a trip around the state in search of glory in the base ball arena. They intend to stay about a week. Tuesday they stopped at Greenville and vanquished that club by a score of 5 to 6, with McKinney and Heidenrich as the battery. Yesteryday the Greenvilles turned around and waxed our boys by a score of 9 to 2.

The grand annual excursion to Detroit over the Lake Shore occurs on Saturday next, August 16. Gen. Benj. Butler, Gen. West, Gen. Weaver, and other distinguished persons will address the workingmen at the Knights of Labor picnic held in Recreation Park on that day. Secure your tickets early and don't fail to go, as the rate is only $1.25, and will not likely be given again this season.

Wm. Bresie, who is chairman of the Cemetery committee in the Council has been elected sexton of the cemetery, and will serve until some good person can be found to take the position permanently. He invites owners of lots to beautify their holdings there, all sod needed for that purpose can be obtained free of charge. Several persons owning lots have not yet procured a deed and he requests all such to call upon him without delay and get a legal deed of their cemetery lots.

"Our Boys in Blue," Co. "C," 1st. Reg't., M. S. T. returned from Island Lake on Tuesday evening last, having accomplished one of the most successful tours of camp duty in the history of the company. The boys were on their good behavior both going and coming and while in camp, and their gentlemanly conduct throughout was not only a credit to themselves but to the town from which they went, and Capt. Fred B. Wood won "golden opinions" from his superior officers. Upon one occasion the following took place while Capt. Wood was approaching a tent where several officers were seated. General Hutchins, Inspector General, arose and greeted him, saying, "Capt. Wood: We at headquarters feel that although you are one of the youngest Captains in the Brigade you are one of the best."

Advertisements are news. Good, fresh advertisements, truthfully says the Albany Press, are not the least interesting and valuable portion of a newspaper. We have been told that a prominent New York journalist hoped to see the day when the profits on the circulation of his paper would be so large that he could dispense with advertising altogether. We think he is mistaken in his opinion of advertising and newspapers. Advertisements are news. They tell the readers what they want to know—where goods can be bought; what they are sold for; who has houses to rent or sell; who wishes to purchase real estate; where employment and labor can be obtained; and a thousand other things they want to know. It is an error to suppose that only editors and reporters supply news worth reading. The skillful advertiser furnishes a good share of it, and if there are any readers who fail to look over the advertising columns of their paper, they miss a great deal of information that would prove valuable to them.—Ex.

A number of the young ladies of Tecumseh held a very enjoyable picnic on the farm of Lute Bates on Tuesday last.

The Detroit Free Press will run a weekly campaign edition for twenty-five cents. Send in your orders at once and thus keep posted on the political issues.

Those wishing to attend Barnum's show at Toledo on Tuesday Aug. 19th, should take the morning train over the M. & O. The fare for the round trip, including ticket to show, is only $1.60 from Tecumseh, and then you can remain until the 20th and return on same ticket.

THE TECUMSEH SCHOOLS.

The Public Schools of this village will enter upon the work of the fall term Sept. 1, 1884. All pupils should be present at the opening of the term and continue until its close. Absence from recitations at any time is detrimental to success. Pupils will be received, however, at any time and classified according to their attainments.

The corps of teachers engaged for the coming year guarantees thorough and careful work. The greatly increased foreign attendance during the past two years attests the growing popularity of the schools outside of the district. Candidates for admission to the different grades are not required to undergo any severe examination, only such as to enable the examiner to determine the grade of work they are qualified to enter upon with greatest profit to themselves.

Those applying for admission to the High School should come prepared to pass an examination in Practical Arithmetic, Spelling, Geography, Eng. Grammar and U. S. History. Non-residents who are not fully prepared to enter the High School will find excellent advantages in the Grammar department.

The courses of study in the High School, three in number, are all laid down upon the basis prescribed by the University. Excellent facilities are offered therefor to those who wish to prepare for college. Graduates of our high school, owing to the high standard of work required, have invariably been successful in their examinations for admission to the University.

Young ladies and gentlemen who wish to fit themselves for teaching will find the work required of them suited to their wants.

All candidates for admission are requested to present themselves at the Supt. office in the Central Building for examination on Saturday, at 9 o'clock A. M. Aug. 30th. Old students are requested to be present at the same place at 4 o'clock in the afternoon for the purpose of receiving their classification.

PERSONAL.

MR. EDITOR:—My attention has been called to an article in the Detroit Evening News of Aug. 7th, purporting to be a biographical sketch of myself. So far as the facts given are concerned, they seem to have been copied or condensed from my biography given in the Lenawee County Atlas of 1874; but with sundry mistakes. It begins by adding an "s" to my name, which does not belong there. It makes me "Secretary of State," which I never was, instead of Secretary of the State Senate, for three years after the organization of the State government. Since the publication of the Atlas I have ascertained that it was not W. E. Gladstone, who was my fellow student at Glasgow, but his elder brother, Sir Thomas.

I was not the youngest member of the convention of 1835; but was one of the youngest. Hon. H. G. Wells of Kalamazoo was younger than I was by two to three years.

As to my "family history being badly kinked" as spoken of, I am not aware of any extraordinary kinks, except what arose from an attempt made some years ago to foist a party of no blood relationship of mine into my family, to the exclusion or damage of one of my own children and heirs, if that could have been accomplished.

As to a pass for myself over the M. S. & N. I. R. R., since I left the road, I value and esteem it more as an acknowledgement by the managers, that I served them faithfully and usefully whilst with them, than for any small sum it might save me in the use of the road.

As to "making lots of money and keeping it," as alleged, that is just the thing that I was never good at. During the late war, besides paying my income and other taxes, I invested all my earnings in U. S. and State war bounty bonds and notes; but most of which I foolishly used in setting up my son and others in business or I might have been worth about twice as much as I am, now. I have, however, contributed always according to my means freely to churches, parsonages, &c., was one of the heaviest contributors to the Soldiers' Monument Fund, and to a hall for lectures, concerts, &c., which was not expected to be, and is not, a paying investment.

Yours Truly,
JOHN J. ADAM.

Miss M. I. Spafford left to-day to visit Devil's Lake and surrounding country, as the guest of Miss Hattie Lane of Wheatland.

On Tuesday, Aug. 19th the Tecumseh B. B. Club will play a match game of ball with "Toledos" of the American Association. Game called at 3 P. M. Admission as usual.

Deerfield Record: Blissfield is said to be one of the political centers of the county, and is a great source for news of that sort of any denomination. It has several residents who think they would fill some of the county offices acceptably to the people and themselves, positively the latter.

Adrian Press: If there's a hotel in the country more fly constructed than the Lilly house of Tecumseh, so far as its entrance is concerned, it should be converted to a store for a man who don't advertise. The stranger who can drive up to the right place and find the ladies' entrance, if he have a lady with him, would make a good chairman of an investigating committee. If he gets to the sidewalk in front and don't tip over, he's a good driver. But possibly we are no judge in these matters, so let it go.

The Methodist Sunday School has added to its helps, a chart on rollers. It consists of a piece of cotton cloth and two rollers in a light frame of wood-work, so arranged that the cloth can be passed, by turning a crank from one roller to the other. On this cloth the Topical title, golden text, and leading thought of the current lesson, are placed to aid in reviewing the lesson. At the end of the quarter all the lessons will be there, arranged in order for quarterly review. The lettering is done with stencils by the pastor. Dr. House planned and built the frame.

Jackson Patriot, Aug. 8: The game of ball between the Tecumsehs and the Mutuals yesterday, for the most part, was one worth going a long way to see. The Tecumseh club are all ball-players, and what is more to the purpose sometimes, they all acted the part of perfect gentlemen during the game and while in the city. The game was called at 3:20 with the visitors at the bat, and up to the last half of the fifth all was well, then Blair threw the ball two feet over the catchers head at the home plate, and Morrisey from short threw low to first, which let in four unearned runs, the only ones the visitors scored. A passed ball in the seventh and a wild throw to third gave the home their only tally. The pitching of Tray was more than the visitors could fathom, while the delivery of the Tecumseh man caused the Mutual batters the utmost concern to find the ball at all, only two base hits being made off him during the game, while the visitors could only find time for a solitary base hit off Tray's pitching, the loss of the game to the Mutuals being due to the errors of Blair and Morrisey. Score, Tecumseh 4, Mutuals 1.

"FOX'S BOOK OF MARTYRS" contains many frightful stories of most agonizing suffering. But nothing, either in story or picture, can be more distressful than the sharp, severe, shooting pains daily and nightly endured by those who are martyrs to that most terrible torment, Neuralgia. To get rid of this martyrdom is the first business of all who suffer.

ATHLOPHOROS regenerates painful nerves, and drives out the horrors of Neuralgia.

ATHLOPHOROS gives health to Rheumatic sufferers whom the most skillful physicians have not been able to heal.

ATHLOPHOROS operates on the blood, muscles and joints; and dissolving the acids that cause Rheumatism, removes them from the system.

ATHLOPHOROS is pronounced by all who have tried it an infallible specific for these obstinate and painful diseases.

Read the testimony of one of the sufferers. David Little, Sumner, Benner Co., Iowa, writes:

"I am past 77 years of age, have had the Rheumatism three years and eight months, lost one-third of my weight, could not walk, but shuffled along on crutches, could not raise forearm shattered, no strength in my hands, wrists, knees or feet. But thanks be to God for your great discovery. The medicine arrived Saturday night. I took a dose Sunday morning, it struck me, and kept on with it. Monday morning I got up and dressed myself, and walked out into the kitchen without the aid of a crutch or cane, and washed them, all a happy New Year. I rest well nights, am gaining in strength and once more enjoy life. Wish I could put Athlophoros in the hands of every sufferer from this terrible disease."

If you cannot get ATHLOPHOROS of your druggist, we will send it express paid, on receipt of regular price, one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it from your druggist but if he hasn't it, do not be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us as directed.

AYER'S

restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray hair to a natural, rich brown color, or deep black, as may be desired. Its use right or red hair may be darkened, thin hair thickened, and baldness often, though not always, cured.

It checks falling of the hair, and stimulates a weak and sickly growth to vigor. It prevents and cures scurf and dandruff, and, in the case of nearly every disease peculiar to the scalp. As a Ladies' Hair Dressing, the Vigor is unequaled. It contains neither oil nor dye, renders the hair soft, glossy and silken in appearance and imparts a delicate, agreeable, and lasting perfume.

MR. C. P. BUCKER writes from Kirkwood, Ill., [illegible] and in a short time I became entirely bald. I used part of a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor, and stopped the falling [illegible] I have now a fine growth of hair, and [illegible] I should have been [illegible]

The Swinging, Gleaming Ax.

The dexterity and precision with which a first-class chopper handles an ax are quite remarkable. Trees three feet in diameter are often cut entirely through and still remain their perpendicular post until a breeze, or some sight shock topples them over. The two gaps on either side meet in a straight line. To the novice, gazing at the many strange things within the province of an ax, in cleaning a piece of farm land it is frequently a situation that the chopper shall construct his stumps to hold a yoke of water in other words, have a concave bowl on their tops to catch rain water and rot them. In the pioneer days the ax is used for nearly every purpose for which a cutting tool is required. With it the chopper trims his short picks, cuts his fuel, thickens his horse and cattle feed, sharpens up his stakes, shanties and outhouses construct his hoes and "go-devils," and even whittles his toothpicks. He gutters chips for drinking cups, axes tobacco for his pipe, throws flying bridges over winter streams, whittles out the checkers for his evening's amusement, and carves the checker board. In a word, it is a part and parcel of himself, and its song is the music of life to his ear.

After laying the pioneer the ax has a long ramble to a new home on the Pacific Slope. In California, on the Coast Range, it enters the famous redwoods, and then indeed another existence is found. In fact its position in society is elevated. Those noble trees, the colossi of the forests, are fast disappearing. But the gigantic stumps still remain to tell of their departed greatness. And enormous stumps they truly are. So much so, indeed, that the ax has stood in the word to overcome them, and the chopper assumes a position which does not compel him to attempt anywhere else. To surround the enormous swell at the base of the tree and commence operations where the average diameter of the trunk may be said to begin, he builds a platform made of stakes with cross-pieces of rails sometimes six or ten feet high, around his victim and thus strengthen, cutting above the bulge or swell. Then an expert hand will simply construct a bole in the trunk, and driving a stake into it, step up on it and commence to hold as he dexterously swings his ax.

Inside of the redwood giants is world famous, and it is a legend of the coast that a woman's ax has been applied to a work on one side of a tree, walked around it and found another chopper who had been at work for a month on the other side. Huge they are, but beautiful wood to chop, carry having the much vaulted the mysteries of unknown wrapped up in their red hearts, and the death-bell woke the forest across seas, in this land agony he plunges down some dark, wooded canyon, crushing all before him, may be heard reverberating in dull tones through the closed halls at all seasons of the year.

But it is not until they press swamps of the South and are relegated that the ax takes to water. In those dark, shadowed and moss-fringed lagoons the chopper becomes amphibious and performs his work, while sullenly balanced in one of the most treacherous of craft, a dugout canoe. Should any one think there is no science required to chop from a dugout, let the skeptic try it. A person, not an inexpert hand with an ax, but a novice at teetering in a canoe, did so and mourned. Once on the Bayou Teche he paddled up to a big tree whose great, bulbous stem reached far under water, and fastened his dugout to the victim, so did his ax and boldly stood erect in the prow. Balancing himself for a moment, until a true equilibrium was attained, he swung back his ax and made a bold stroke at the tree. The dugout attempted a somersault instantly. It shot out of the water at the stern, the effect shut under water at the bow and where the ax went is a mystery to this day.—San Francisco Call.

The Stale Pun and the Leading Editorial.

The Horse Editor of a Great Daily once introduced a Stale Pun into a Column where slumbered a Leading Editorial. The Latter, awakened by an Electric Shock from the unwelcome Intruder, rubbed his Eyes and Exclaimed: "What gave we here?"

Abashed, the Pun turned a Somersault over the Form of the Sluggish Giant with the irrelevant remark:

"Here we are again!"

Whereupon the Editorial Soliloquized thus:

"It is a Lamentable Fact that Flippant Folly and Nauseous Nonsense are rapidly taking the place of Dignity and Decorum in Journalism. Fearless Writings and Gritty Punsters now wield the Pen around which so Much once gathered the Halo of Manly Argument and Historical Splendor. It is time to cry a halt."

"Aw, yes; make me tired," said the Pun.

"A halt," continued the Editorial, "Thoughts and Vandals of this incursion threaten not only the Fabric of Legitimate Journalism, but, as we shall attempt to show further on, endanger the very Foundations of—"

"Oh, pull down your vest," said the Pun.

"Of Civil Liberty itself. The Time was when Affairs of State were discussed with a Calmness which befitted their Solemnity; when the Citadel of Error was scientifically besieged, when the Catapult of Journalism hurled huge Masses of ponderous Sarcasm against its Walls, and it was shaken to its Foundations by the Battering Ram of Truth."

At this point an Old Boy, who had been trying for some time to arrive at the "True Inwardness" of His Editorship, caught sight of the Pun, whereupon he fell into such a violent fit of Laughter that the Editorial could not proceed and soon resumed his Lethargic Condition.

Making Over Old Houses.

To those who contemplate "making over" an old house, the famous advice to candidates for maximum is supposed to be always pertinent, "don't." Just as in the one case, in spite of this prohibitory counsel, the children of idleness still continue to marry, and to be given in marriage, so in the other, notwithstanding much apparently disastrous experience, men persist in renovating, remodelling, refitting, enlarging and otherwise attempting to rejuvenate their old houses. They are likely to continue to do so as long as a love of homeliness, as long as family increase in numbers, as long as improving their own worldly condition, and the houses or their fathers bind them to their own wants, it is the commonest thing in the world, and that the making over of an old house has required a greater outlay than would have been necessary to build a new outright, which then still remains in the renovated state is a radical defect to which could easily have been avoided if the building had been new, and yet if this losing experience were well known to be the rule rather than the exception, it is probable that men would still go on trying to improve old houses by patches, amendments and compromises. There are various reasons for this apparent lack of wisdom in management.

Sentimental considerations, though often unacknowledged, are undoubtedly strong. The love of home, however homely, is an Anglo-Saxon instinct of such strength that it seems almost a sacrilege to destroy its vestiges (and, though it may be old fashioned, inconvenient and insufficient to modern needs. Moreover, it is not readily conceded that a well ready and truly constructed house is made to "make over," which is analogous to beginning the foundations and to have a new structure from raw materials. Be it lovely and well-made, it is a sacrilege to pull a house down, from turret to foundation, leaving not one stone upon another. It seems so much more desirable and wasteful than taking it down by degrees, retaining the loved fabric long at a time as the work goes on. Yet every carpenter knows that it is in convenience and less that results from working in this way far more than offset the small amount of rough material that may be saved.

In another apparent motive exists when it is desired to keep the house in the same old place. The occupants alter under the pleasing delusion that they can save cost and trouble of moving by beginning the work of renovation at once and working gradually toward the other extreme, somewhat as the plague creeps across a continent or a cyclone moves across a Western territory, the house being all the while habitable without serious annoyance. Experience is, perhaps, the most efficient teacher on this point. Those who have tried it will generally assent to the old estimate in geometrical progression, with a other term added, that a house consisting of one moving, three moving or more times, and three times remodelling.

But there is another and a more worthy and honorable side to the question of making over an old house, not additions, simply, they are always in order, since of the most enterprising houses in the world having grown with the growth of the families occupying them, their added wings and stories indicating the increased numbers and strength of the household. But aside from alterations that are additions simply, a "made over" house has often run at a stage over, and now one, it has been lived in, its merits and defects, both of which exist in every house that ever was built, have become discovered by actual use and if the right changes are made in the right way it will fit its occupants after its conversion better than a new one. It has somewhat the same superiority, to set forth great things by small, which a suit of clothes that is made to order and tried on before completion, has over a suit that is bought "ready-made."

When a thorough remodeling is undertaken there are two courses, at opposite extremes, one of which, especially as regards the exterior, should always be pursued. Contrary to the common rule, there is danger rather than safety in the middle course. Either the style of the old, provided it ever had a style, should be religiously maintained and reproduced in the additions, no matter how antiquated it may be, or else the old should be treated with entire contempt, making no pretense of preserving any part which is not in harmony with the new. As American architecture has unfortunately little that is worth saving for its own sake, with the rare exceptions that may have historical value, the latter is more likely to be the most promising route, especially when it will cost more to "match" the details of the old work than to make new for the whole.—Exchange.

Laborers in Mexico.

Laborers in Mexico fare hard. Thirty cents a day is the common rate of wages, and to that the natives are content to perform the heaviest labor. Farm work, mining, factory labor and domestic service are all alike paid low. The custom of making loans to laborers to be repaid by work is common and tends materially to prevent their social advancement. The large landowners are thus enabled to retain their hands as long as they desire. The latter are not allowed to leave their employment till they have paid their debts, and as that is generally impossible out of wages which are barely enough for support, the debtor continues a virtual slave to his life's end.—Galveston News.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest remedy of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is exerted over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame, every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it cures pain with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have never used this ointment, to honestly state their experience, which is equivalent to saying that if but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. The Rescued Arctic Explorers.

Our telegraph news gives the glad tidings that the search expedition that sailed last winter for the relief of Lieutenant Greely and his party, who have now been absent in Lady Franklin Bay since 1882, and whose safety has been very doubtful, has been a complete success. The precarious position that the Greely party had been placed in was due to the blunders of the Navy Department last year.

In the spring of 1882 the United States Government dispatched a small party of explorers under Lieutenant Greely to Franklin Bay, to remain until the autumn of 1883 to make scientific observations in accordance with the plans determined by the International Arctic Association. As is well known, the other nations succeeded in bringing safely back their respective parties last fall, while the party sent to relieve the American expedition only perpetrated a series of unparalleled blunders, and returned to leave Greely to battle with his second winter in the highest latitude ever reached by any expedition.

The popular notion is that Arctic exploration is reckless, foolish and wasteful, of little importance to the world, and that the men who risk their lives in going to the Arctic regions are hardly worth the risk and expense of rescue. The truth is, that these men devote themselves to the cause of science, and to the benefit of their fellow-men. They go to observe physical phenomena under extreme and singular circumstances, and when fortunate enough to return they give most valuable knowledge to the world. By practical scientists the great value and importance of scientific observations in the Arctic regions have long been acknowledged. Nothing is more necessary for us to thoroughly understand in a country which, like ours, stretches over such an extent of latitude than meteorology. This can not be thoroughly understood, or its laws defined, until we obtain a more extensive knowledge of the physical condition of the polar basin. The unsolved problems of electricity and magnetism are also of world wide interest. Hence all geographical societies and scientific bodies have paid special attention to the scientific equipment of all the recent Arctic expeditions; and while much light has been thrown on purely geographical questions, important results have also been obtained in various departments of physical science.

Hitherto, however, these results have been too isolated and scattered to admit of comprehensive generalization. Each expedition has worked on its own particular lines, without reference to any common system by which alone the key to the interpretation of the phenomena could be obtained. To remedy this state of things the lamented Lieutenant Weyprecht, the discoverer of Josef Land, suggested that the money spent in fitting out expeditions for the purpose of discovering new lands, or attempting to reach the pole, would be more usefully applied in making a thorough physical investigation, on the basis of a common plan, of the lands already discovered. He further proposed that, to obtain this object, the North Pole should be encircled by a corona of fixed observatories, and that two stations should be established in the Antartic Seas. Mr. William Lee Howard, the Arctic voyager, strongly pushed this matter at the International Geographical Congress, and was a strong advocate of Lieutenant Weyprecht's plan. The value of this suggestion was fully recognized by Count Wilczek, a well-known and munificent patron of Arctic enterprise, and to his generous support and active co-operation the fulfilment of the scheme is largely due. Finally the plan was submitted to the Meteorological Congress at Rome. It there met with most favorable consideration, and was referred to an International Polar Conference, which was held at Hamburg; the States represented being France, Holland, Germany, Austria, Russia, Sweden, Norway and Denmark.

The scheme was at last put upon its feet by the promise of the United States to establish two stations, and it was then announced that the eight stations required were secured. By July, 1881, the final arrangements were completed. It was determined that the observations should be commenced at all the stations in the polar regions, as well as those in the temperate zones, as soon as possible after August 1, 1882, and that they should be continued, as far as practicable, until September 1, 1883.

Denmark was established at Godthaab; America sent Greely to Lady Franklin Bay, in Smith Sound (the northernmost of all the stations), Germany was stationed at Cumberland Sound, on the west side of Davis Strait, and England at Fort Rae, in the heart of the Hudson's Bay Territory, near the Great Slave Lake. The United States also had a station at Point Barrow; Russia took up her stand at the mouth of the Lena, and Holland occupied Dickson's Haven, the Russian branch station being at Moller Bay, Nova Zembia. Norway took an easy station at Bosekop, in the Alten Fjord; Sweden selected Spitzbergen, and Austria garrisoned Jan Mayen Island, the most dreary station of the lot, being only a volcano rising directly out of the Arctic Ocean, and when not entirely surrounded by ice is enveloped in a thick, cold fog.

Allan Pinkerton's Advice.

Mr. Pinkerton—old Allan, as he was called by his friends—took a great interest in the welfare of young men, and we remember a conversation with him held several years ago under the shade of a noble maple in the beautiful garden of his Monroe street home, which left a lasting impression, and a reproduction of which may encourage many struggling men.

"My youth," said Mr. Pinkerton, "was a continuous struggle. I knew but little of the joys of childhood; my fate was work. When I was old enough to see the distinction between right and wrong—and I think if children are properly educated they will soon realize the difference—I obeyed the dictates of my conscience, and to that I ascribe my success in life. No matter how many temptations were placed in my way I adhered to my principles. In political matters conscience was my guide. Early in life I enlisted in the cause of my native country's (Scotland) freedom and when I came to the United States I became a red-hot abolitionist. I have erred many times in my life, but I have endeavored to right every wrong unwittingly committed.

"Many young men have come to me applying for advice and assistance. My advice has been the same in every instance. If a young man is willing to work and to lead an honest life he will be successful. I have given pecuniary assistance to some applicants, and I acted unwisely. A healthy young man needs no pecuniary assistance from his friends if he has got the get-up in him which makes men of sound principles.

"A number of young men just starting out in life asked me for advice as to what profession or business they should enter. In every instance I admonished them to steer clear of counting-rooms and stores. My experience has taught me that clerks of every description are the most unhappy mortals, as they are expected to live and dress well on small salaries. I know of hundreds of clerks in Chicago who are compelled to steal and pilfer in order to keep up appearances, while industrious young mechanics save a little money every week in the year.

"Many young men from the country are ruined in large cities, and my men could tell you of scores of promising young gentlemen whose honorable existence ended at the bridewell. They came to Chicago with the expectation of finding work, and being disappointed they fell into the hands of thieves and thugs. It seems to me that the newspapers of the country should warn young men against coming to large cities. Of course, some are successful, but to the great majority the step is fraught with danger.

"Young women also should avoid large cities. When they arrive from their country homes they are innocent, and easily fall victims to the professional 'mashers' of the cities. Girls can earn more money in small towns and cities. Thousands of Chicago factory girls and clerks in the dry-goods stores can not earn more than five dollars per week. They have to pay from one to two dollars room-rent per week, which leaves them a balance of three dollars for board and dress. The result of such a life is apparent. Look at our factory girls. Starvation is written upon their faces, or if they escape the marks of hunger you can notice the marks of a shameful life. I have made several efforts to induce the newspapers to call attention to this state of affairs, but have been only partially successful."

The man who gave this timely advice is now at rest forever; but his words should be heeded by the young people of our city and State. We have seen much of the sufferings of strangers in Chicago and other large cities, and can answer for the truth of Mr. Pinkerton's statements. Every year Iowa sends a number of her young men and women to the large cities, and in nine cases out of ten they return penniless and ruined, while at home or in the West they would become valuable and respected citizens.—Burlington Hawkeye.

The Judge Has Been a Boy.

"I vant a bermit to gill Schneider's tog," said a German woman at the Tombs yesterday.

"Did the dog bite you?" asked the magistrate.

"No, he vos bite my boy Fritz, who vos blaying in de yard, and de dog chased him out and bit der seat from de boy's bants."

"Then the boy wasn't bit at all?"

"No, only de bants."

"Then, there's no danger of hydrophobia," said the Judge.

"But he behaves so funny since," continued the anxious mother. "He can't bear the sight of vater, and he won't drink nodding else but soda vater, root per und such things, und ice cream und cake he eats all day long."

"I know lots of little boys that would try to become insane if they knew they would be fed on ice-cream, cake and soda water," said the Judge, smilingly.

"Maybe ven I get a doctor," said the woman.

"Now, don't do that," said the Judge, interrupting. "The only medicine he needs is taking him across the knees and giving him a strapping whenever he wont do as he is told."

"Vos you sure he wos not grazy?" anxiously inquired the mother.

"I am positive that he is playing you for all you are worth."

"Oh, Fritz, Fritz, vait till I come home," said the woman as she made a bee-line for the door.—N. Y. World.

ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP

FOUR POINTS
Prepared by an entirely NEW METHOD.
Composed of the PUREST MATERIALS.
WILL NOT INJURE THE FABRIC,
WILL CLEANSE WITHOUT RUBBING.

You can do a large washing without any rubbing—use the boiling process instead. You can save Time, Labor, Fuel, Soap and Clothing.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.

Cut up fine and dissolve one half bar in half gallon of hot water. Pour half this dissolved soap into a tub with just sufficient hot water to cover a boiler full of clothes. Then put the clothes in to soak, rubbing plenty of soap in the most soiled parts. Be sure that the soaking water is hot; soak the clothes half an hour; stir them occasionally so that they may get the full benefit of the hot suds; pour the remainder of the dissolved soap into the boiler, adding sufficient water to cover the clothes; wring them lightly out of the suds. Soap the stained spots and place loosely in the boiler; boil 10 to 20 minutes, rinse well, blue and hang to dry. Do not crowd the boiler too full. The same boiling water may be used for further boiling by adding a little soap to each boiler-full of clothes. Fannels and prints should not be boiled, only a little rubbing required after soaking. This soap will cleanse clothing as thoroughly as any other without the use of the boiler. We prefer and recommend the boiling process as in itself a cleansing process, saving labor, the wear of the wash-board, and being the best disinfectant known, it is easier to boil the dirt out than to rub it out. You can cleanse perfectly the finest fabric without injury; the finest point lace and lace curtains. Soak point lace in hot suds made with this soap, press water out with the hand; boil 3 to 5 minutes in clean suds made with this soap, rinse thoroughly, press carefully between the folds of a towel, roll in a dry towel, and iron between pieces of old flannel. Soak curtains 10 to 30 minutes and boil 5 to 20 minutes, rinse, stretch on frame, or pin every scallop to carpet over a sheet to dry; no ironing required.

Be sure and ask for ELECTRIC-LIGHT SOAP, and take no other.

Sold by leading wholesale and retail grocers everywhere. Dealers may obtain our goods upon application. ELECTRIC SOAP MANUFACTURING CO., Indianapolis, Ind., and 26-28 South Water St., Chicago, Ill.

Miss Estelle Miller commenced teaching in the Lewis district last Monday. We bespeak for this district an excellent school.

Miss Cora Jackson returned from Leslie last Saturday.

The Union S. School is making arrangements for a picnic in the near future.

We understand that considerable enthusiasm was manifested by the Unionists at Grange Hall, Saturday evening Aug. 16.

Mrs. Milan Sage is visiting her brother at Vermontville.

Rev. Mr. Sutton addressed the people of Macon on the issues of the Union party, Tuesday evening, Aug. 19

Samuel Robinson died at his home in Saline township Aug. 13. Mr. Robinson settled in Washtenaw Co. in an early day, and by hard labor has become a well-to-do farmer. He was a man of unusual integrity of character, always kind and generous to the poor, and active in promoting the welfare of the community in which he lived. These qualities brought about him a large circle of friends, who deeply mourn the loss of this member of society. The funeral was held at the late residence of the deceased, on Friday, Aug. 15., Rev. Mr. Dutton officiating.

On Friday afternoon of last week, a serious calamity befell Frank Kidder, of Saline township. While ploughing Mr. Kidder was kicked in the face by one of his horses. The injuries received were so great that he lived only till Sunday evening. Mr. Kidder leaves a wife and one child.

TIPTON TATTLE.

Rumors are afloat of tall lecturing to be inaugurated at an early day when the people of this vicinity are to have their eyes opened on the great questions of the day by the blazing luminaries sent out to tell us how to vote at the coming election.

House moving has prevailed from the corners to the west end of the village of late, and the friends of the article moved are to be congratulated on the success of the enterprise.

A new blacksmith firm has consolidated and struck out in business in the shop formerly kept by Mr. Mudge. Not less than six professional blacksmiths now reside at Tipton.

Mr. and Mrs. Pangburn are greatly elated having been awarded an eleven pound boy. Selah. He now employs an additional workman in his busy shop.

Lawyer Stearns, of the Adrian Press, visited friends here first of this week and attended the Methodist church Sabbath morning.

The Methodist Sunday School had a grand time at Sand Lake last Saturday when about two hundred persons joined the picnic dinner.

The ever flowing stream at Conlin's corner is a great luxury these dry and scorching days, and scores repair to this crystal fount daily to quench their raging thirst.

HOLLOWAY HICKUPS.

Holloway still lives and things are booming. We notice that the Doctor is getting his drug store nearly completed and has already got in enough poison to kill the whole community.

We are glad to see neighbor Gilman falling into line, (viz.) moving his harness shop out on a line with the stores; now the next thing in order is a side walk and then look out for city airs.

Our R. R. is doing a slashing business at present, especially in the line of killing hogs. Wm. Doty had three fine hogs killed one day last week, and common report has it that Al. Macham has got them buried clear across his farm as thick as fence posts. But that don't hurt Al.; he has got lots of them left.

Geo. Holloway has just finished moving his large grain barn from the middle of his farm up by the side of his other barns, which is a decided improvement.

Rev. H. D. Allen, of Hanover, preached at the Friends church, Raisin Center, on the 10th.

Quite a sensation was created the other morning in our usually quiet village by the appearance of W. J. Holdridge with a bottle in his hand going for the doctor as lively as a man of his heft generally gets there. Upon inqury it was ascertained that Frank H. had procured a bottle of medicine of Dr. Begel on the day previous and decided to take a dose the first thing in the morning. But through mistake got hold of a bottle of liniment which had been put up in Adrian. The doctor immediately prescribed an emetic and then proceeded to call up by telephone the Adrian druggist. It being before business hours there was some delay in getting an answer but it came at last stating that it was perfectly harmless and we all rejoiced. But it was too late, Frank had taken that awful emetic and it had to come up. But then it is all right for it may save him from a fit of ague.

The first runaway of the season occurred here on Saturday afternoon. A team belonging to Kelly, Horsie & Co. were left standing at the door of the meat market while the driver went inside to hang up some meat and finding themselves at liberty started off at a lively gate over dry goods boxes and barrels which frightened them into a good sharp run. They made straight for the depot where they struck the platform turning the wagon over and demolishing things generally. Fortunately no one was hurt and the horses escaped with a few scratches.

Mrs. Phebe Chatfield, the subject of this sketch, was born in Durham, Greene, Co., N. Y., Aug. 8, 1811, died at her home in Raisin, Aug. 14, 1884. Her maiden name was Doty, being a sister of Wm. Doty. She was married to Eli Chatfield, Feb. 2, 1831, and in 1833 they moved to Michigan, which at that time was a wilderness, and located 80 acres of land on section 25 in Raisin, to which they afterward added 20 acres, where they spent the remainder of their days. We have often thought as we have listened as she narrated some of the hardships of pioneer life that it might well be said of her that she had borne the burden and heat of the day, and we rejoice to know that there is a land where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. At an early age she united with the Presbyterian church, of which she remained an acceptable member until transferred to the church triumphant above. She was the last surviving charter member of the Raisin church, and will long be remembered by those with whom she has been identified in the work of the Master. Her husband, Eli Chatfield, died June 3, 1866, since which she has lived a widow. The past year has been one of misfortune and great suffering to her. July 17, '83, she fell while walking in the yard sustaining a fracture of the forearm which came near terminating fatally. Again, in 1884, she fell on the ice fracturing her hip and receiving at the same time severe injury of the spine which resulted in her death. For the last few weeks she has been the greatest sufferer we ever knew, and when the final change came we said in our heart, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, yea from henceforth; they rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

Some of the members of the Union club went to hear the lecture given by E. B. Sutton at Macon corners Tuesday evening. Mr. Sutton will lecture at the Grange hall, Macon, on next Friday evening, Aug. 22.

MACON CENTER.

The temperance ball is rolling in Macon. The Rev. Mr. Rapp, Dr. Loree, and the Hon. G. P. Waring of Ridgeway addressed the people at the Center Saturday evening on the subject of temperance, and in the interest of the Union Party. The Glee Club of Ridgeway gave us some fine singing.

The Rev. Mr. Sutton, State Lecturer addressed the people of Macon Tuesday evening and made a very telling speech to a very large audience, and will address the people at Grange Hall, Friday evening, Aug. 22. None should fail to hear him.

At the regular meeting of Macon Grange, Friday, Aug. 15th, it was resolved that we open our Public Literary entertainments for the fall and winter with an ice cream social which will be held Friday evening, Aug. 29th. All are cordially invited to come out and help to make the meeting what they are designed for, viz: The education and elevation of the agricultural classes, and the building up of society generally. Committee of arrangements for the social, Mrs. Lester Osgood, Mrs. Edwin Howell, Mrs. Richard Clarkson, Mrs. John Sherman, Mrs. Matthew Yates, Mrs. Wm. R. Wilson, Mrs. C. Mead, Mrs. J. W. Baker.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

The silence book has been opened and the name, Mary Morrison, recorded on a new page as one gone beyond weariness, to complete her seventeenth summer. Death only added beauty to her fair face, and those left to grieve are spared dreary memories of parting. Schoolmates dropped tears and bouquets into her early grave and her life has been such as others to her stricken family. She was a niece of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Woodin, who attended her funeral, the first at the new Methodist church, and which Elder Smith of Napoleon made a dedicating lesson.

Just now pic-nics are patronized, and farmer gatherings at Clark's and Devil's lake have exceeded all former ones. The summer is lengthened by pieces lost from seasons gone before, and the wish to enjoy past times is epidemic. Judging from experiences tourists relate, camping out differs from cholera, chiefly because the fatal disease has fewer cramps.

FIRST ACCIDENT ON THE M. & O.

We clip the following particulars of the first accident which has occurred on the M. & O. last Thursday from the Marshall Statesman.

The first severe accident which has yet occurred on the Michigan & Ohio railway took place about one-half mile west of this city, yesterday morning. Train No. 33, which arrives at 7.32, was coming from Battle Creek at the rate of fifteen miles an hour and had just whistled for this station when the wheels of the truck beneath the tender jumped the track, and in an instant all was confusion. The locomotive ran into a hollow north of the track and turned completely over, falling on the tender and smashing it to atoms. The baggage car was hurled into the air with frightful momentum and one end landed on a neigboring telegraph pole. The pole pierced it and remained protruding from the top of the car. The car was landed directly upon the ruins of both locomotive and tender. Two passenger coaches were dismantled of their trucks and laid crosswise of the track in an upright position. The rest of the train, five coaches, were in the usual condition.

The fireman was thrown from the cabin by the force of the shock to the ground, directly against a barbed wire fence. He declares that the whole affair occurred in a second, and that he only remembers being at his post, while the next instant, without an effort on his own part, he was flying through the air. He picked himself up, none the worse for his adventure besides a few bruises. The engineer, Thomas Russell, of Dunkirk, N. Y., was not so fortunate. Although thrown from the locomotive, he landed but a few feet away. In an unconscious condition he was found, with the escaping steam from the engine pouring over him. He was carried to the Tremont house, where an examination by Dr. J. F. Smiley showed some severe scalp wounds and his left arm broken. He will live, and at last accounts was more comfortable than at first.

The conductor, Harry Buck, was with the baggageman in the baggage car, and both escaped with a few scratches. The coaches were thrown in such shape that no passengers were injured. They alighted from the cars as soon as they settled to a permanent position, as coolly as old veterans, and calmly surveyed the wreck. When the condition of the engineer was ascertained he was tenderly cared for. The travelers must have been amazed at their own safety when they examined the dismantled engine and baggage car. The track was torn up, the ties split and cut into kindling wood and the rails bent as though they were made of whalebone. Taken altogether it was the most bewildering scene of destruction of property, unaccompanied by loss of life, that our citizens ever saw or will see.

The train contained about sixty passengers, all from Battle Creek. It was an excursion given by the Knights of Pythias to Detroit, and passengers were to be picked up at intervening stations. A portion of the excursionists went back to Battle Creek by a train which arrived when the news of the wreck was received, while others preferred to remain here and go to Detroit by the afternoon train.

The scene of the accident was soon a lively one. Hundreds of spectators hurried out, walking the entire distance, while numbers of carriages were used to transport the curious. A wrecking train was sent out from the shops here and operations commenced for clearing away the debris. In the afternoon a construction train arrived bearing forty Italians, who were set to work. It is a work of considerable time, however, and if the track is cleared to-day it will be surprising. The damage will doubtless amount to $25,000 and the company are lucky that no lives were lost.

The exact cause of the accident is a mystery. Many think the rails had slightly spread, while others think a brake-beam must have dropped.

The eleventh annual meeting of Lenawee County Pioneers, will be held at Ogden Center on Wednesday, August 27th, at 10 A. M. Refreshments on the picnic. A cordial invitation is given to all both young and aged. There will be an address by the President and others. Also a historic account of the town by Hon. Supervisor T. McComb.

F. A. DEWEY, President.
E. D. ALLEN, Secretary.

The receipts of wheat at all the commercial centers indicate that the farmers are either disposed or obliged to take low prices for their grain. No. 2 Red in Toledo sold at 81½c for Aug. In Detroit 84½c was the closing figure for spot No. 2 Red. The tendency of prices is still downward, and nothing but a cutting short of receipts and an export and large consumptive demand can create any material advance.

Rev. E. B. Sutton will speak in this county, on prohibition, as follows: Thursday eve., Aug. 21, at Holloway station. Friday eve., Grange Hall, Macon; Saturday afternoon and eve., Raisin Valley; Sabbath, 10½ at Friends church in Raisin Center; Sabbath 3 P. M., Palmyra village; Sabbath eve., at the M. P. church, of Wellsville; Monday eve., at Burnham's hall, in Deerfield.

Subject of sermon at the Christian church in East Ridgeway next Sunday morning will be "The Field of Blood, applied to alcoholism in national and state powers that be."

General News Summary.

Interesting Home and Foreign News.

DOMESTIC.

CAPTAIN WILSON, of the bark Fluorine, which arrived at Philadelphia from Lisbon on the 15th, reports that when off Julianesha, in latitude 69 deg. 30 min. N., longitude 46 deg. 7 min. W., the lower part of a tent was found by an Esquimau on a piece of floe or drift ice, the upper part of which seemed to have been blown away; also the ends of a stove or provision cask, marked "Jeannette;" the contents of the stove were also marked; a chart and part of a check-book on the Bank of California, both signed by De Long; a pair of oiled trousers of Louis Noros'; a bearskin which covered something of the size and shape of a human corpse, but the Esquimau could not remove the skin to ascertain what was under it.

THREE negroes named Phillips, Jackson and Girod, being put off a freight train near Cass Station, Ga., on the 15th, fired into the cars. Citizens pursued them and ordered them to halt. The latter fired at the posse who returned the fire and all three negroes were shot dead.

ELI GEORGE and Buck Gebhardt, Pittsburgh pugilists, engaged in a bare knuckle prize fight at Lawrenceville, Pa., on the 15th for a purse of $700. The fight took place in a tenement house and was won by Gebhardt in twenty-seven rounds. Both men were terribly punished. George was so weak that he was unable to leave the room.

FOURTEEN coal cars went through a bridge on the extension of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad near Williamsport, Pa., on the 15th, and were completely wrecked. Conductor Reichelderfer was badly injured, and Brakeman James McCarty slightly injured.

AT a reunion of ex-Confederate soldiers at Keeversville, N. C., on the 15th, eight thousand people were present. Senator Ransom delivered an oration, in which he declared it would be a privilege and honor to battle under the stars and stripes. Every reference to the Union was applauded. The whole town was decorated with Union and Confederate flags, and all ex-Union soldiers were invited to participate.

AS Turnkey William Aiken was entering the large door of the county jail at Newark, O., on the 14th for the purpose of locking up the prisoners for the night, he was struck on the head with a bed slat by a prisoner and knocked senseless. The prisoners, seven in all, then made good their escape. Sullivan, the noted burglar, bigamist and horse thief, was among the number. One of the men was afterwards captured.

PETER FOLEY was arrested at Boscobel, Wis., on the 15th, on the charge of eloping with Miss Childs, aged fourteen years. The next morning he was found dead in the lock-up with two bullet holes in his right temple. He leaves a wife and child in the town of Scott, Wis.

AT Pittsburgh on the 15th a writ of execution was issued on the judgment recovered by the Allegheny Valley Railroad Company against the heirs of William Phillip, deceased, for $473,000, and a levy will be made on the property of the defendants. The famous litigation between the railroad company and the heirs of the deceased president has been in the courts for years, and has attracted wide-spread attention.

BUSINESS failures reported for the seven days ended the 15th numbered in the United States 203, Canada 17; total 220, as against 233 the previous week.

JOHN MCMAHON, of Brooklyn, for nine years engineer of the building No. 23 Wall Street, New York, occupied by the Leather Manufacturers' National Bank, has absconded with a package containing $20,000, with which he was sent to the Adams Express office. The money consisted of $8,000 in $20 notes of the bank's own issue and $12,000 in bills of various denominations and issues. The package was addressed to a bank at Evansville, Indiana. McMahon was assistant porter and messenger, being a person thoroughly trusted.

Two entire blocks, embracing fifteen places of business at Lampasas, Texas, burned on the 15th. Loss estimated at $200,000; half covered by insurance.

AT Jacksonville, Tex., on the 15th a freight train ran into a hand-car on which were John Gray, a section hand, two ladies, three little children and three section men. They all jumped from the hand car except Mrs. Gray and her two little girls, aged five and seven. Mrs. Gray was very badly bruised, and the entire train passed over the children, cutting off both legs of the elder and one of the other. They will die.

FIVE hundred thousand dollars of British gold bars and $125,000 of American gold coin arrived at New York from Europe on the 16th.

THE will of the late Bishop Matthew Simpson, admitted to probate at Philadelphia on the 15th, bequeaths to the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church one seventh of his estate, in trust for the endowment of an Episcopal chair for a Bishop who shall reside in Philadelphia, provided that, including this bequest, the sum of $50,000 be subscribed for this purpose before the meeting of the next general conference. The remainder of the estate, valued at $100,000, is bequeathed to the Bishop's wife and children.

A ROW-boat containing Miss Belle Ivers, of Marlborough, Mass., and John Lumbie, of Theresa, Ky., was run down by a steamer near Clayton, N. Y., on the 15th. Miss Ivers was drowned, but Lumbie was rescued.

A BROKEN flange caused the derailing of the west-bound train on the Louisville & Cincinnati Short Line, between Zion and Verona, on the night of the 15th. Engineer Hullnagle and Fireman Carr received probably fatal injuries. None of the passengers were hurt.

THE Chief Signal Officer has secured the consent of the Postmaster General to hoist a cold wave flag on the postoffice buildings throughout the country as a signal for the benefit of farmers and others of the approach of cold waves. It will remain in position twenty-four hours after being hoisted.

ON account of depression in trade the green bottle manufacturers at Pittsburgh have decided not to resume the operation of the factories until October 1, which is one month later than usual. The window glass factories will all start about September 1.

ALSON and Graves, two of the convicts who recently escaped from the Kentucky penitentiary, were killed on the 17th by a Sheriff's posse in Woodford County, after a desperate fight, in which George Cassell, one of the posse, was fatally shot. Each of the convicts was armed with a needle gun and five pistols.

A MARVELOUS STORY

TOLD IN TWO LETTERS.

FROM THE SON: "28 Cedar St., New York, Oct. 2, 1882.

"Gentlemen—My father resides at Glover, Vt. He has been a great sufferer from scrofula, and the inclosed letter will tell you what a marvelous effect has had in his case. I think his blood must have constituted the humor for at least 40 years, but it did not show, except in the form of a scrofulous sore on the arm, until about five years ago. From a few spots it soon appeared at that time, it gradually spread to cover his entire body. I assure you he was terribly affected, just an object of pity, when he began using your medicine. Now, there are few men of the age who enjoy as good health as he has. I could easily name fifty persons who would testify to the facts in his case.

Yours truly, W. M. PHILLIPS."

FROM THE FATHER: "It is both a pleasure and a duty for me to state to you the benefit I have derived from the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Six months ago I was completely covered with a terrible humor and scrofulous sores. The humor caused an incessant and intolerable itching, and the skin cracked so as to cause the blood to flow in many places whenever I moved. My sufferings were great, and my life a burden. I commenced the use of the SARSAPARILLA in April last, and have used it regularly since that time. My condition began to improve at once. The sores have all healed, and I feel perfectly well in every respect—being now able to do a good day's work, although 73 years of age. Many inquire what has wrought such a cure in my case, and I tell them as I have here tried to tell you, AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. Glover, Vt., Oct. 21, 1882. Yours gratefully,

HIRAM PHILLIPS."

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA cures Scrofula and all Scrofulous Complaints, Erysipelas, Eczema, Ringworm, Blotches, Sores, Boils, Tumors, and Eruptions of the Skin. It clears the blood of all impurities, aids digestion, stimulates the action of the bowels, and thus restores vitality and strengthens the whole system.

How Watch Cases are Made.

In 1875, thirteen men comprised the entire working force used in the manufacture of the James Boss' Gold Watch Case. Now over five hundred are employed, and the number is constantly increasing. The reason of this increase is this: In the James Boss' Gold Watch Case all the metal in sight and subject to wear is solid gold, while the remainder, which only lends strength to the case, is of stronger metal than gold, giving gold where gold is needed, and strong, elastic metal where strength and elasticity are needed, a combination producing a watch case better than solid gold and at ONE-HALF the cost.

TRADE MARK

Over 200,000 of these cases have been sold, and every jeweler in the country can testify to their quality and merit.

LUDINGTON, MICH., Dec. 5, 1882.

E. W. Marsh, of the Democrat, bought a Jas. Boss' Gold Watch case 18 years ago, and carried it until a short time ago, when I purchased it, and sold it to a customer. The case shows no signs of wear, except that natural to any case, and I am satisfied can be safely guaranteed for at least ten years more. I have sold the James Boss' Gold Watch Case for many years, and the parties who bought the first ones are carrying them to-day, as well satisfied as though they had bought a solid gold case costing twice the money. I regard them as the only cases of this kind a jeweler should sell who desires to give his customers the worth of their money or values his reputation.

HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA

Is designed to meet the wants of a large portion of our people who are either too poor to employ a physician, or are too far removed to easily call one, and a still larger class who are not sick enough to require medical advice, and yet are out of sorts and need a medicine to build them up, give them an appetite, purify their blood, and oil up the machinery of their bodies so it will do its duty willingly. No other article takes hold of the system and hits exactly the spot like

It works like magic, reaching every part of the human body through the blood, giving to all renewed life and energy.

My friend, you need not take our word. Ask your neighbor, who has just taken one bottle. He will tell you that "It's the best dollar I ever invested."

LEBANON, N. H., Feb. 19, 1879.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Dear Sirs—Although greatly prejudiced against patent medicines in general, I was induced, from the excellent reports I had heard of your Sarsaparilla, to try a bottle, last December, for dyspepsia and general prostration, and I have received very gratifying results from its use. I am now using the second bottle, and consider it a very valuable remedy for indigestion and its attendant troubles.

Yours truly,
F. C. CHURCHILL,

WABASH ROUTE!

THE BUSINESS MAN

When he travels wants to go quick, wants to be comfortable, wants to arrive at destination on time, in fact, wants a strictly business trip, and consequently takes the popular Wabash Route, feeling that he is sure to meet his engagements and continue to prosper and be happy.

THE TOURIST

Has long since chosen the Wabash as the favorite route to all the summer resorts of the East, North and West, and winter resorts of the South, as the Company has for years provided better accommodations and more attractions than any of its competitors for this class of travel. Tourist Tickets can be had at reduced rates at all principal offices of the Company.

THE FARMER

In search of a new home, where he can secure better returns for his labor, should remember that the Wabash is the most direct route to Arkansas, Texas, Kansas, Nebraska, and all points South, West and Northwest, and that round-trip land-explorers' tickets at very low rates are always on sale at the ticket offices. Descriptive advertising matter of Arkansas and Texas sent free to all applicants by addressing the General Passenger Agent.

THE INVALID

Will find the Wabash the most convenient route to all the noted health resorts of Illinois, Missouri, Arkansas and Texas, and that the extensive through car system and superior accommodations of this popular line will add greatly to his comfort while en route. Pamphlet descriptive of the many celebrated mineral springs of the West and South sent free on application.

THE CAPITALIST

Can get the information necessary to secure safe and profitable investments in agriculture, stock-raising, mining, lumbering, or any of the many inviting fields throughout the South and West, by addressing the undersigned.

ILLINOIS—IOWA—MISSOURI

What Ticket-Agents Endure.

More ticket-agents would be found in Heaven but for a certain class of visitors who come in and lead them into ways of profanity by their senseless and time-consuming questions. Instances like the following are common:

"Is this the Cincinnati Southern office?"

"Yes, sir."

"Your sign says Cincinnati, New Orleans, Texas & Pacific."

"That's the same thing."

"Then why do some of your advertisements say Queen and Crescent route?"

"Because the road runs from Cincinnati, the Queen City, to New Orleans, the Crescent City."

"What's the fare to Chattanooga?"

"Ten dollars."

"Both ways?"

"No—one way."

"How much for the round trip?"

"Seventeen fifty."

"When does the next train go?"

"Eight ten."

"What time is it now?"

"Half-past four."

"Slow, ain't it? My watch says four?"

"That's standard time."

"What is?"

"Ours."

"Don't having three hands on your clock mix you?"

"No, sir."

"What did you say the fare was to Chattanooga?"

"Ten dollars."

"Supposin' I was to take two tickets?"

"The price for each would be the same."

"How about five?"

"No difference."

"You've taken a good many people to Chicago, haven't you?"

"Our road don't run there."

"That's so," looking around the walls and drumming on the counter with one hand. "What's the fare from Ocala to Leesburg?"

The tired agent wades through the railroad guide, and after infinite search finds the towns named to be on an obscure Florida road, and figuring on the distance at three cents a mile replies: "About ninety cents."

"How long will it take to get there if I leave to-night?"

Using up a couple of pencils and a ream or so of paper, after hunting up all the railroads and their connections together with the stage lines and boat transfers, the agent says: "Friday night, at eleven o'clock."

"What will it cost altogether from here to Leesburg, sleeping-car and meals together?"

More figuring and another estimate is made.

"That's a good deal, ain't it. Where's the opposition ticket office?"

The agent removes a revolver from his hip-pocket to a shelf under the counter. The weapon is a self-cocker, with stop and fly-back trigger, timed to a sixteenth of a second.

"Were you going to start to-night?" says the agent.

"Well, no. I was thinking that if business keeps up through the summer I might go in the fall to see some of my wife's kin."

Ticket agents get bald soon and die early.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A Fish Acrobat.

One warm afternoon a stroller, coming to the borders of a small pond, threw himself down beside a little tree that leaned over the water, so that its lowest branches were but a few feet above the surface. While reclining in the shade, and idly watching the leaves that fell upon the water and sailed away, the stroller suddenly heard a chirping overhead, and looking up saw on a long limb two small sparrows. Near them fluttering in the air, rising, falling, and now alighting beside them, was the mother-bird. She was evidently engaged in giving the fledglings their first lesson in flying. But the young birds could not be induced to leave their support, they merely raised their little wings and followed their mother out from the tree by edging along side by side on the limb. As she renewed her efforts, the faster they went, until finally they were out on the very tip of the branch overhanging the water which reflected their every movement.

For some time these motions of the mother and young were kept up, and perhaps our observer sank into a doze, for he suddenly became aware that one of the birds had disappeared, that a great splash had occurred under the limb, and that the mother-bird had changed her cries to those of alarm. But it was evident from the mother bird's actions that the little bird had not flown away. The stroller concluded that it had fallen into the water, and he rose to see if he could recover it, when there shot up from the water a long slender fish, that quickly darted through the air and snatched the remaining bird from the limb, falling back into the pond with a splash and whisk of its tail. This startling leap astonished the observer, but it also fully explained to him the disappearance of the other young bird.

The pike was evidently out hunting and spying the birds upon the limb, it had carefully measured the distance and by two vigorous jumps had captured them both. The mother-bird was both grieved and dazed by the sudden calamity that had befallen the fledgelings, and, perhaps fearing a similar fate for herself, she soon flew away.—C. F. Holder, in St. Nicholas.

She Appreciated the Serenade.

Will Haven serenaded his girl last night, and when he got through singing the first song a female Irish voice was heard at a front upper-story window, as to-wit:

"Is that you, Bill?"

"Yes. Where's Maude?"

"Faith an' she hain't got home from the ice-cream saloon yet wid Mr. Archer. Give us another song, Bill, the ould folks are out, too. Give us 'Swate Violets.'"—Kentucky State Journal.

—They say the upright "choker" collar for men is gradually going out of fashion, which will be pleasing intelligence to thousands of its victims. The gallants of Queen Elizabeth's day were afflicted by similar starched ruffs, which finally attained to such enormous proportions that the fashion died out.

—Prof. Dow, an English authority, says that boiled potatoes, mixed with cut straw or hay, may be given to horses of every kind, even when on the hardest work, and this forms a species of food both wholesome and economical.

—No garden can be expected to give satisfaction that is not filled with all the vegetables that may be required. A small space here and there, when properly utilized, will give many delicacies at times when they are most acceptable.—Field and Farm.

—Rosettes: Beat the yelks of three eggs very light until they thicken. Add one quart of milk and one tablespoonful of melted butter and a teaspoonful of salt. Mix three teaspoonsuls of baking powder with three cupfuls of flour, and add to the milk and eggs. When all the lumps are beaten out add the whites of the eggs whipped to a stiff froth. Bake immediately in muffin pans in a quick oven.—The Household.

—Most horses, in their earlier days, want to bite something in a friendly manner, just as puppies do, without any intention to hurt. It is well to encourage this disposition. If punished for so doing they are apt to misunderstand it, and in the course of time whenever they feel inclined to bite they will do so in a vicious manner. It is stupidity, often brutality, that ruins horses which are not unnaturally vicious.—Cleveland Leader.

—To boil an egg so that it is fit to eat, drop it in boiling water and place the vessel, covered, on top of the stove, at one side where the water will not boil. Let it stand eight or ten minutes. By this method the egg will be cooked through and the white will be soft; not the hard, indigestible substance it becomes by the usual method. Even if the egg is left a little too long and becomes hard, it will not be like a hard-boiled egg, as a trial will convince any one.—N. Y. Herald.

—To clean lace draw a stocking tightly over a bottle and tie the ends. Lay the lace smoothly over the stocking and tack it in place. Fill the bottle with cold water and put it in a kettle of cold water with shavings of soap in it; set over the fire and boil. If necessary change the water and repeat the process. Rinse in warm water and in cold and set away to drain and dry. Then remove the lace from the bottle, lay it between folds of papers, and press in a large book or under a weight. Thus washed lace may be made to look like new.—Detroit Post.

Plant Growth.

The sunbeam has been said to play the most important part in all the changes and evolutions going on in the vegetable world. It is possessed of three distinct functions or powers: i. e., besides being able to supply light and heat, it has actinic force, by which it may produce chemical decomposition and recomposition. This chemical influence of the sun's rays is all-important, as upon it depends the germination of the seed and growth of the plants. It has been conclusively shown that seeds will not germinate in the light, even when supplied with heat and moisture, if the actinic rays are shut off. As these rays are absolutely essential, the importance of not burying the seeds so deeply that they are hidden from them is evident. Of the organic constituents of plants, oxygen, nitrogen, hydrogen and carbon, only oxygen and nitrogen exist as such in the plants, e. g., half the dried weight of a plant is carbon, yet it does not exist as free carbon, but is found in combinations. Any one of these elements, if applied to the plant, will act as a poison. It is common to speak of a soil requiring nitrogen, but the element is presented in the form of a combination, as ammonia or nitric acid, and, to use the latter with perfect safety, it is necessary that it be associated with an alkali, as potash or soda. The presence of nitrogen is absolutely neccessary for plant growth; it is present in great quantities in the air about us, and yet is a costly element to be obtained in fertilizers. As a gas in the air about us it is not utilized by the plant and in the form of ammonia and nitrous or nitric acids, in which it might be of value, there are such minute traces that it is wholly inadequate. Hence the supply must come from the soil, which, as there is often a scarcity, must be assisted by the application of manures or artificial fertilizers. Carbon is supplied to the plant by the atmosphere, in the form of carbonic acid, and any carbonate with the exception of potash or soda is practically of no account to the farmer as a fertilizer. Hydrogen is one of the elements of water, and can be presented to the plant only through this agency, and, entering the plant in this form, it renders the different forms of food assimilable. Great quantities of water are taken up by growing plants, and it has been claimed that one gallon passes through a single plant of wheat in a season, and that the exhalation of water in the form of vapor from the disk of a sunflower amount each day to six or eight ounces. Phosphorus is an essential ingredient in plant food. It combines with oxygen, forming phosphoric acid, and as such enters the plant. The amount of this acid in the soil is frequently so small that it should be supplied artificially. It is found in animal excrement, in bones and in deposits in South Carolina; from these substances superphosphates are made and sold for manurial purposes. Potash is another very important element for the growth of plants, as an example of which it need only be stated that an acre of wheat, producing twenty-five bushels of grain and 3,000 pounds of straw, removes forty pounds of potash; and that a crop of fifty bushels of corn to the acre will remove fifty pounds of this element.—Farmers' Review.

The best interests of humanity depend on the good health of our women folks, and yet those with the brightest intellects seem to suffer most with ailments peculiar to female life. It is well to remember that the whole female system can be built up to a proper state of endurance, pimples sores, swollen limbs, monthly pains, and other indications of female disease, made to disappear and robust health of mind and body take the place of illness and distress, if timely use is made of Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. It restores the blood to perfect health, it strengthens the muscular and nervous system. It gives tone to the digestive and urinary organs. It allays all irritation of the mucous membrane. In a word, it is a perfect female medicine, and aids every function of female life. No other remedy equals it. Have your druggist get it. Take no substitute.

We believe that the rank and file of both the Democratic and Greenback parties in Michigan are in favor of uniting their forces and pulling together in the fall campaign. The leaders should be given to understand in unmistakable terms where the people stand on this question. "In union is strength" must be the watchword of the opposition to the Republican party this fall. A fusion ticket properly made will be stronger this fall than it was two years ago.

A lady, who suffered from weakness peculiar to her sex, in writing to a friend, said: "I tried various kidney medicines, but only found myself growing worse. A friend told me to use Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. Its effect on me was soon indicated by a clear and beautiful complexion, a freedom from aches and pains; a complete removal of nervous depression, painless regularity in habits of digestion and otherwise. I can not praise the remedy too highly as a true friend to suffering womanhood and as a strengthening medicine.

It is now reported that Henry Ward Beecher has revised his decision to support Cleveland and has concluded to oppose him. Perhaps he is stricken with a conscientious fear that the reports against Gov. Cleveland's private character may possibly be true.

Everyone should tell his neighbor that the best remedy for curing coughs and colds, and the sure cure for consumption, is Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. It is pleasant to take and very soothing and healing in its effect.

Three artists of South Bend, Ind., are sketching scenes on the St. Joseph river near Buchanan.

GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS are the great blood purifier, liver and kidney remedy and life giving principle, a perfect renovator and invigorator of the system carrying away all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease. Every moment of our lives, every part of our bodies, is wearing out and is being built up anew. This work is accomplished by the blood. The blood if pure makes the entire circuit of the body every seven minutes. But if it becomes weak or vitiated and does not perform its work properly the system is actually poisoned by the worn-out matter clogging the vital organs instead of leaving the body. Cleanse the blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, sores, etc. Keep the liver in order, the blood pure, health of the system will follow. Take GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS and no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

FROM DAKOTA

We have been permitted to make a few extracts from a letter received from a lady who has located land at Port Emma, Dickie Co., Dakota. She writes under date of July 31. Her claim is on the east side of the river the James in Dickie county, a beautiful level country, with no stones or hinderances to cultivation. Port Emma on the west bank is always visible. I find this country much more thickly settled than I had expected, on a clear day you can see between two and three hundred shanties and houses from my claim. The soil is a loam, three and a half or four feet deep, beneath this is a sand, then a clay subsoil, which retains the moisture. Our house is nine feet by twelve, one room answering for parlor, dining-room, bedroom and kitchen. I have a coal oil stove, the only article of household furniture I have brought. Our seats are boxes, the larger boxes answering for cupboards. Our table and bedstead are made from some of the boards left from building the house, the bedstead is on hinges, so that we can fold it up against the wall; this we have as the room. Our house has a peaked roof, is shingled, and boarded at the sides, and is better than many.

With the few dishes, carpet and bedding I brought we find ourselves quite comfortable and cosy; you would be surprised to see how cosy. We would think it dreadful to live in this way at home, but one finds many neighbors, situated in the same way, and no one minds it. We have had a beautiful summer, there could not be finer weather, warm, with cool nights; there is almost always a breeze, no matter how warm the day. I am happy surprised and like Dakota far better than I expected. I find that people who wintered here, do not complain of the extreme severity of the weather, one man told me "that there was not a blizzard last winter, but he was out in." I find that those who felt the cold most were those who crowed themselves. The crops here are the this year and still in most instances they cannot be considered a fair test of what can be raised, as most of them were raised on fresh breaking of the sod. I saw wheat a few days since four feet seven inches high, it came up to my shoulders and oats four feet three inches.

My next neighbor planted peas, they ripened he sowed them again, and the plants are now in blossom. In the valley proper, I was told a few days since by a lady who saw it, "corn planted on the twenty-ninth of May is now over my head" and "wheat in the same locality will yield at least fifty bushels to the acre." Think of the little trouble in sowing grain here compared with the east. I think this is a wonderful country, and believe there is a grand future before it; think of all these broad acres ready for the plow. 'Tis to me a wonder land in many respects, thus far I never regret coming, and if it only prove profitable, am sure I never shall. What I miss most of all in this country and a great need here, is fruit, small fruits. I have not had a good dish of strawberries this year, only a few wild ones found on a claim near by, about as large as peas. I am satisfied that they can be grown successfully on this land, if they could be kept over winter, and I believe that could be managed.

The attention of the people generally is turned to raising crops, and I think for the next few years one can find a market for all that could be raised, especially as a railroad will be built within a few miles in a year or less. My idea is to go into the raising of small fruits; it would be something that I could attend to, and I believe it would pay better than anything else I could do. I wish to keep my land, as I think it will increase in value very materially in the next few years.

An exchange truthfully asserts—what has long been a well known fact in all newspaper offices—that all newspapers must be paid for in advance. The payments must be made either by the publishers or the subscribers. Paper and ink manufacturers will not wait a year for their pay. With them it is cash or no paper.

ARCTIC TALES.

Touching Incident of Lieutenant Greely's Retreat Southward From Lady Franklin's Bay.

The Narrow Escape of the Steamer Bear off Berry Island—The Survivors at Portsmouth Yesterday Unattended.

THREE SHIPS SAFE.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., August 19.—The three ships of the Greely relief party are still at the navy yard. The Thetis is now discharging her stores and Commander Schley is busy settling his business with the Government. The Bear is in a leaking body and will be put on a dry dock for repairs immediately. It appears that she narrowly escaped destruction on the rocks off Berry Island 74 miles off, while working through the shore ice. It was impossible to force a passage through the main part of Melville Bay and the Bear was pushed ahead cautiously as far out from the shore as it was possible to navigate the bay. Suddenly she struck the ice, the shock was terrific, knocking everybody on board down. She grounded off or it is probable she would have been a total wreck near on that coast. A portion of her cargo was carried away. Her forefoot badly injured and her joints completely spring in consequence of the shocks. Her engines are kept constantly at work pumping out the leakage.

HEROIC ACTIONS.

An officer of the Greely relief party gave to a United Press reporter yesterday morning the melancholy story of Sergeant Ellison's protracted illness as he received it from Lieutenant Greely's lips. "The most touching incident of Greely's retreat southward from Lady Franklin Bay," said he, was related to me as follows: "The party was struggling along weak and scarcely able to move. Ellison was helpless and had to be drawn on a sled. They had also 160 pounds of provisions to carry. The load was too much. They could not make any progress and they felt that they must leave poor Ellison to die or abandon their little store of provisions. Ellison saw the dilemma and begged them to leave him and go on with the food, he knew he could no longer be of use in this world. It seemed the wise to do, but the men's hearts were touched and their love for the man would not admit of their leaving him alone to die, so they left the provisions and brought their courade to Cape Sabine. This does not look like a pack of heartless and brutal cannibals. No sir; they are men to the last, every one of them."

SERGEANT LYNN'S REMAINS WILL NOT BE EXHUMED.

PHILADELPHIA, August 19.—The family of the late Sergeant Lynn, of the Greely party, have resolved not to exhume his remains for the purpose of an investigation. A brother of the ill-fated officer stated yesterday morning that the relatives have decided upon this course as the investigation could be of no use to any one, and that they prefer to live in ignorance rather than run the risk of disclosures which would ever be a source of horror.

PRIVATE HENRY'S REMAINS.

NEW YORK, August 19.—Coroner Robinson, of Long Island City, says he will take steps to have Private Henry's body exhumed as soon as he is satisfied of the genuineness of Miss Beck's telegram requesting the investigation. He fears, however, that the authorities of the Cypress Hill Cemetery will demur to his disturbing the body, which is in a part of the grounds used by the Government as a National Cemetery.

DID NOT WISH TO MISLEAD.

Medical Director Sutherland, United States Army, has written the City Board of Health, disclaiming any intention to mislead them in certifying to Private Henry's death as being from starvation, that having been at the time the best information in possession of the army authorities.

THE SURVIVORS AT PORTSMOUTH.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., August 19.—The survivors of the Greely party were in the city yesterday unattended, but refused to say anything of interest. They will depart some time this week. Sergeant Brainard delivered a lecture at Kittery last night. The Tallapoosa sailed yesterday for Boston.

WILL BE EXHUMED.

DELPHIA, Ind., August 19.—The remains of private Whisler will be exhumed here at daybreak this morning by request of his friends. Physicians and reporters will be present.

The Mercury Scores 100.

DOVER, N. H., August 19.—A torrid wave yesterday caused the suspension of out-door work. The mercury stood at 100 degrees at eleven o'clock. Several people were prostrated.

BOSTON, August 19.—Yesterday was the hottest of the season; the mercury at the signal office having reached 93 8-10 degrees above zero. The hottest previous day was June 21, when the mercury touched 92 6-10 degrees.

ST. JOHNSBURY, Vt., August 19.—Sunday and yesterday the thermometer has ranged from 90 to 100 degrees in the shade. A workman on Music Hall was overcome by the heat and was carried home insensible.

BATH, Me., August 19.—Yesterday was the hottest day since the middle of June, the thermometer registering 98 degrees in the shade. Work was temporarily suspended in several places in the city owing to the heat.

Mass Meeting in Favor of Law and Order

IOWA CITY, August 19.—An immense mass meet of citizens was held in this city Sunday night, at which the rioters' proceeding of last Wednesday was condemned and an organization effected to assist in preserving order and enforcing the laws. There has not been the least disturbance in this city since the outbreak of last Wednesday, and reports about the city being in the hands of a mob being grossly exaggerated. The cases against the ring leaders of the mob will be pushed to the end.

Dryest Known Since 1870.

PLYMOUTH, N. H., August 19.—The Dryest season known since 1870 is now prevailing here. The wells are rapidly drying out, causing much anxiety. The rivers are very low, many being entirely dry. Crops of all kinds are suffering severely. In addition to the dry weather, grasshoppers are destroying what does grow. One man in Bridgewater has caught over one hundred bushels of grasshoppers.

Business Failures.

NEW YORK, August 19.—The West Point Foundery Association and Kemble & Co., of 30 Broadway, have become financially embarassed and their affairs have been placed in the hands of their creditors to decide as to the future of the two concerns.

Meyer & Co., dry goods merchants, of Selma, Ala., assigned yesterday. In the trade the liabilities are reported at about $100,000.

POLITICAL.

The New York Sun on Butler's Letter—Circulars of the Brooklyn Young Republican Club—Organizing a State Labor Party—Congressmen Nominated.

NEW YORK, August 18.—The Sun this morning says, editorially, that General Butler stood with a declaration, which leaves no doubt as to his motives in running for President against both the Republican and Democratic candidates. In the first place he is running in good faith, and with a single view to the ultimate triumph of the principle he upholds. He is neither a starved Republican hard money Democrat. We do not agree with General Butler in some of his opinions. With his hearty contempt for humbug, his uncompromising demand for reform, his hatred of corporation, his genuine devotion to the interests of American men and women, and his true Democracy, the Sun is in thorough sympathy.

There is novelty and interest in General Butler's frank expression of the methods by which he means to make his candidacy count. There is nothing in the constitution which requires that the electoral vote of any State shall be tendered as a unit. General Butler defines a policy which will give full effect to the ballots of his support. His plan is fusion everywhere with the supposed minority, on the understanding that if the fusion ticket prevails the electoral vote shall be divided between Butler and his allied candidate in that State in the ratio of their respective votes. The suggestion carries with it the possibility of the interesting if not astonishing result.

The New York Star this morning says: General Butler has succeeded in producing a very gamey, resonant, characteristic and profoundly interesting document. He urges fusion with the supposed minority on the theory that the electoral vote be divided according to the votes thrown for the respective candidates. This is certainly a seductive and promising plan, which, if carried out, will seriously threaten the chances of the supposed majority in every doubtful State.

BOSTON, Mass., August 18.—The Republican State Central committee issued a call yesterday for the State Convention at Tremont Temple, Boston, September 3. The call invites Republicans and all voters who intend to support the Republican candidate. This excludes the Independents and completely severs them from the Republican party.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., August 19.—Much interest is expressed in Republican circles as to the possible outcome of the circulars sent out by the Young Republican Club of King's County, requesting the views of members of that organization upon the propriety of holding a meeting to consider the course to be pursued in regard to the Presidency. The absence of President Nichols from the city for the past few days has delayed the opening of many of the replies to the circular received, and it is not likely that any result will be made public until the latter part of the present week.

RICHMOND, Va., August 19.—The leading Republicans met last night to confer in regard to the Electoral ticket. In two districts there are four Electors, two more than the law allows. It was decided to allow the ticket to stand just as it is for the present. General Wickham, for the Straightouts, demanded equal representation on the ticket, but this will not be granted. The conference was harmonious. General Mahone will go to New York today and meet the National Republican Committee.

Elections were held in four districts today to fill vacancies in the Legislature. James Gee was elected to represent George and Surrey counties; and Robert McCandless, the city of Petersburg. The other districts were not heard from. Lybrook's repudiation resolution offered on Saturday was not taken up in the Legislature to-day.

FALL RIVER, Mass., August 19.—A meeting to take preliminary steps in organizing a branch of the State Labor party was had in Spinners' Hall yesterday. Secretary Howard called the meeting to order. A committee of five was appointed to draw a call to the people.

OLEAN, N. Y., August 19.—The Republicans of the First Assembly district yesterday renominated F. K. Kruse, of Franklinville, for member of Assembly.

AUGUSTA, Me., August 19.—Colonel D. K. Hartwig and Alfred Lennox have both been nominated for Congress by the Democrats in the Second Maine District.

Soldiers' Home Investigation.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., August 19.—The Congressional Committee met at the Soldiers' Home yesterday morning and took up the case of Isaac Moulton, submitted by Attorney Hopkins Saturday, in which Governor Sharpe and Dr. Miller, of the Home, were charged with cruel and inhuman treatment of plaintiff. Moulton was sworn. He testified that while sick he was, without reason, thrown into the guard-house for twenty-four hours. The next day he was taken to an insane asylum and upon being examined by a physician was released. When he returned to the Home was refused medicine and clothing, and was not permitted to eat unless he went to the mess hall. The clerk of the Provost office read charges against Moulton of drunkenness and absence without leave. Dr. A. J. Hare testified that he had been surgeon at the Home, and resigned because of disagreement with General Sharpe. Hospital steward McIlvane swore he heard that Moulton was taken to the guard house for threatening to knife an inmate. Other witnesses were examined, but no important testimony was brought out.

Death of a Well-Known Architect.

CLEVELAND, August 19.—Walter Blythe, President of the Board of Water Works Trustees, and for many years a prominent architect in this city, died at the Charity Hospital yesterday morning. A few weeks since he suffered from a severe attack of malarial fever, but soon recovered his accustomed health. On Friday last, from undue exposure to the intense heat of the sun, he relapsed, and congestion of the brain followed, which resulted in his death as above stated.

Lost His Barn, But Escaped With His Life.

CALEDONIA, O., August 19.—A large barn belonging to S. F. Rosencrans, at Latimberville, five miles north of here, was destroyed by fire Sunday night together with nine hundred bushels of grain and forty tons of hay. Rosencrans was in the barn at the time with a sick horse. He had gone to sleep, and would have been burned had not the neighbors discovered the fire and got him out almost suffocated. Loss by fire $3,000; no insurance.

More Fast Driving.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., August 19.—At Narragansett Park yesterday, Frank Work's pair of horses, Edward and Swiveller, trotted against time for a purse of $1,000. Their old record was 2:16¾, and yesterday they trotted in 2:16¼. The first quarter was made in 34¾, the half in 1:07½, the three quarters in 1:42½. Johnny Murphy was the driver.

BASE BALL.

The hot weather of last Tuesday kept a good many away from the game between the Toledos, of the American Association, and the Tecumseh club. The game was played according to the rules of that association, where if the pitcher hits a man at bat with the ball while pitching, the striker is given a base; a foul caught on the bound is out. One man on each side was crammed with the ball during the progress of the game, and had the satisfaction of taking first base without any extra exertion on his part. The game was won by the Toledo team—score 9 to 4.

The home nine played a fine game until the fourth innings, when Freeman muffed a ball on first with two men on bases, and letting them score, and in the seventh innings he made another bad break, dropped the ball and lost it in the grass and thus let in another unearned run. Chapman played a splendid game, making four putouts and three assists, without an error. Anderson and G. Bostwick each made a good running catch in the field. Heidenrich had a "game leg" and had no business playing that day.

The Toledos played a fair game, but nothing extra, and if the home nine had kept on playing as good as they did the first three innings, they would have stood a good chance of walking away with the league team.

The Tecumseh club went to Adrian yesterday to play an exhibition game with the Toledos. The score as reported from there yesterday afternoon by telephone was to the effect that the Tecumsehs had got scooped by a score of 40 to 8. We wandered around town all last evening and part of this morning trying to find some member of the club in order to see if the report was correct. It was a fruitless search; not one could be found. The whole club, bats and all, had crawled into their hole and pulled the hole in after them. Eminently proper.

Capt. D. D. Marshall, of Detroit, was in Tecumseh and Macon over Sunday.

Gainsley & Co's clearing sale is now in full blast and many good bargains are being made.

Our G. A. R. are making calculations on having a big time at Devil's Lake next week.

The new skating rink is now nearly enclosed, and will be ready for business in a very short time.

Jerome Cleveland spent a few days with relatives near Addison last week. He took in the big picnic.

Woodcock shooting is now lawful, but the season for partridges does not open until September 1st.

The Brownvillites, to the number of about forty, spent last Friday at Sand Lake. A good time of course.

Ben Butler did not put in an appearance at the Knights of Labor picnic, in Detroit, Saturday last.

The new hotel of Harry Lee is fast being completed and Tecumseh will soon boast of another first-class hotel.

The doctors report the average health of the village fair considering the unseasonable weather of the past few days.

Mrs. C. W. Goodrich, who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. C. M. Burlingame, returned to her home in Coldwater on Friday last.

Harvey Doty, who has been working at Wolcott, Temple & Co's planing mill, had three fingers of his right hand sawed off last Monday.

Fred H. Burlingame was up from Dundee to his home in this village on Thursday and accompanied the party of Brownvillites to Sand Lake on Friday.

We met Rev. Mr. Conley at Devil's Lake last week. He is spending his vacation at Cottage No. 4, near Beardsell's and seems to be enjoying himself splendidly.

Met Conklin, Jehiel Davidson and N. M. Sutton were among the Tecumseh people who went to Devil's Lake last Thursday and didn't return on the Friday morning train.

Dundee Reporter: Cheever's saloon opened its doors to the public Saturday morning, and liquor of all kinds openly sold. It is reported that a suit for selling without approved bonds is incubating.

Charlie Patterson, of Cleveland, is rusticating among the scenes of his childhood. He likes his business arrangements in Cleveland but says no other place but Tecumseh will ever be like home to him.

The Hillsdale Leader says: "A Tecumseh woman cut her dress from a pattern in a magazine dated 1874, before she discovered that it was'nt 1884, and it took three doctors to tide her over that long, lonely night."

The oat crop harvested is excellent both in yield and quality, and if the corn crop is secured in good condition, our farmers will not have to hypothecate their future crop to buy feed for their stock, as many of them had to do last spring.

We have received a copy of 'Among the Clouds,' which is published on the summit of Mount Washington, date of Aug. 13, 1884, and among the arrivals at the Summit House on the 11th inst., we notice the names of John Fisher and wife of Tecumseh.

Petoskey Record: Wm. Totten, of Tecumseh, Mich., is enjoying his 6th annual visit to Petoskey. He is the guest of his brother P. Totten. He thinks the improvements are very encouraging for Petoskey. One thing strikes him very favorably for the future of the place—the Prohibition movement.

Mr. J. O. Heck is expected to preach at the Baptist church next Sunday morning.

Ellery Sisson presented us with a fine watermelon yesterday for which he received the thanks of all hands.

A. W. Slayton reports his wholesale Lumber and Hay business as very lively now, is shipping both in large quantities.

The annual school meeting of this district will be held at the Central School Building on Monday evening, Sept. 1st at 7:30 o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. V. Hicks, of Oscoda, were called here on Saturday to attend the funeral of Mr. Rosacrans. They returned to their home on Monday.

Albert Hyde Sr., has put down a new tar sidewalk in front of his residence. We believe these tar walks will come into general use in a few years.

The landscape about the M. & O. station at the north end of Devil's Lake is decidedly picturesque. Many Tecumseh people know what it is themselves.

Twenty-three members of the Tecumseh G. A. R. went to Battle Creek yesterday to attend the Soldiers' and Sailors' reunion which takes place there to-day.

There will be a meeting of the Union Club, at Heesen's Hall, Friday night, 22d. inst., at 8 o'clock, for such business as may come before the meeting. All are invited, ladies especially. Come one, come all.

By order of Com.

The 4th. Quarterly Meeting of the Conference year will be held at the Methodist church next Sunday. Rev. W. Q. Burnett will preach on Sunday morning. Rev. Geo. W. Hudson will preach on Saturday at 2:30 P. M., and on Sunday at 7:30 P. M.

Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Temple, Dr. L. G. North and wife, Mrs. A. E. Kennedy, Miss Libbie Satterthwaite, Ben. Garlinghouse and several others had a very pleasurable experience in returning from Devil's Lake last Friday on an abandoned train.

The Butler men met in John Usborne's vacant store last evening and made a good start towards organizing a Butler club. A good number signed the roll of membership, and the meeting adjourned until next week to complete the organization.

D. W. Clark received intelligence last Monday that his brother residing in Leavenworth, Kan., and who had been in New York city on business, had suddenly died there. Mr. Clark met the remains at Toledo and proceeded with them to Kansas.

On Tuesday last a German by the name of August Conrad, committed suicide at Adrian by shooting himself in the forehead. No cause except despondency is assigned for the act.—He was a young man of exceptionably good qualities, about 25 years of age.

The M. & O. road will sell excursion tickets next week during the three days camp at Devil's lake. Tickets from Tecumseh only 30 cents for the round trip, good Aug. 26, 27, and 28, good returning until Aug. 29th. Every one must carry their own provisions. It will be a basket picnic.

Arrangements have been completed for the S.S. excursion to Devil's Lake, Thursday of next week, Aug. 28th, is the time fixed. The excursion will not cross Devil's lake, but will have a basket picnic in a grove near the north end of the lake. Row boats will be procured for the party, and those who wish can cross on the steamer. Fare for the round trip, 25 cents.

Mr. Wm. Bresie, the temporary sexton of the Tecumseh cemetery, says that all persons wishing to improve their lots can have all the soil they may need for that purpose, free of charge. The gates will be closed at 7 in the evening instead of 6, as stated last week. Every person entering the cemetery is requested to read the rules and regulations posted at the front entrance and be governed accordingly.

The weather being so warm in Kansas during July, L. C. Bidwell and wife concluded to get away for a month to the mountains, stopping at Colorado Springs and Manitou, Colorado. Lamont rode horseback to the top of Pike's Peak, 14000 feet high, the two last miles through snow and ice; stayed over night at the Signal house, slept on the floor, saw the sun set and rise. Could see Denver 75 miles, Pueblo 50 miles and Spanish Peaks 50 miles distant. They will go to Denver the 21st., stay at Windsor Hotel one week, back to Anthony, Harper Co., Kan., by Sept. 1st., where he will be happy to see his friends.

BIGGER 'N BARNUM.

The Tri State Fair occurs at Toledo, September 8 to 13. Acres of agricultural machinery in motion; printing; book binding, weaving, rope making, file cutting, etc. The biggest live stock show in the West, and a superb racing program, which includes an offer of $2,000c for "Jay Eye See." Gen. John A. Logan and Gov. Hendricks, Vice Presidential candidates, are expected to be present. Excursion rates from this point.

SWINGING AROUND THE CIRCLE.

A trip around the country is a good thing for a man who is housed up in an office most of his time. Last week Tuesday we set out, with one of Frank Silver's best rigs, to take a breath of country air and call on some of our numerous friends in some of the adjoining towns. The only difficulty we experience in a tour of this kind is our inability to call on all whom we should be pleased to visit, but we try to make the most of the limited time at our command.

Heading our pony towards the northeast we made our first halt at Pennington's Corners. The principal excitement agitating the corners at present is the bowery dance and social to be given this week by the Macon band. The band is becoming quite proficient in music and they propose to give the citizens of that vicinity an opportunity to help their treasury a little, which is in need of funds. They are now building a fine bowery for dancing purposes which will be used at intervals during the fall. B. S. Scudder and W. P. Cotton, the two merchants of Macon, are doing as well as the present dull times allow, and when seeding time is over, they look for a good fall trade. M. V. Sickley is still selling scales although just at present he is taking a few days respite.

We struck Thomas Jacobus's at noon and assisted a gang of threshers in disposing of a good dinner. Mr. Jacobus has a good crop of wheat this year; a fine yield and good quality. Edwin Howell is running the old farm as usual and his friends can always find the latch string out at his house. He was at work that day on Mr. Jacobus's threshing. Milan Sage is up to his ears making brick and tile. As we gave a description of his establishment in last week's Herald, we simply, in this connection, refer our readers to that article.

Cassius Mills is still living on the old Mills homestead. Hannah Mills, the mother of the numerous Mills family, makes her home with Cassius, where she has resided for fifty years the present summer. She is enjoying remarkably good health for a woman of her advanced age, and as she has all the comforts of a nice home, she is likely to remain with us for many years yet.

Chas. V. Skinner is well started in life with a little house well filled, a little wife well willed, and a little farm of forty acres well tilled. He had a splendid wheat crop this year and was feeling so good natured that he went to the big farmer's picnic at Devil's Lake last Thursday. We had a pleasant chat with Charlie while a thunder shower passed over.

John Gibson is renting a farm three miles east of the corners. We struck the threshers at his place also.

We arrived at Mrs. Isaac Collins' about five P. M., and accepted her hospitality at supper. Mrs. Collins has a beautiful home and splendid farm, one of the best in that section of the country. Charles Collins is now managing the farm, and John Gordon, formerly one of Judge Stacy's faithful farm hands, is at work there. Miss Allie Collins, a graduate of the Tecumseh High School is living at home now. Our visit there, although brief, was a very pleasant one and we hope to repeat it at some future time.

Eight o'clock found us at Thomas Murphy's on the Ridge. Tommy is an old acquaintance, having spent three years of his early manhood on Judge Stacy's farm, and we could not decline his kind invitation to put up and spend the night with him. He now owns a farm of 120 acres, all paid for, has a large new barn, one of the best on the Ridge, and a large amount of valuable live stock which is growing into money every year. His barn is 36x64 feet in size, with 20 foot posts, on a nine foot stone foundation with hip roof. A good night's rest and an excellent breakfast the next morning sent us away rejoicing and with a determination to make another visit at some future time.

Frank Whiting was found on the old David Berdan farm, which Mr. Whiting now owns. He has a fine place of 61 acres, which is one of the most productive farms on the Ridge. He is taking a respite from farm labor now in helping along the Butler boom. He says that all the voters in his section of Macon are Butler men.

Granville Mills is enlarging his house this summer into which he will put a furnace heating apparatus and other modern improvements. He will have one of the finest family residences in Macon, when completed.

Z. Fuller is the same contented mortal he always was. He is now enjoying life and putting in drive wells.

J. L. Jackson is still at work with the hammer and the plane. His skilled services are in constant demand and he is now at work on Granville Mills' addition

J. M. Burleson is domiciled in a fine new house on the Saline road. He has an extra farm of 80 acres and will not be compeled to employ a hired man much longer, for he has four smart handsome boys who are rapidly walking along to manhood. Mr. Burleson gave us a pressing invitation to dine with him, which we had to decline with regrets and hurry along.

Jas. Barney is well started on a farm of his own, containing 80 acres. He started life without a penny, and the little property he has accumulated shows what honest deal and industrious habits will accomplish under adverse circumstances.

Henry Miller has a fine farm of 60 acres which has been brought to a high state of cultivation under his practical hand. He is putting in fifteen acres of wheat this fall.

Jas. R. Liddle has sold his north 80 acres and now gives entire attention to his home farm of one hundred acres, which is one of the best in that section.

We called at Jackson Allen's but as he was not at home our visit was deferred.

Our next halt was at Milan Wheeler's. He has a new house and barn and forty acres, which make him a pleasant home. He is seeding 75 acres of wheat this fall, a portion of it on shares upon other farms. He was putting down a drive well which had reached a depth of 94 feet with no water in sight. Our call here was short, but we stayed long enough to demolish a quarter section of Mrs. Wheeler's pumpkin pie.

We stopped a moment at D. H. Silvers and found Dave as happy as ever. He is now carrying on the old homestead farm of 265 acres, and also a clothing store at Manchester. He oscillates between the two as occasion demands and says that he finds plenty of work to do to keep himself out of mischief.

Wm. J. Kelly fills the r[illegible]se carpenter to good accept[illegible] is now employed on Ed. [illegible] farm house, which the la[illegible] building on the section; and he seems likely to have an all summer's job there. From that point Frank's pony brought us home in short order where we arrived at dark.

THE BIG PICNIC.

On Thursday noon we took the western train on the M. & O., road bound for the big picnic at Devil's Lake. A large number of Tecumseh people were on the train, and upon arriving at Beardsell's we found many more of them who had gone up the day before. Several farmer's picnics have been held during July and August, but the great big old mammoth free-for-all picnic came off on the 14th inst. Alighting at the Devil's Lake station we found the little propellor in waiting to carry us to Beardsell's Landing. The boat will accommodate twenty-five passengers and there were nearly fifty on hand to be carried across the lake. A sail boat and large row boat near at hand were called into requisition. Gen. Spaulding and County Clerk Hunter manned the sail boat and steered the craft like experienced mariners. We reached Beardsell's about two o'clock and found the crowd all there; and such a crowd. The hotel, the grove, the lake shore and the fields adjoining were literally swarming with people.

Fifteen hundred feet of tables had been prepared for the picnickers, a large platform was erected and seats prepared for the hundreds in attendance. The total number in attendance was estimatad at from 12,000 to 15,000. Probably the latter figure is not an over-estimate of the number actually on the grounds between the hours of 10 A. M. and 10 P. M., as people were going and coming during the entire day. The exercises at the speakers stand began promptly. The music was furnished by the Adrian City band and the Schumann Vocal club of Hudson. The meeting was called to order by the President, Hon. Geo. A. Smith of Somerset, and the first speaker introduced was Lt. L. H. Salsbury of Hudson. His remarks were right to the point and at their close he was greeted with three cheers. Hon. T. F. Moore, the veteran farmer and granger, followed in a fine speech, and Capt. C. R. Miller and Gen. Geo. Spaulding then addressed the crowd in brief speeches. The Adrian band received the prize of $40. It was resolved to hold the next meeting on the third Thursday of August 1885. The election of officers was then held with the following result:

NEW OFFICERS ELECTED:

Prest.—A. M. Sickley, Woodstock.
Vice Prest.—Wm. Wiggins, Adrian.
Sec'y—Frank Church, Wheatland.
Treas.—V. Schermerhorn, Pittsford.

DIRECTORS:

Jefferson—Chas Luce.
Adams—Wm. Wright.
Moscow—J. B. Nutton.
Hudson—I. E. Phelps.
Medina—P. W. Lewis.
Rollin—L. Chase.
Woodstock—N. Osborn.
Cambridge—M. Reed.
Rome—J. S. Marks.
Dover—H. Swords.
Seneca—A. Manchester.
Adrian—J. E. Baker.
Wright—Thos. Acker.
Ransom—H. Higley.
Pittsford—J. B. Hatfield.
Wheatland—J. G. Patterson.
Somerset—H. Harper.

The usual accessories of a large crowd were present in abundance. The tin-ware peddler, the circular swing man, the bowery dance hall, the sewing machine vender, and numerous other schemes for taking the peoples' money, were on the grounds and did a thriving trade. The steamer City of Hudson was well patronized during the entire day. About five o'clock the tables were again spread and probably half the crowd partook of supper before leaving the grove.

There was a large crowd at the Hotel during the evening and the dance hall was well patronized until a late hour. While strolling about the house at nine in the evening wondering whether the landlord could find a room for us, we met J. F. Payne, who lives on the old Crofoot homestead, half a mile west of Beardsell's, and we accepted an invitation from him to spend the night with him. Upon arriving we found Judge Stacy there, who had spent the day and attended the picnic with Mr. Payne and Mrs. Crofoot. We were most hospitably entertained there. Mr. Payne runs two large farms and is quite a breeder of high-bred stock. He has sold eleven yearling merinos during the season at from $15 to $25 each.

AT ADDISON.

After a delicious breakfast the next morning, Mr. Payne drove us over to Addison, where we intended to take the morning train for home, but found that it had been abandoned, owing to the smash-up at Marshall the day before. Nothing was left but to make the best of the situation, which we proceeded to do.

J. H. Underwood head miller in Smith's mill was found at his post, as good-natured and jolly as of old. The mill is now in good trim, but wheat comes in slowly by reason of the low price paid.

A. J. Kempton is prospering as usual and is building up quite a jewelry trade.

O. B. Bowen holds forth on the same old corner, making harnesses for the people of Western Lenawee.

Fred Curtis has begun work on his new two story brick block, which will be an ornament to the town when completed. It will contain two fine stores, one of which he will use for the bank.

Fred Smiley was smiling at the good outlook for his hardware trade.

The Courier office is flourishing, and has already worked up a fine subscription list.

Powers & Son dispense drugs and medicines, wall paper, etc., and run the express and telephone offices.

Again drafting Mr. Payne's horse and buggy into the service we drove back to Beardsell's and dined with the landlord Mr. B., himself. He was feeling "all tuckered out" after the big picnic the day before, and was taking a much needed rest on Friday. His house is becoming more and more noted every year as a popular public resort. Since the M. & O. established a station at the north end of the lake, his custom has greatly increased. Private parties from abroad visit him more numerously than formerly and excursion parties have increased largely. Mr. B. cut a channel through the sand bar in the middle of the lake and built a dock at the M. & O station at an expense to himself of several hundred dollars. Since Mr. Allen refused to assist in this expense, the steamer no longer stops at Allen's Landing. Although the Hotel was taxed to its utmost on picnic day, still all guests were well provided for, and no one, who wished to remain over night was sent away.

At one o'clock we took the little steamer for the north end of the Lake, which was reached about two o'clock. Here we found a portion of the Tecumseh contingent, who had gone over on the morning boat to take the train which had been abandoned. A portion of them went west to Addison at noon to procure dinner.

The landscape view at the Devil's Lake station is an enchanting one. To the west stretches a large marsh which is seeded down to a thrifty crop of thistles. Perched on the bank north of the track is a small log-house, the lawn in front of which is ornamented with chicken coops, and a four rail fence. To the south lie the placid waters of the Satanic lake. The manufacturing industries of the place consist of an eight by ten shop, in which a maker of axe helves plies his calling. Near the axe helve factory on the north road is located a one story frame house in which Mrs. Sarah Stanley sells lemonade, cigars, candy and cookies to regale the weary traveler. Across the corner from the Stanley House, in the suburbs of the city, is a cabbage patch. The waiting room at the depot is located beneath three walnut trees on the bank. The Tecumseh crowd in waiting was large, handsome and enthusiastic. Ridgeway, Britton and Toledo were also represented. The party arrived at the landing an hour before train time and the train was two hours late. During that three hours, the company took the signs of the city all in. We wound feast our eyes on the landscape a few minutes from the windows of the waiting room, then adjourn to Mrs. Stanley's for lemonade. The landlady is an adept at making lemonade. She grinds four lemons in a four gallon crock seasons the mixture with sugar and then fills the crock with lake water. We regret to say that several young men of our party became quite intoxicated from a too free indulgence in this beverage, but they sobered off on ginger cookies, and a new brand of cigars, known as "Garlinghouse's own". The train finally arrived however, as all trains do which are behind hand, and our company was soon speeding along towards Tecumseh. Two coach loads of passengers found room in one car as far as this station, where the Tecumseh contingent surrendered their accommodations to the passengers bound farther East. The M. & O. company are usually very prompt and regular in their train arrangements, and the delay on Friday was occasioned by the smash up at Marshall, on the preceding day.

It Can Cure

It is a fact that remedies almost without number, already contest the claim to cure all the ills that afflict suffering humanity. Thousands have found them powerless to work a cure for them.

No diseases have so baffled all attempts at permanent relief as have Rheumatism and Neuralgia. A long succession of disappointments has made their agonized victims despair of the possibility of cure. For ventures they have been considered beyond the power of medical skill to cure.

And yet we say both can be cured, and that ATHLOPHOROS will do the business. The best proof that it can do it is that it has done it.

It Did Cure

Rev. S. R. Dennis, D.D., pastor Third Congregational Church, New Haven, Conn., Rheumatism had kept him from the pulpit four or five months at a time. He says he had suffered so that he could scarcely live. He took his first dose of ATHLOPHOROS on Friday. Sunday he was free from his pains, Monday he was well, and has remained so since.

Rev. William P. Corlett, D.D., pastor Genesee St. M. E. Church, New Haven, Conn., was laid up for weeks with Inflammatory Rheumatism, suffering most excruciating torture. ATHLOPHOROS cured him, and he believes it to be infallible.

H. S. Chandler, of the N. Y. "Independent," says ATHLOPHOROS cured him of Rheumatism from which he had suffered for a year and a half.

Rev. W. B. Evans, Washington, D. C., says: "I consider it work almost in the light of a miracle. It is a most wonderful medicine. It ought to be spread throughout the land."

It Will Cure

The great question is, Will it cure me? We believe it will. Is it worth trying? You must decide.

If you want ATHLOPHOROS of your druggist, we will send it express prepaid on receipt of regular price—$1 dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it from your druggist, but if he has not it it may be recommended to you something else, but order at once from us as directed.

AYER'S
Cherry Pectoral.

No other compounds are so near like unto their all-healing virtues as are Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Imitations are invariably offered by the majority of sufferers. The ordinary cough or cold, resulting perhaps from a trifling or unnoticed exposure, is often but the beginning of a fatal illness. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has been proven its champion for fifty years. Right where it is known, it is used, and should be taken in all cases without delay.

A Terrible Cough Cured.

The Literature of Discontent.

If our modern and current literature had to be characterized in a single word, it would probably be most aptly called the "literature of discontent." As a mass, it is a literature with an aim, and that aim, in its broadest statement, is the aim of making people other than they are. The means adopted to this end is that of making them dissatisfied with what they are. The makers of this literature would probably claim that their object is that of making better than they are, and claim for themselves the character of apostles of an angel of reform. Whether the state of affairs actually had in view by these gentlemen and ladies would or would not procure a greater share of general happiness may be left out of view for a moment, while we dwell upon the means adopted to lead up to that state of bliss—namely, that as many people as possible shall be wrought into a state of discontent. It is only a fair summary of the implications of much modern teaching that the mass of mankind may, when all things shall be properly ordered, expect comfort and ease, if not luxury; that hardship may be abolished, and universal well-being established. Yet the preachers of the doctrines which underlie these deductions ignore—are, possibly, themselves often ignorant of—the fact that every man in a civilized state enjoys uncounted and countless privileges, both of material comfort and personal rights unknown, to people less advanced in civilization—unknown, therefore, to the whole series of generations that have gone before. In spite of proof to the contrary the assertion still continues to be made that the rich are growing richer and the poor poorer, against proof to the contrary, the doctrine is taught that poverty is an accompaniment and a fruit of progress; and it is asserted that there are men, or classes of men, amongst who have no share in the gains of civilization—the fact being that all but a small margin of the gains of civilization enters into a common stock, which nobody can appropriate, while that small margin which is appropriated is divided between capital and labor in a steadily diminishing ratio to capital, and a steadily increasing ratio to labor. And still the current of literature flows on—a literature of discontent. And thus far the discernible effects of this literature this doctrine—in political and social life have been purely bad. Happily, the great mass of mankind pays small attention to it, goes about its work, and does its duty in the estate in which it finds itself. But, at the same time preaching has had some effect, and that effect appears to be altogether bad. For the whole of this "humane" morality (as it calls itself) consists in nothing else than exhorting us to put ourselves in other people's stands, according to an ad-nauseam abstraction, which, from its very nature, must also mean putting other people in our stead. "When man ceases thinking on what he has to do," says Dr. Karl Hildebrand, "in order to think that he has to do it, good-bye to all content." But the whole machine of humanity would stop if we wanted continually to put ourselves in the place of others, and endeavor to insure for every one, according to the exigencies of an abstract equality, the same conditions of life. So, in consequence, we stop short at good wishes sufficient to men who, in former times were quite happy in this limited existence and rebelled but little on it, discontented with their lot, but insufficient to change the lot. For the literature of discontent does not press home to them the question: "Is there any other man in the world to blame for the fact that I am poor?" The achievements of the human race have been accomplished by the elite of the race. There is no ground at all in history for the notion that the masses of mankind provided the wisdom and did the work. The dogma that all men are equal (says Prof. Sumner) the most flagrant falsehood, and the most immoral doctrine which men have ever believed. It is, on the contrary, a doctrine of the first moral and sociological importance that truth, wisdom and righteousness come only by painstaking, study and striving. These things are so hard that it is only the few who attain to them. These few carry on human society now as they always have done." And it will be a good thing for human society, and a better thing for the less prosperous classes in it, when these truths come to be recognized by the makers of literature, and some apostles shall arise to enforce the homely doctrine that most people do not know when they are well off. If, on all the face of the earth, there exists a people that is well off, it is the people of California. To them, before all others, it ought to be—but is not, needless to preach the evangel of content, pursuit of the enjoyments that are within reach, the practice of making the best of things. "For there is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so," said Hamlet. And he was a very wise man who wrote. "He that is of contented heart hath a continual feast; a contented heart doeth good, like medicine, but a complaining one drieth the bones." It is not easy to find grounds for believing that the wisdom of the preachers of discontent is any better than the wisdom of King Solomon.—San Francisco Cal.

Too Great a Sacrifice.

"Ethelinda Jane," he said, in deep, passionate tones, "will you be mine?"

"If—if I thought you loved me," she faltered.

"Love you!" he exclaimed, wildly, "I adore you. I would wander the wide world over for your sake."

"Then I will be yours, said the maiden, "but only on one condition."

"What is the condition?" he said, in a paroxysm of joy: "name it, name it, and if it was to snatch the burning sun from the cerulean firmament I will agree to it."

"It is not so difficult as that," she said calmly; "it is simply this that you will swear you will never say after we are married that I can't cook as well as your mother."

The young man shook his head and departed sorrowfully. The sacrifice was too great.—N. Y. Star.

Clay and the Sailor.

Naval officers who were on board the sloop-of-war John Adams, Captain Samuel Angus, which carried Henry Clay to Europe in 1814, used to narrate the following story of his nautical adventures. He was joined at Antwerp by John Quincy Adams and Jonathan Russell, and they sailed on the John Adams to Gottenburg, Sweden. One day Mr Adams persuaded his associates to go up into the foretop with him, knowing that the sailors would follow, according to custom, until they each paid Neptune's tribute of a bottle of rum. Mr. Russell, who had been at sea a good deal, went up over the buttock shrouds, but Mr. Clay followed Mr. Adams through the "lubber's hole." No sooner were they seated on the top than the topmen pounced upon them and tied them fast. Adams and Russell submitted quietly and then on promising to pay the tribute, were released, but Clay resisted vigorously, became stubborn and indignant, and could not be induced to promise anything. His companions left him tied to the rigging and reached the deck. Captain Angus, learning what was going on, instantly ordered Mr. Clay to be released. The Kentuckian came down in a towering rage, and an angry scene followed. He could not be persuaded to look upon the affair as a jest. The consequence was a serious rupture between himself, Captain Angus and the other two gentlemen. With Mr. Russell he became reconciled after a time, but not so with Mr. Adams, to whom it was believed on board the ship, he sent a challenge to fight a duel. No hostile meeting took place, however, and eventually they became friends again. The rupture between Mr. Clay and Captain Angus was never healed. When Mr Clay returned to the United States the gallant Captain was commanding at the Brooklyn navy yard. Mr. Clay, who never forgot or forgave when he could help it, made a strong complaint against the Captain for "unwarrantable conduct in permitting and countenancing at the aforesaid table to official dignity." Captain Angus replied disourteously and was dismissed. He resigned, and was arrested under specific charges from the Secretary of the Navy. The withdrew from the unfortunate sailor an angry remonstrance, and under the excitement of what he deemed a gross injustice, his mind became deranged and he ended the unhappy controversy by committing suicide.—Rev. Bailey Peck.

Cholera a Slow Traveler.

An Eastern pestilence which has made its way on foot through Central Asia, which has crossed the Atlantic in the old days of sailing ships, and crossed the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific when San Francisco was no more than a white-walled Spanish mission, may certainly be described as an enterprising and persevering traveler. If cholera could thus travel in the years from 1829 to 1873, what may it not do in these days of rapid transit? But the fact is that the good old times of slow stages, of halting for the night, and of spending weeks and months on the journey, were so much more suited to the ways of cholera, that even the thousand and one opportunities of the age of steam do not make it half so dangerous. If there is one thing less doubtful than another in the natural history of cholera, it is that it leaves the ground, that the breeding-place of the poison is the soil, and that it is always most formidable when it drags its slow length along and leaves a trail behind it. No English invasion of cholera has ever gathered force which did not come to us across the continent, through Russia and Germany. It came by sea from Alexandria to Southampton in 1865, but it was quickly suppressed. It came next year with German emigrants on their way to America, and it became a considerable epidemic. We have always imported it from the opposite shore of the North Sea—into Sunderland from Hamburg in 1848, into the Tyne ports from German ports in 1853, and into Yorkshire and Lancashire from Rotterdam in the early months of 1866. It would almost seem as if a long journey overland were necessary to consolidate its power and give vigor to its constitution. Although the events of 1866 to 1873 show clearly enough that railways and steamboats have not by any means driven cholera out of the field, yet we have learned that it mostly goes with a particular class of travelers. Panic-stricken fugitives, the poorest of emigrants, wayside tramps, and all kinds of hunger-monger in motion are the favorite mania of cholera diffusion. Unfortunately, these things are not yet out of date. The South of France is now witnessing worse scenes of that kind than ever disgraced antiquity or Europe's middle night of barbarism. It is a melancholy satire upon the Age of Science, on the "Cholera-bacilles" and the refinements of technical skill, that the first approach of cholera to the shores of Europe should be met by attempts at concealment on the part of the authorities, and headlong panic on the part of the public.—London Standard.

—A sleeping-car porter says the ladies give him a heap of trouble. "Da want lem' a-lie and coffee from the rest'rant, der satchels carried, winduws raised and lowered, an' everything like that. De mos' of 'em says 'Thanks,' but when it comes to quatahs da forget mos' always. Not more'n one in ten gives a po'tah a cent. Wish dere was nothing but geamen travell'n', I do."

The reward of twenty-five thousand dollars voted by Congress for the rescue of the Greely expedition will be covered back into the Treasury unless at the next session of Congress some other disposition of it shall be made. It would seem to be a fair and eminently just proposition to divide this sum among the families of those who perished before the rescue was effected.—Albany Journal.

CATARRH Hay Fever

HAY-FEVER

Is a type of catarrh having peculiar symptoms. It is caused by a foreign substance in the nasal membrane of the nostrils, which is carried to the lungs. As a cold advances it settles in the throat, causing irritation, which is aggravated by a painful burning sensation. There are severe spasms of sneezing, frequent attacks of bleeding from the nose, a watery and inflamed state of the eyes. Ely's Cream Balm is a remedy founded on a correct diagnosis of this disease, and is believed to cure the worst cases. 50 cents at druggists; or by mail, sample bottles 10 cents. A NARROW ESCAPE

Sleeplessness, fatigue, and health after disease, are two of the sweetest experiences known to man. Fourteen years is a long time in which to suffer. Yet Mr. Peter Lawler of Dalton, Mass., had led a miserable life for that period through the presence of stone in the bladder. That he sought in all directions for a cure is an almost superfluous statement. He did obtain temporary relief, but nothing more. Last January he called on Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who said after examination: "Mr. Lawler, you have stone in the bladder. We will first try Dr. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY before resorting to an operation." A few days later the following letter passed through the Rondout post-office:

DALTON, Mass., February 6.

Dear Dr. Kennedy:—The day after I came home I passed two gravel stones, and am doing nicely now. PETER LAWLER.

Dr. Kennedy now has the stones at his office, and they are sufficiently formidable to justify the claim that Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is the leading specific for stone in the bladder. In this letter Mr. Lawler mentions that Favorite Remedy also cured him of rheumatism. The subjoined certificate tells its own story.

OLD BERKSHIRE MILLS,
DALTON, Mass., April 27, 1882.

Mr. Peter Lawler has been a resident of this town for the past seventeen years, and in our employ for fifteen years, and in all these years has been a good and respected citizen of the town and community. He has had some chronic disease to our knowledge for most of the time, but now claims to be, and is, in apparent good health. CHAS. O. BROWN, President.

DALTON, Mass., June 9, 1881.

Dr. Kennedy—Dear Friend:—Thinking you would like to hear again from an old patient, I sit down to write to you. It is now three and a half years since I first went to see you. At that time I was troubled with kidney disease for about two years, and had seven of the best doctors to be found, but I received only temporary relief until I visited you and commenced taking your "Favorite Remedy." I continue taking the Remedy according to your directions, and consider my self a well man. Very respectfully yours, PETER LAWLER.

The letter of April 27, 1882, holds good as far as Mr. Lawler's testimony is concerned regarding the cure. CHAS. O. BROWN.

History of the Alphabet.

How many of the millions that daily use the alphabet ever stop to think of its origin and long history? In the true spirit of a student Isaac Taylor, a well-known English writer on philosophical and philological subjects, has recently written and published in London two stout volumes under the title "The Alphabet: An Account of the Origin and Development of Letters." It is only by help of recent discoveries of early inscriptions and the progress in the art of reading lost languages and deciphering hitherto unknown symbols, that such a well-posted history has become possible. By careful study of the learned essays and scientific investigations of the latest philologists, Taylor has set forth in language of easy comprehension the origin of the alphabet, showing that our own "Roman" letters may be followed back to their very beginning, some twenty or more centuries ago, as he asserts. We have no more letters, according to this account, than those of the Italian printers of the fifteenth century. These were imitated from the beautiful manuscripts of the tenth and eleventh centuries; the lettering of these being derived from the Roman of the Augustan age. Roman letters, in their turn, are traced to these employed at Rome in the third century B. C., and these do not differ greatly from forms used in the earliest existing specimens of Latin writing, dating from the fifth century B. C. The primitive alphabet of Rome was derived from a local form of the Greek alphabet, in use about the sixth century B. C., and that was a variety of the earliest Greek alphabet belonging to the eighth, or even to the ninth century B. C. The Greeks got their letters from the Phenicians, and theirs are clearly traceable in the most ancient known form of the Semitic.

The most ancient of books, a papyrus found at Thebes, and now preserved in the French National Library, supplies the earliest forms of the letters used in the Semitic alphabet. The stone tables of the law could have been possible to the Jews only because of their possession of an alphabet, and thus the Bible and modern philological science unite in ascribing a common origin to the alphabet which is in daily use throughout the world. The nineteenth century B. C. is held by Taylor to be the approximate date of the origin of the alphabetic writing, and from that time it grew by slow degrees, while from Egypt, the home of the Jews during their long captivity, the knowledge of their captivity was carried in all directions where alphabets are now found.

The Aryans are thought to have been the first to bring the primitive alphabet to perfection, and each letter and each sound may be traced, by Taylor's careful analysis through all the changes that have marked the growth, progress, and, in some instances, the decay of different letters of various alphabets. It is an interesting fact that the oldest known "A, B, C" in existence is a child's alphabet, scratched on a little ink bottle of black ware, found in one of the oldest Greek settlement in Italy, attributed to the fifth century B. C. The earliest letters of many later ones are known only by inscriptions, and it is the rapid increase, by recent discoveries, of these precious fragments that has inspired more diligent research and quickened the zeal of learned students in mastering the elements of knowledge of their origin and history throughout the world. As late as 1876 there were found in Cyprus some bronze plates inscribed with Phœnician characters, dating back to the tenth, even the eleventh century B. C.

Coins, engraved gems, inscribed statues, and, last of all, the Siloam inscription, found in 1880, at Jerusalem, on the wall of an old tunnel, have supplied new material for the history. From the common mother of many alphabets, the Phœnician, are descended the Greek and other European systems on the one side, including that which we use and have the greatest interest in; and on the other, the alphabets of Asia, from which have sprung those of the East, Syriac, Arabic and Hebrew.—The Household.

Old-Fashioned Furniture.

Quaint "bits" of old fashioned furniture have for a long time past been much sought after, and pretty examples are now to be met with in almost every house of refinement and taste. One occasionally meets with old-fashioned things which from change of circumstances can no longer be used for their original purpose. The silver-forks—which most members of the present generation have never seen—were, when not in use, stored away in a specially made satin-wood or mahogany box, often beautifully decorated with inlaid marqueterie work, and in the better examples the mountings were of chased silver. The interior of the box was apparently solid, with a separate slit for each knife and fork, which, handle uppermost, stood upright. Until recently these beautiful specimens of the cabinet work of a by-gone age could be purchased for a very few shillings each. Some one has discovered that by removing the interior false top and adding divisions for paper and envelopes these old knife-boxes can be easily transformed into choice and covetable stationery cabinets, and dealers are now buying them up, and when transformed are asking almost as many pounds as they gave shillings. Another ingenious person—a lady well known in society—has discovered that the highly polished, old-fashioned double handled, plethoric copper or brass tea urn wherewith our great-grandmothers delighted to adorn the table when their friends assembled to discuss a dish o tea can easily be transformed into a noble table lamp of striking proportions. The urn proper forms the body, and a paraffin lamp, with its ordinary glass receptacle for oil, is fitted into the space formerly occupied by the heater, which with the lid is of course discarded. The projecting spout is likewise banished, and a simple metal boss, with a corresponding one for uniformity on the other side, takes its place. To complete, an extra large shade is fitted over an octagon-shaped wire frame-work of ordinary construction.—Chambers' Journal.

—Before the construction of modern machinery for pin-making, pins were so expensive that "pin money" became a household word.

The Care of Bees.

The queen is the mother of the colony. Her only duty seems to be to produce eggs, of which she will often lay twenty thousand in a day. The title "king" is erroneously applied to her, when the drone is meant. Her age varies, but she lives about three years. Although the destiny of a colony depends upon her presence, yet she will thrive some time after her departure; pollen and honey will be gathered as before, but there will be a dwindling away and absence of a ferment mulus. If a queen is lost at the beginning of winter, the colony will probably last until next July. Losses may occur at any time, and if they happen during the honey season the bee will replace them themselves, unless they occur when all after-swarming is given up.

When honey is abundant and the hive full of bees there will be a number of royal cells started. These are usually built near the edges of comb, and project at an angle of about forty-five degrees. They are half an inch in diameter and an inch or more in length. The queens mature in about sixteen to twenty days. Within nine days of maturing the royal cells are capped over and the old queen leads out the first swarm. From eight to nine days—there are exceptions to this rule, sometimes as late as fifteen days—a young queen will come out. If you will go to your hive about this time (morning is best) you will hear her "piping." Owing to their cramped position, she makes a louder noise than her sisters, who are kept in their cell by the boss.

The piping of the queen is of much importance to the bee-keeper. If you hear one of a morning, and the season is good, you may invariably expect a swarm that day or the next. But should all after-swarming be abandoned, the hatched queen will destroy all the others, and in three days will meet the drone. Should she be lost, on this occasion, there can be no other one raised, since they must be produced from the egg or larvæ no older than three or four days. As the old queen left the hive nearly two weeks previous, there would be no eggs or larvæ of the proper age.

The apiarian should be prompt and examine his bees frequently. If there is a dwindling away, ascertain the cause. If eggs or larvæ are found, no further proof will be necessary; if not, a queen should be introduced at once, or a frame of brood given from another hive. Perhaps in examining your hives you have found plenty of drones and drone brood, but no signs of young workers. There is a certain phenomenon connected with this instance. The workers are females, and seem to have no power of producing eggs. Nevertheless, on the loss of their mother, some of them have their structure changed, and will lay eggs. These eggs will only produce drones, no matter in what kind of cells they are laid.

Several of these "worker-layers" may be in a hive at one time. You can tell their presence by the manner in which they lay their eggs. The eggs of a queen are attached at one end to the bottom of the cells, and only one egg is found in a cell at a time. Not so with the worker. I have found as high as seven eggs in a single cell attached in various ways. It would be useless now to give them a queen or queen cell. The bees would not have it so, and the "layers" would destroy either. The remedy is to carry the hive some distance from the stand, remove the frames, one at a time, and brush away all bees. Have a box at the stand to catch them. When they are treated thus the worker-layers, not being out of the hive for so long, are lost. You may now introduce a queen by taking a wire cage without top, press the edges of it into the comb over some honey, so the queen may have food. The bees will cut under the cage and liberate her. Queens may also be introduced by dropping honey on them and putting them in the hives. The bees will forget the strangers and go to licking the honey.—Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette.

Burns and Skin-Grafting.

Burns are a great source of trouble to the surgeon in many ways. For instance, if a burn is very extensive there may be great difficulty in getting a cicatrice to form over the whole of it. Cicatrization only begins in the immediate neighborhood of living epidermis, and therefore a burn or ulcer must heal from the circumference to the center. But the further that the cicatricial tissue extends from the margin of the burn the more slowly and the more imperfectly is it formed; and, indeed, it may fail altogether to reach the center. This difficulty has often been met by a small operation called skin-grafting. A piece of sound skin about the size of a split pea is pinched up, say, on the outside of the arm, and the epidermis snipped off with a pair of curved scissors, the scissors just going deep enough to cut slightly into the second layer of skin and draw a little blood. A special kind of scissors has been invented for the purpose that will only take up just the right amount of skin, so that the operation is thus made even simpler still; and if it is skillfull performed it causes only very trifling pain. The little fragment of skin thus separated is then placed gently, with its raw surface downward, on the unhealed surface of the burn. The same thing is repeated again and again till there are many grafts, if the burn is a large one. Isinglass plaster or some other similar material is employed to keep the grafts in position and preserve them from injury. In about four days they should have taken root, and then the covering can be removed. There is now a number of foci from which cicatrization can start; for, as before said, it will begin from where there is an epidermal covering, and there alone. After a time a number of little islands or scar tissues may be seen, which go on increasing until at length they coalesce with one another, and also join that extending from the margin of the burn. This is what happens if all goes well; but, unfortunately, there is a very great tendency for a cicatrice formed from grafts to break down and disappear, so that the result is not by any means always so satisfactory as it at first promises to be.—Chambers' Journal.

ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP

FOUR POINTS

Prepared by an entirely NEW METHOD.
Composed of the PUREST MATERIALS.
WILL NOT INJURE THE FABRIC.
WILL CLEANSE WITHOUT RUBBING.

You can do a large washing without any rubbing; use the boiling process instead. You can save Time, Labor, Fuel, Soap and Clothing.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.

Cut up fine and dissolve one half bar in half gallon of hot water. Pour half this dissolved soap into a tub with just sufficient hot water to cover a boiler full of clothes. Then put the clothes in to soak, rubbing plenty of soap in the most soiled parts. Be sure that the soaking water is hot; soak the clothes half an hour; stir them occasionally so that they may get the full benefit of the hot suds; pour the remainder of the dissolved soap into the boiler, adding sufficient water to cover the clothes; wring them lightly out of the suds. Soap the stained spots and place loosely in the boiler; boil 10 to 20 minutes, rinse well, blue and hang to dry. Do not crowd the boiler too full. The same boiling water may be used for further boiling by adding a little soap to each boiler-full of clothes. Flannels and prints should not be boiled, only a little rubbing required after soaking. This soap will cleanse clothing as thoroughly as any other without the use of the boiler. We prefer and recommend the boiling process as in itself a cleansing process, saving labor, the wear of the wash-board, and being the best disinfectant known, it is easier to boil the dirt out than to rub it out. You can cleanse perfectly the finest fabric without injury; the finest point lace and lace curtains. Soak point lace in hot suds made with this soap, press water out with the hand; boil 3 to 5 minutes in clean suds made with this soap, rinse thoroughly, press carefully between the folds of a towel, roll in a dry towel, and iron between pieces of old flannel. Soak curtains 10 to 30 minutes and boil 5 to 20 minutes, rinse, stretch on frame, or pin every scallop to carpet over a sheet to dry; no ironing required.

Be sure and ask for ELECTRIC-LIGHT SOAP, and take no other.

Sold by leading wholesale and retail grocers everywhere. Dealers may obtain our goods upon application. ELECTRIC SOAP MANUFACTURING CO., Indianapolis, Ind., and 26-28 South Water St., Chicago, Ill.

MACON MUSIC.

Quarterly meeting last Sunday at the M. E. church.

The dance and ice cream festival given by the band boys on the evening of Aug. 22d, was a complete success.

The Union Sunday Schools hold their picnic on Thursday afternoon of this week in Pennington's grove.

Mr. Sutton was greeted with a large audience on the evening of Aug. 19.

Milan Sage has been on the sick list for a number of days. He is convalescent now, however.

Mrs. St. John's concert on the evening of Aug 20, gave entire satisfaction. The little people acquitted themselves well. Mrs. St. John is contemplating the organization of another singing class here. We heartily endorse the idea.

The magic lantern entertainment given at Sage's hall last Saturday evening was a complete farce. When will the people cease to be humbugged by traveling would-be geniuses? When the millenium comes.

TIPTON TATTLE.

The first lecture of the season in favor of prohibition was given on the 20th inst., by Rev. Sutton, in the town hall to a very large audience for the place, when a Union Club was organized of twelve names, half of the number taking stock by the payment of one dollar each. On the 27th inst., the august presence of John Osborn of Tecumseh, is expected to loom before this community in the further defense of the grand object of the temperance alliance. On this great question there seems to be quite an interest growing up hereabouts.

A certain sheriff from Ohio visited this place last week in search of parties supposed to be bearing north with a stolen horse, and offering one hundred and fifty dollars reward for their capture, powerfully inspired a couple of daring and energetic detectives of Franklin, who at once toned up their mighty courage to fever heat and arming themselves with a full supply of threatening weapons dashed off north at a terrible rate, having seen a suspicious looking rig pass hurriedly in that direction but a few hours before, and answering exactly the description given by the sheriff of the stolen property. In sure expectation of an early prize these sagacious detectives bounded over unnumbered miles of dusty roads, shooting their wistful eyes in all directions, and being spurred on by one hundred and fifty dollars waving before their vision, yet they failed to sight the parties sought. But after the lapse of some hours, to the surprise of many, the suspected strangers with the supposed stolen horse were seen to return alone by the same way they went and leisurely put up at the corner for refreshment. On being informed that the Franklin detectives were panting after them the strangers seemed to be considerably amused and at once became quite anxious to have a sight at their pursuers, but after waiting a long while for the return of the hopeful detectives, the patience of the strangers became exhausted, and they very kindly left their address for the special benefit of their vigilant pursuers and reluctantly departed with their suspicious looking horse which happened to be of a different gender from the one the sheriff desired to see.

We are sorry to learn that Mr. Mudge is making arrangements to move with his family to reside at Weston.

Miss Frankie Whiteley has closed her school at Cambridge and is now at home.

HOLLOWAY HICKUPS.

Ak Hoxsie started for Dakota Sunday night to look after a steam engine which he shipped last week.

Some of our people attended the funeral of Dr. Rynd last Saturday.

Mrs. Gilman, of Clinton, made her husband a short visit last week. We understand that she liked the looks of our city better than she anticipated.

Lafayette Spencer's little boy was stung by bees last week producing such alarming symptoms that Dr. Begel was called to attend the case.

Rev. Sutton gave the people of Holloway and vicinity a talk on temperance last Thursday night. There was a large gathering and good order. The most of his remarks were well received; some however seemed to think that his anecdotes were a little out of place seeing that he had Rev. prefixed to his name on the bills.

Mac. Sleeper has become a vender of watermelons which causeth the Doctor to rejoice in anticipation of an epidemic, of cholera morbus. Its an ill wind that blows no one good.

BROOKLYN BALLAST

The Presbyterian church is regenerate within, and partly without; its benefit social at G. Stranahan's a brilliant success and all concerned happy.

The Prohibition convention at Clark's lake was large. The story is that Mr. Russell spoke three hours on a disagreeable subject and charmed an audience made up of Albinos who have struggled from the ranks of all other political parties. Many of them will no doubt seek the home fold in November, and through fear of loosing identity in the great squirm, either vote for Cleveland or help Butler elect Blaine. There are many shades of color in Prohibition, but the faintest tint of all is the soap-bubble temperance, given as a prescription to aid moderate drinking. It is composed of 99 parts Let us cast all our burthens at the feet of the Lord, or hamper some other fellow and keep him plumb; and I of sufficient judgment to know when to drink a sling. The combination makes a velvety, purring, phosphorescent, generality; as effective for good as a feather for chopping cord-wood. However, it is an admission that wrong should be righted, and having attained form must either grow or die. Another tinge is extracted from faith in our State laws being righteous and all that is wanting is obedience to them.

I wish some one would lend me a copy of these wet regulations, with all the good spots marked. Our Council say: there is no way of evading the State law, and that's why they accepted bonds. If they fib, I am just as proud of them as if there was no difference in our opinions. They have not evaded the State law as they expound it. Some of them are merchants. They have drawn an immense trade, to saloon-keepers, and worn out their own elbows, lounging on counters, and looking on the prosperity they have created for their rivals. If there is a dime left after the carouse they have one chance to a gambler's thousand to get it and be thankful. They would not have had such a lavish, whirligig trade as they have drummed up for their allies, if they had dared to evade the State law, for sober customers are careful of expenses; but there would have been a constant and reasonable demand for goods, money enough to pay for them, and some doctor missed a fee for mending the head broken against my door step last night. They have subdued self-interest sufficiently to take up with a lower place and give the higher to those who choose to occupy and pay rent. They illustrate their good will to men by standing on guard while others eat the melons.

RIDGEWAY RACKET.

Still without rain.

Mr. A. B. Clark is out again.

Mrs. Estella James of Detroit made her mother, Mrs. Coats, a visit last week.

Mr. Weddie Bush of Brooklyn, N. Y. is spending his vacation at his grandmother's, Mrs. Hall.

Mr. G. P. Waring has made a grand improvement round his residence in the shape of grading and gravel and tar walks.

Mr. Ben Garlinghouse was in our village Tuesday with his $1,000 team; they are a fine span of blacks.

Thanks to the friends of Tecumseh Sunday schools for the invitation to accompany them to the Lake this week, but the invitation was too late to make the necessary arrangements.

Miss May Elginfritz of Monroe, is visiting Miss Belle Barlow this week.

Miss Emily Barstedo of Canada, made her aunt, Mrs. Jacob Arner, a short visit last week.

Friends to the number of 100 made Miss Belle Barlow a surprise last week Wednesday evening. Upwards of fifty were necessarily detained from attending. It was a genuine surprise and a success in every respect. After an hour of social amusement and enjoyment, refreshments consisting of ice cream and cake were served, after which Miss Barlow entertained her friends with some of her choice music, when her friends wished her many such a happy occasion and departed for their homes.

The concert given by the Sunday school, was largely attended and the exercises passed off nicely. The duet by Misses Jackson and Arner was grand, and the part taken by Miss Nellie Freer was worthy of comment. They will give another concert some time in the near future.

A number of the young people spent the evening very pleasantly at their friend, Miss Ida Pocklingtons, last Tuesday evening. After several hours of social enjoyment and glee, refreshments were served consisting of ice cream, lemonade and cake, followed by music furnished by Misses Barlow, Jackson and Arner, and not until a late hour was home thought of.

ONSTED ODDS.

Albert Daniels Jr. is buying hogs. He intends to ship a carload from here the last of the week.

The work on the grain elevator is progressing. J. Hanf the builder has been sick which has delayed the work some.

The M. & O. R. R. Co. have built stock yards at this place, and John Onsted has purchased and will soon have ready for use a pair of stock scales.

W. B. Raymond, the station agent at this place took a vacation Monday and Tuesday. Frank Allen took his place.

Edward Clark, from Oakland county spent last Sabbath at Nelson Kinneys. Miss Alice Kinney went home with him to visit with her sister Mrs. Clark.

The Western Fence Co. have a force of men stationed here. This will be their last stopping place on this road. The fence will be completed about September first.

William Onsted has staked out more village lots south of his house. Mr. Onsted will be right in the center of the town yet.

As Mr. A. Bedel and wife were crossing the railroad track at the station last Sabbath on their way to church their horse became frightened and overturned the buggy. Strange to say neither were seriously hurt.

SPRINGVILLE SNUFF

Dust, hot weather, and flies, make country life unprofitable, and disagreeable.

George Skinner is in Iowa prospecting.

Peter Bouton will move into Mrs. Skinner's house in a few days, and D. Hubbard will return to the old homestead.

The Lake Mills on account of drouth, can do but very little more than custom work.

The M. & O. R. R. will complete their fence through the town, this week, undoubtedly.

Our Postmaster seems to be considerably bothered, by friendly hand shaking candidates for office. You should not be a delegate to all the Republican conventions, Chas.

Many will take in the Soldiers Reunion at Devil's Lake this week.

Dr. J. Vaughn was a witness of the murder at Wash last Tuesday.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

Charley Dell, of Battle Creek, is in town for a few days.

Miss Mary Keyes is visiting friends in Saline and Ann Arbor.

Prof. Laflin, the superintendent of our schools for the coming year, is moving into the house recently occupied by Prof. Smith.

The costume social last Wednesday evening at Mrs. John T. Clark's was largely attended and a good time reported.

The Episcopal Social this Thursday evening, which will be held at Mr. Peter Kishpaugh's, will be serenaded by the Band.

Carl Burton, who has been spending the summer here, returned to Chicago last Saturday.

The Culvert across the road in front of the Methodist Church is being raised. A much needed improvement.

The Bridgewater farmers held their annual picnic last Saturday. A large crowd, good music, good speaking, and every one seemed to have a good time.

Prof. W. W. Wendell called on his many Clinton friends last Saturday and Sunday. He remains in Hudson next year.

Rev. Mr. Wallace, of Manchester, exchanges pulpits with Rev. Mr. Miller next Sunday, and will address the Blue Ribbon Club in the afternoon.

TO THE PEOPLE OF LENAWEE COUNTY.

As the time is drawing near for the seventh annual fair of the Agricultural society of Lenawee county, I wish to call your attention to the necessity of earnest assistance from all to help make success surely ours.

You are all aware of the departure or new enterprise we have undertaken, and in which your co-operation is most earnestly desired. Not only as a support and encouragement to your servants who are taking the brunt of the aggressive steps, but as a duty to yourselves and an organization which belongs to you to make successful, and which, if held to first principles is calculated to develop those industries upon which depends your prosperity. Our society has drifted six years without a home to call its own.

Now new light appears. A turn of the wheel of fortune has put us in possession of a fine tract of land well situated and having as many of the desirable qualifications for a first-class exhibition ground as can well be found in one piece of ground. We are confident that a start has been made in the right direction, and as time passes and improvements develop, it will be plain to all.

All will rejoice with the prospects of Lenawee county having one of the most attractive and best fair grounds in the state. Room for every one without being crowded.

Situated near the railroad stations, and all inside the corporation lines of the city.

We do not expect nor can you demand of us that all shall be in first class condition this year.

It takes time to improve such property. We are as a new family moved onto a new farm, and like them with limited resources to command. We must add little by little, move safely and sure. We feel sure that the people of the county will without complaint, get along with even limited accomodations for a short time, if they are on the right road to have in the near future, grounds and buildings in all their requirements.

The officers of the society are working earnestly and faithfully, and desire to see the largest attendance at the coming fair, both in exhibits and people that has ever been witnessed in the county. We should all take an active interest in this matter and contribute to the displays in the various departments of farm stock, seeds, agricultural products, household fabrics, etc., Above all give your moral attendance.

The premiums will be liberal. The accommodations for stock of all kinds will be good. The cottage plan for exhibition buildings will be unique and attractive. We will have a good one-half mile track. The grounds will be well supplied with water. The various railroads coming into the city will carry passengers at reduced rates. This appeal comes to you when we need your assistance, and it is none too soon to commence to calculate for your exhibits and to attend as visitors.

Premium lists will be out in a few days. The director in each township should be sure and get a supply for his locality and see that they get into the homes of the farmers, all who are likely to contribute to the fair. Premium lists will also be on hand at the society's office, with Geo. L. Bennett, opposite Tobey's bank.

Look out for posters and small bills.

GEO. B. HORTON, Pres't

THE ALLEN GIRLS.

A NEW ENGLAND STORY.

"If it's bad to have money, it's worse to have none."

BY MISS KATE RICHMOND.

"If it's bad to have money, it's worse to have none," Lydia Allen chanted, as she turned to toss an armful of white work on the table behind her. She was sitting at her sewing-machine, where she had been all day except just the little while she had spent over her lunch. The lunch was dinner as well, since, being a house full of women, cold meat and berries and bread and butter took the place of the ceremonious meal that a man in the house would have made necessary.

Leah made no answer. Leah was putting in gussets and making buttonholes in the shirts that her sister stitched. It was close work, and kept her silent, but then Leah was always quiet.

Kitty tossed her round arms above her head, yawning with a little impatient emphasis.

"I hate poverty—don't you Leah?"

"Yes, dear—sometimes."

Kitty stopped with upraised arms to stare at her sister. The even stitches were going in just as rapidly and surely, the slow swings of the low rocking-chair vibrated as steadily, but Kitty felt that her own vehemence meant no more than the few placid, low-toned words.

"We are dreadfully poor," taking up her work again with a sigh.

And Leah said, "Yes, dear," again, and finished a buttonhole without raising her eyes.

They were pretty girls, both of them, but Leah at twenty-four was so gravely sober that to childish nineteen-years-old Kitty she seemed a generation away. Sweet and prim and dainty, she sat in her cool lawn and sewed as if it were an afternoon amusement instead of a struggle for bread and butter.

Kitty's silky, curling hair was twisted up anyhow on the top of her head. She had on an old white sacque, and her feet were thrust into a pair of burst and broken slippers. Kitty could never work except in a condition of disarray, and to-day there had been a special pressure.

There came a ring at the door.

"There!" in dismay. "You'll have to go, Leah, and whoever it is, say I'm out—I'm going out, to pick the strawberries."

Leah was quite used to being left to cover a retreat. She went quietly and opened the door for Richard Mason.

"Isn't Kitty at home?" They had always been schoolmates. "I specially wanted to see her."

"She is out—I mean—she is in the garden."

"Hanging out clothes?"

"As bad as that—picking berries. She won't want to see you, Dick. She has been hard at work all day."

"I understand; but I want to see her. There's to be a picnic at High Rock day after to-morrow, and you are both going."

"Are we?" smiling faintly. She turned and led the way to the sitting-room. Standing there in his handsome young manhood his presence seemed to fill the whole room. Leah looked up at him with admiring eyes.

"What is it?" with a laugh in his ——

"I was thinking—you've grown good-looking since you were a schoolboy."

"Thank you," not disclaiming the fact. "Now I'm going to find Kitty."

"At your own peril," but he took the risk readily enough, and found his way out through the house like one quite accustomed to it.

Leah took up her buttonholes with a weary little sigh.

"'It's worse to have none.'" The nursery jingle rang in her head. Just now Mason's coming made matters worse. He seemed so strong and buoyant, so able to control life. He was poor, too, but he had strength and brains and a man's chance to use them. If his feet were on the lower rungs of the ladder now, there was nothing to hinder his mounting to the leisure and luxury above.

"Six years," she thought, bitterly. "I get furious sometimes. No time for any thing but work. And Kitty's years going just as mine have gone."

The elm shadows were lengthening across the grassy yard. Little breaths of coolness came in at the open windows; a white moon began to show itself palely in the afternoon sky. She folded the last garments of the dozen, gathered up her scattered threads in a methodical fashion, and went out to lay the table for tea.

It was not an elaborate meal. There was bread and butter and plain light cake, and a heaping glass dish of berries. When all was ready, she looked at the table doubtfully.

"Dick will stay to tea," she thought; turning toward the cellar with a thought of the resources there.

"If I do, we shall go without at our lunch to-morrow," setting her lips. It was a trifle, but just now Leah Allen had come to a place where there are no trifles.

Mason was in the garden still. She could hear his voice and the treble of Kitty's laughter. They came in together, and Mrs. Allen followed them. Leah was like her mother in looks and manners; the same soft dark hair and fathomless, untroubled eyes. It was easy to guess what the younger woman would be with twenty more years over her head.

Kitty ran up the steep, narrow stairs to the low-ceiled chamber. Mason went back to the sitting-room with Leah.

"I want you to go. You have hardly been anywhere this summer. Kitty will say yes—with a word from you."

"I do not see—"

"There seems no reason why it should not be a success," ignoring her beginning of an objection, "and George Holland will be there."

"I do not know George Holland."

"That is precisely the strong part of my argument. I want you to know him. He is rich; he is wise; he is the best of good fellows."

Kitty came in then. Her toilets never took long. The disarray was all external. To kick off the ragged slippers and step into a pair of whole ones, to shake out and gather up into one loose coil the lovely hair that rippled and waved and dropped of itself in curly rings about her face, took only a minute. The white wrapper had its own finishings of frills and lace about the neck and wrists; the whole thing was complete in ten minutes. If Leah had the skirt and sacque and slippers to put in place by-and-by, at least Kitty never kept any one waiting.

That night, when Dick Mason had gone with a half-promise that his invitation would be accepted, and Kitty was gossiping in the moonlight with a girl friend, Leah and her mother sat on the cottage porch. Both had been quiet a long time. They had the gift of silence, these two women.

"Mother, if you had your life to live over, would you marry a poor man?"

Mrs. Allen did not answer for a long minute.

"If I loved him," she said, rather faintly.

"Leah did not know that her mother's marriage had been preeminently "a love match." Henry Allen had won her from a circle in which she was sought for and petted. He let her give up all the goods of life because she loved him, and then his fickle fancy tired of her. When he died, five years after their marriage, Mrs. Allen felt that as far as she was concerned life had not been a success. And still she said, true to her womanhood, "If I loved him," to her daughter's question.

"Does it pay, I wonder?" Leah said, again, moodily.

"It depends—a little. There are women—"

"And women," breaking in with a short laugh. "Mother, I shall marry for money—not an idiot nor a scoundrel, but certainly not a poor man."

And Kitty, singing to herself as she ran across the street through the flickering elm shadows, was thinking of the glories of Fanny Gorham's bridal outfit. The afternoon rhyme came to her lips: "If it's bad to have money, it's worse to have none."

And as if some fatality ruled the subject, Kitty repeated her sister's question when they were alone together that night.

"Leah, would you marry a poor man?"

"No," calmly.

"But I thought—" half bewildered.

"You thought I did not believe in mercenary marriages. Well—one learns. I know myself better now."

She went on plaiting the heavy braids with deft fingers, and said no more.

The last bundle of work went away from the house the next day. In the summer lull in business there was leisure in the Allen household.

"Now we can make over our old dresses," Kitty said, as if the opportunity were a privilege. "I am going to finish the last chapter of Anne, and write two letters."

"And go to the picnic to-morrow?"

"Yes, if Dick comes again to see about it."

Dick came that afternoon. The arrangement as it had originally stood had been that the two girls were to share the Mason carriage with Dick himself, his mother and sister. But, as Dick informed Kitty with perfect composure, Charley Morse was coming with an invitation. He had passed him on the way. Charley did not know of Dick's arrangement, and Kitty was to take her choice with the old schoolgirl freedom.

"Charley, of course," Kitty said, watching him sharply.

"I supposed so," with perfect good temper. "But I say, Kitty, if you were one of my own sisters—"

"Well, if I were one of your own sisters?"

"Your gown, you know."

"Yes, I know," mockingly. "It's very kind of you, Dick."

The blood ran into his face.

"Of course you know I don't mind. You are Kitty, and that's enough for me, in any thing. But a stranger—and Charley is so fastidious—and he'll be here in a minute."

She thrust out a small ragged foot.

"It is rather awful. I'll go and make myself fine. Don't you be afraid, Dick."

And not another glimpse of her did he get, though he lingered to the last possible minute.

Leah sat and swung placidly in her low rocker. Her cheap, neat-patterned lawn was as fresh as when she put it on three days ago; the lace-work in her slim hands looked elegant trifling instead of having a money value for every inch. Dick's presence did not interfere with her train of thought; they had been neighbors all their lives; she had known him from the day when he attained his first jacket. So whether he talked or was silent it did not matter.

"What a wife you'd make for a poor man," he said, suddenly, out of a long pause.

It seemed as if every one who approached her in some way touched the trouble in her mind. She did not reply, looking at him with a kind of pained smile and going on with her lace.

It looked a very pretty summer picture—the girl in the shady porch, the handsome, idle youth lounging on the steps at her feet. George Holland thought so, driving past.

The stylish horses in their glittering harness, the elegance of the light vehicle behind them, caught Leah's attention.

"Who is it?" she asked, rather abruptly.

"George Holland."

He did not tell her, as he might have done, that Holland, having seen her at church the Sunday before, had left no stone unturned to find her out. If Leah had only known it, the cream-colored bunting over which she had hesitated so long in the buying was destined to be rather an important factor in that summer's history.

She had one of those sweet, pure New England faces, flower-like in delicacy, and yet almost severe in unobtrusive strength. The thoughtful dark eyes were deep and shadowy; her mouth had an unconscious sadness in its sweet curves. In her ivory-hued dress and bonnet she looked not unlike some precious bit of carving in the dusk of the hot, dim church.

George Holland could afford fancies. He was thirty-five, rich, and alone in the world. It was new riches coming after years of grinding poverty. Five years of possession had not worn off the charm of novelty. Perhaps he overvalued his new estate; certainly there were excuses for him if he did.

So Kitty went to the picnic with Charley Morse, and Leah occupied a part of the back seat of the Mason carriage, and chatted contentedly with Mrs. Mason all the way out to the High Rock.

The Allen girls, living all their days in this quiet country village where in childhood at least the lines were not very sharply drawn between the different social grades, had known as school playmates every other girl in the party. There was no question of education or breeding; it was simply the want or possession of money that made the difference between them. As the Allen fortunes had contracted little by little, Leah had dropped out of the village festivities. She could not afford the time nor the strength to keep up the struggle for appearances at the cost it involved. It was easier to accept the life of renunciation that lay before her, to spend her few hours of leisure over a book or her music. The world is all alike down to its very smallest piece. Slip out of the channel, and the current does not go out of its way to follow you. Leah's associates had always been older than herself. Most of them were married now, and that helped to make her feel that she belonged to a bygone generation.

The day was pleasant enough—a good deal like other days. It was only as they were preparing to come home that any thing out of the ordinary happened.

She had met George Holland, and had looked at him with a new standard of measurement in her mind. She found him quietly commonplace, not obtrusive and not young. There was nothing knightly about him. Leah had had her ideals like other girls.

They had waited for the sunset, and now under a white full moon they were starting on their homeward ride.

She stood leaning against a tree-trunk, wondering idly why Dick did not come to summon her. She was quite alone; most of the others had already gone. A step crushed among the crisp moss beside her. She turned with a smile, and it was George Holland.

"Mr. Mason sent me," with grave politeness. "Something has happened to his carriage, and there will necessarily be a change of arrangement about going home. Miss Mason will go with your sister. Will you allow me to drive you?"

Leah's heart gave a quick little bound—a half-guilty one. It was of Holland that she was thinking as he came up, not with any girlish flutterings or specious self-deceiving—just coolly making up her mind with the hard, clear, logical, directness of the New England mental processes.

He had thought as he approached her how sweet and pure and utterly unworldly she looked. And she was saying to herself:

"If he asks me, I will marry him."

There were ways enough. Other girls did as much for the men they cared for, and no one blamed them or thought they had overstepped the bounds of maidenly propriety. And just then his voice sounded in her ears.

For the first few minutes of the ride very little was said. Leah had never had a flirtation in her life. The matter before her was dead, solemn earnest. Her small hands lay lightly clasped in her lap; the soft evening wind blew her hat back on her neck, and she did not replace it. The moon shone full on her face, and deepened the shadows of the long lashes against her cheek.

"I fear I am rather a dull companion," he said, at last. "It has not come in my way to talk to young ladies much."

"Are young ladies different from other people—in their conversational demands, I mean?"

"Yes, rather. That is, I know very little about them; I am not a society man."

"Are you not?" She felt a half-contempt for the self-consciousness that began with an apology.

"No. But," cheerfully, "neither am I an artist or poet."

"I hope you are a good driver," a little sharply.

A rabbit had rushed across the road under the horses' noses. The impatient beasts improved the occasion. They reared and plunged and broke into a dead run. The wood road was narrow and rough; the light vehicle swung from side to side. Leah caught her breath and braced herself in her seat. He was busy with his horses. When he checked them at last, and had time to look at her, apparently she had not moved a muscle. He could not see that the hands lying in her lap were clenched like iron.

"You are a wonderful girl," he said, nonestly. "I expected you to scream. Turn your face to the light and let me see you. How white you are! Were you frightened?"

"Yes."

That was all she said. Her lips were too unsteady. At heart she was a horrible coward, but she had the pluck and pride not to betray herself often.

"Well, there was reason. We had about one chance out of four of not being overturned. As I was saying, I am neither a poet nor a painter."

"I suppose I should be afraid of you if you were. I never knew a man who was either."

"But I have learned to drive," smiling, "fortunately for both of us. All my life long it has been the practical that has been uppermost," half sadly.

"I do not know that you need regret that. I think it is the practical that comes first in most lives."

"In your life?"

"Decidedly!" There was a sharp little ring in her voice.

"I have always been a poor man," he said, deliberately. "Does poverty make a man better or worse?"

She caught her breath again, as if she were on the verge of a hysterical outbreak. Perhaps her fright had broken up her unusual calm—Leah Allen was not a woman who turned her life inside out for all eyes.

"I know one woman whose temper is about ruined by it. I am very poor myself."

Perhaps he thought he had gone far enough. His next sentence was as quietly commonplace, as any thing Charley Morse would have said.

Kitty had reached home first. It was quite natural that she should come to the gate to meet them as they drove up. It struck Leah with a kind of surprise, as she realized all at once how very pretty her sister had grown to be. Looking up, she saw her own surprise reflected in Holland's face with a warmer sense of admiration.

Leah's getting ready for sleep was always a protracted process. She had a hundred little old-maidish ways of disposing of her belongings. Kitty, whose room was always a drift of garments, used to curl up on the foot of the bed and gossip over the day's happenings. When Leah reached the last braid Kitty knew her time had come, and fled. To-night Leah was a long time in reaching that last braid, and Kitty was unusually silent.

"Have you had a nice day?" she asked, at length.

"Very nice," abruptly.

"Do you like George Holland?"

Leah was busy folding a ribbon she had worn. She did not answer at once.

"I do not dislike him," in her slow way.

"I am going to marry that man, if I can make him ask me. I am sick to death of this struggle for mere existence. Other girls have time for dress and amusement. I cannot bear it, and I will not."

Leah turned in amusement. Kitty has raised herself on her elbow. She was very pale and her eyes were unnaturally large and bright.

After all, it was only her own determination. She felt herself incapable of reply or remark, turning away again with a weary half sigh.

After that day life seemed to run in a new channel for the Allen girls. Where Mason had come once before, he came twice now, walking into the house at all hours and on all pretences. Holland had been at the house three times before ten days had gone. He did not always talk much; when he did, it was with a curious absence of personality. Leah never had to complain of his self-consciousness in those times. He talked to her and looked at Kitty.

One day there came a note from Mrs. Herrick, Holland's cousin. She had some sort of a lawn party on her mind, and there were invitations for Leah and Kitty.

"Wear your white hunting and tea roses," a pencilled line to Leah said. "I have a special reason."

And Leah wore the white hunting and tea roses, "by request," smiling to herself over her own special reason—the want of another gown.

By contrast Kitty put on some thin black dress, a relic of other years, that with a little silk and lace and judicious bits of jet was pretty still for evening wear.

That night there was good parlor music—a piano deftly played, a violin that seemed to dissolve in the sweet Strauss waltzes. Leah Allen, floating down the long parlors in Dick Mason's arms, with softly flushed cheeks and wide luminous eyes, was something more than just an ordinary pretty girl.

Quiet and colorless as her life seemed, there was in her a vein of something that touched the edge of the realm of art. Like many another woman of our frozen North, she was dumb. She neither sang nor played, and she had not the gift of tongues. By the law of contradiction, perhaps, she danced as if a spirit possessed her feet.

It was three years since her last taste of the one enthusiasm of her life. As the waltz ended she paused a minute by Mason's side as the last strain left them. His arm half held her; she looked up into his face with a sigh of supreme satisfaction. Mason was the best waltzer in town, and the dance had been perfection. He smiled back, understanding her completely. And then she met Holland's eyes fixed on her with a look that drove the blood out of her face.

He hardly said a dozen words to her all the evening. He did not dance, and in the intervals he was with Kitty.

Mrs. Herrick found a minute for a private speech with Leah.

"Don't let that pretty sister of yours flirt with my cousin, unless she is prepared for serious consequences. George never gave up a fancy in his life."

"I don't think Kitty is a flirt," Leah said, thoughtfully.

"Only to put you on your guard, my dear. George Holland is one of those dreadful men who are in dead earnest all their lives through."

After that Leah watched her sister with keener eyes. She made a discovery that took her by surprise. Dick Mason was watching Kitty, too, with a thunderous cloud on his handsome face. It gave Leah a sense of things gone wrong in the world. Dick Mason had always seemed like one of themselves. That Kitty could bring that pained look into his eyes was the last thing she would ever have dreamed.

He came and bent over her chair with an air of confident friendliness that to a looker on might have seemed to have a tender meaning of its own.

"What does it mean? Does she care for that man?"

"I don't know. I'm all adrift. Take me home, Dick. No one will miss me."

But one man at least missed her, and found the zest quite gone from his evening. He got himself out of the house, and taking all his chances in the malarial damp of the summer night, came to a conclusion as the gray dawn crept up the east.

"He never shall have her. Good fellow as he is, he is no more worthy of her than—I am. But I can understand her, thank Heaven, and he never will."

And "he" was Dick Mason, and the "her" Leah Allen.

A month slid by. Mason haunted the house, and Holland's evenings away were the exception. Mason was sulky, Holland cool, watchful, non-committal, Leah silent, and Kitty as brilliant and uncertain as a glancing flame.

"If we were young ladies of leisure, it might be amusing. As it is, does the game pay for the candle?" Kitty said.

They were sewing at midnight, to make up for the afternoon and evening hours. Mason had stopped on his way home from the bank, and had staid to tea. With the twilight Holland had come in.

"It shall pay," answering her own question. "And George Holland is the stake," with a hard laugh and tightening of the lips.

Leah did not answer.

"Not that I care," looking her sister in the face. "If he asks you, Leah, I shall be glad. It doesn't matter much only it seems to be me."

"Yes," Leah assented.

They were not girls to waste words. Matters went on as before. If Kitty drove with Holland one day, and came back to find Mason sitting gloomily beside Leah, why, it was Leah's turn next day, and Mason had the comfort of spending the time in trying to please an absent-minded, preoccupied young woman who seemed not to know either his mind or her own.

Kitty's black dress was in strings; the white bunting was no longer fresh.

"It ought to have lasted another year," Leah said, with regretful emphasis.

"Blessed old dud! It was that dress that procured us the honor of Mr. Holland's friendship, as he tells me once in three days. He has likened you to every thing, from a calla-lily to the Sphinx. It ought to have been you, Leah, I think."

"Do you mean—" quickly.

"No, I don't. He is quite as inscrutable as he was the first day he came here. I wish for Dick's sake he would speak and have it over with."

"For Dick's sake! Kitty, do you care for Dick?"

Kitty's fingers trembled a little over the rent she was darning.

"Care for him? Of course I do. I hope I am good Christian enough to care for all human kind;" and then her voice broke. "What is the use? I know what you mean, Leah. Girls as poor as we are can't indulge in the luxury of 'caring' for a poor man. George Holland has money and is respectable!—and if he asks me to marry him, I shall say yes."

"But, Kitty," hesitatingly, "if you love Dick—"

"That has nothing to do with it. And I don't at all know that Dick loves me. Besides, you said it yourself, you would never marry a poor man."

"But this is different."

"Don't talk about it any more," taking up her work and speaking with cold decision. "Suppose I should marry Dick—I mean in the event of his asking me—what would become of mother and you?"

Leah said no more.

That afternoon George Holland's black horses stood again at the door. Leah was coming down the staircase as he ran up the steps to the open door.

It is a lovely day."

"Lovely," with regretful eyes going beyond him in the afternoon brightness. He saw the wistful look.

"Come and see how pleasant it is on the lake road."

She hesitated a little. Play now meant work by night. But Kitty loved Dick Mason, and if it was true that there must be a sacrifice in the family; and perhaps Kitty might be wrong in her opinion of his preference. She doubted sometimes if Kitty understood him thoroughly. As for her, she loved no one; and then her heart beat hard again.

It took only a breath or two for that and the half-desperate resolve to save Kitty if any womanly art could do it. She raised her eyes to his face—those soft, dark eyes—with all her trouble showing in them. He could not read their meaning, he saw only the shadows.

"You look as if a little of the out-of-doors would not hurt you," he said.

"Thank you. I will go. You will go in to mother and Kitty?"

"No. Thanks. I will stop here. Pardon me—I torbid a toilet," as she turned to mount the stairs again. "We cannot afford the time, you know."

So Leah's shade-hat went on with the afternoon dress—a white one with inexpensive Hamburg trimmings. At the door a cluster of roses, the very last of the season, burned their fragrant red fire. She paused to gather them. The stem was tough; she stooped and bit the stalk with her sharp little teeth. She uttered a low exclamation, and drew her handkerchief across her lips. A thorn had brought the blood.

"Did you hurt yourself?"

"It is nothing," with a short laugh. "One has to take the thorns with the roses;" but the commonplace did not sound so commonplace as she said it.

Half the cluster she twisted into her belt. The other half she fastened at her throat. There was nothing shrinking nor repellent in her manner to-day. He felt it in a half-unconscious fashion. The snow maiden was suddenly alive, with life in her eyes and warm blood burning in her cheeks. Once before he had seen the transfiguration, but that was under the spell of music and—Dick Mason's presence. He looked at the red roses on her breast, and then into her face, with a sense of the harmony between the woman and her flowers.

To all seeming he was busy with his horses' head-gear. She did not know that he had looked at her, even. He seemed to her always cold, unimpulsive, self-absorbed.

Out through the summer afternoon among the shadows of the wood roads to the blue edge of the lake among the hills. Clearly it was his duty to offer some remark to the lady by his side, but for three miles not a word was said. Three miles of silence. Leah stirred a little restively.

"Your village is a pretty place," he said, absently.

"In summer—yes."

"And not in winter? You do not like the country in winter?"

"I know nothing of any thing else. This place has always been my home."

"And you would not care for the city?" waking up to the situation, apparently.

Leah was in a high-strung mood that exaggerated every thing. She was resentfully conscious of his hesitation, his absent-mindedness, the effort with which he brought himself back to her presence.

"It was Kitty he wanted," she thought. "And Kitty doesn't love him, and she does love Dick Mason."

He was saying, "I can fancy, Miss Leah, that you would find your element there. Music, and color and life—the intense, sympathetic life of a crowd. You would like it after a little."

"I should be lost, I am afraid," smiling faintly. "I belong among the half hues, the negatives, I think."

"Who told you that? I don't know of a woman in the world more emphatically capable of deep tones than yourself."

He was quite awake now.

"It is rather unfortunate," dryly. "I am not likely to come in contact with much that this place does not afford."

"When the fairy prince comes you'll scorn the imputation, but then you are dreaming now—you'll be o'er the hills and far away into all kinds of wonders."

"Shall I? I cannot imagine a fairy prince, or one of any variety, coming into Lakeden."

"And till he comes—you'll never marry?" looking away from her.

"I have hardly thought as far as that," coldly. She could not control her voice.

"No, I suppose not. Women are different." He was still looking away from her; his own voice was not cold, rather broken and unsteady. "As for me, I'm no longer a young man. Years ago, when I stood alone face to face with the world, I said to myself that I would never ask a woman to share my struggle. Now that there is no longer any need of hardship, I find that I have hardly the courage to ask a woman to share the easy life that my new riches has opened to me. It seems some way as if I was simply buying a wife."

It was more like a soliloquy than any speech that required answer. Leah did not speak. Was that the way he talked to Kitty?

"Sometimes I am conscious of a kind of pity for myself, as if there were nothing more lonely in the world than my life. I can't even work. I have tried to interest myself in the old pursuits, and there is no motive behind it. I can't do it."

"If I were a man, with money, I should neither ask pity, nor feel that I deserved it."

She looked him straight in the face. There was a touch of scorn in the expression of her lips and in the sound of her voice. She began to be interested in him, to the extent at least of wanting him to assert his man's prerogative of dominant strength.

"You know what it is to be poor, you say. But to be poor and a woman—you do not know that!"

She flung out her hands with palms turned outward, this woman who never made a gesture, and then dropped them with a shivering sigh.

"Is it so bad as that?" he asked, gently.

She did not answer him. The horses walking over the sandy road among the pines. There was no sound but the soft crushing of their hoofs and the wheels. This was no unconscious self-betrayal in which he had been indulging. He meant to win this woman for his wife, and if one means of approach failed, he should try another. That he believed Dick Mason loved her did not matter in the least to him. Dick would console himself elsewhere. If she loved Dick, that would have been a different matter—perhaps.

"I think," he said, slowly, "there may be brighter days in store for both of us. Would you marry a man you did not love, Miss Leah?"

The question was so irrelevant, so unexpected! She flung it back at him.

"Would you marry a woman who did not love you, Mr. Holland?"

It took him off his guard a little.

How Watch Cases are Made.

In 1875, thirteen men comprised the entire working force used in the manufacture of the James Boss' Gold Watch Case. Now over five hundred are employed, and the number is constantly increasing. The reason of this increase is this: In the James Boss' Gold Watch Case all the metal in sight and subject to wear is solid gold, while the remainder, which only lends strength to the case, is of stronger metal than gold, giving gold where gold is needed, and strong, elastic metal where strength and elasticity are needed, a combination producing a watch case better than solid gold and at ONE-HALF the cost.

Over 200,000 of these cases have been sold, and every jeweler in the country can testify to their quality and merit.

LUDINGTON, MICH., Dec. 5, 1882.

E. W. Marsh, of the Democrat, bought a Jas. Boss' Gold Watch case 18 years ago, and carried it until a short time ago, when I purchased it, and sold it to a customer. The case showed no signs of wear, except that natural to any case, and I am satisfied can be safely guaranteed for at least ten years more. I have sold the James Boss' Gold Watch Case for many years, and the parties who bought the first ones are carrying them to-day, as well satisfied as though they had bought a solid gold case costing twice the money. I regard them as the only cases of this kind a jeweler should sell who desires to give his customers the worth of their money or values his reputation.

Ringworm Humor and Salt-Rheum.

RAYNHAM, MASS., Aug. 12, 1878.

C. I. Hood & Co.: Gentlemen— * * * * I have had ringworm humor and salt rheum so badly that my body was covered with raw sores; so, also, my head and face. I have had any number of doctors in the last seven years, and none of them could cure me. One day my mother was in the city of Taunton, and found one of your cook books, and in reading it I found many people testifying to cures from the use of your Sarsaparilla and Olive Ointment. I felt forced to try it, although I had seen many things advertised that never did me any good. I have now taken two small bottles and one large one of Sarsaparilla, and used three boxes of Ointment. I now call myself cured. Nothing can be seen of the humor but the dim outlines of the sores. I shall take two more bottles, and then the cure will be complete.

I am gratefully yours,
EDGAR F. WHITMAN.

Biliousness, Sick Headache.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gents—Please send me by express two bottles Hood's Sarsaparilla and a few Cook Books for distribution. Your preparation has worked wonders in the case of my wife, who has been troubled with sick headache and biliousness for years. She only took one-half teaspoonful at a dose, and has not been so well for five years as now. She found that within a week after taking it she felt very much better, and is now entirely free from those severe headaches. She has not taken any of any account since last spring, and what little she had is lent to do some others some good, and we must have it in the house.

Yours truly,

A NARROW ESCAPE

Sleep after fatigue, and health after disease, are two of the sweetest experiences known to man. Fourteen years is a long time in which to suffer, yet Mr. Peter Lawler of Dalton, Mass., had led a miserable life for that period through the presence of stone in the bladder. That he sought in all directions for a cure is an almost superfluous statement, he did obtain temporary relief, but nothing more. Last January he called on Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who said after examination: "Mr. Lawler, you have stone in the bladder. We will first try DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY before risking an operation." A few days later the following letter passed through the Rondout post-office:

DALTON, MASS., February 6.

Dear Dr. Kennedy:—The day after I came home I passed two gravel stones, and am doing nicely now. PETER LAWLER.

Dr. Kennedy now has the stones at his office, and they are sufficiently formidable to justify the claim that Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is the leading specific for stone in the bladder. In this letter Mr. Lawler mentions that Favorite Remedy also cured him of rheumatism. The subjoined certificate tells its own story.

OLD BERKSHIRE MILLS,
DALTON, Mass. April 27, 1882.

Mr. Peter Lawler has been a resident of this town for the past seventeen years, and in our employ for fifteen years, and in all these years he has been a good and respected citizen of the town and community. He has had some chronic disease to our knowledge for most of the time, but now claims to be, and is, in apparent good health. CHAS. O. BROWN, President.

DALTON, Mass., June 9, 1884.

Dr. Kennedy—Dear Friend:—Thinking you might like to hear again from an old patient, I am going to write you. It is now three and a half years since first I went to see you. As I told you then I was troubled with kidney disease for about fifteen years, and had seven of the best doctors to be found; but I received only temporary relief until I visited you and commenced taking your "Favorite Remedy." I continue taking the Remedy according to your directions, and now consider myself a well man. Very gratefully yours, PETER LAWLER.

Our letter of April 27, 1882, holds good as far as Mr. Lawler's testimony is concerned regarding his health. CHAS. O. BROWN.

THE ALLEN GIRLS.

Concluded from First Page.

"If I loved her and believed in nerves." He said it slowly; there was a kind of sweetness, almost a solemnity in his voice. It was almost as if he were repeating a vow to himself. "Yes, I think I should be strong enough for even that, and she would love me at last, if patient endeavor could win her."

The tears came into her eyes. There was no purpose in that, George Holland was worth something beside his money. She looked up into his face, not trying to hide her own.

Why did he not speak the final words then? He never could tell himself. Perhaps at heart he was a coward, and dared not face defeat. Perhaps it was easier to linger awhile longer in the shadow of uncertainty, rather than meet the bare, hard fact of refusal.

He touched his horses lightly with the whip and they sprang forward. The spell was broken. With the rapid motion they flung all personal subjects behind them. They talked of the hills and Lakeden in winter, and he told her of his life in India and Australia and the ends of the earth.

The next morning, without a word to any one, he went to New York.

When he stood again in Lakeden post-office a week's accumulation of mail awaited him. He was carelessly looking over his handful of letters and papers, standing with his back to a group of loungers on the porch. Out of the hum of voices came as distinctly as if spoken for his benefit the words:

"Both the Allen girls are down with the smallpox."

He felt, as if some one had struck him. He did not turn for a minute, standing quite still. When he had got his balance again, he walked out among the idlers.

"Who is their doctor?" he asked, in a matter-of-fact way.

"Dr. Sprague;" and then there was a silence.

They looked after him as he walked away.

"He was courting the youngest one," some one remarked.

"Bad business for her. She was as pretty as a picture sometimes."

Dr. Sprague was in his office. Holland and the young man had grown very friendly in the few weeks of his stay in Lakeden. The doctor confirmed the story.

"Who is taking care of them?"

"Their mother."

"Yes, of course; but she has help, I suppose?"

"She is quite alone."

"You don't mean that that woman is alone, absolutely alone, in the house with two cases of small-pox?"

"I do mean just that. Remember that you are in the country and among Yankees. Prudence and a traditional horror of the disease will relieve her from all annoyance from callers."

"Where are the Masons?"

"Out of town, unfortunately. Lizzie Mason—the only one at home—and my landlady send in every thing they have to eat. I take it myself."

"But they might get a professional nurse."

"They might—yes, if they had money. But one would have to come from the city, and the Allens are poor—probably you do not know how poor?"

"No."

"They own that place without a cent of income. That is all. Food, clothing, taxes, every thing, those two girls have earned with their needles."

"Good Heavens!"

"Perhaps you can see now that there cannot be any wide margin for the luxuries or even the necessities of life."

George Holland walked twice the length of the narrow office before he spoke.

"There ought to be a man in the house."

"One would be a convenience, certainly."

"And I am going there."

Dr. Sprague looked at him curiously.

"I suppose you see all it involves?"

Holland turned sharply.

"See here. The day before I went to New York I did every thing but ask Leah Allen to be my wife. If she gets well, I shall give her the chance to accept or refuse, as she chooses."

"She can't well refuse. Think twice."

"I don't want her to."

That afternoon Mrs. Allen, half asleep in her arm-chair between the two beds, heard a man's step behind her. She was too worn out to turn her head.

"I've had a hard day, doctor," she said, faintly.

There was no answer. Holland stood looking about the rooms. Every bit of superfluous furniture had been removed. The windows were darkened, but the carpetless floors and bare walls looked comfortless enough. A narrow bedstead stood on each side of the room. Under the white covering of each a motionless figure lay outstretched.

"It is I, Mrs. Allen. I have come to stay with you till this is over."

"You!" in blank amazement. "I don't understand."

"There is nothing very strange. Dr. Sprague told me. I have had the disease, and I am not in the least afraid of it. I have taken the liberty of sending to New York for a nurse. She will be here on the midnight train, and Dr. Sprague will bring her up."

"I don't understand."

"Then you will have to take me on trust," smiling. "I am here, and you can't turn me out. I have a fire under the kettle boiling below. I am a tolerable cook along with my other good qualities, and I shall bring you a cup of tea in a few minutes."

The nurse came that night—a strong-armed, unemotional, skilful machine. But fearful days followed. Help in the kitchen was not of course to be thought of. Holland had all kinds of deft, helpful ways. He cooked with a woman's handiness and a man's skill. Mrs. Allen, busy with her invalid messes and forgetting herself, found food ready for her without thought of her own. The nurse ate with the same mechanical regularity that she did every thing else. Holland and Sprague had more than one interview in pantry and kitchen, and found a good deal of fun in the new attitude of affairs. The doctor was the one channel of communication with the well, untainted outside world.

"How that woman does eat, to be sure!" Holland said, ruefully. "She has ordered beefsteak and onions for to-day. How do you cook 'em?"

"I'll ask Mrs. Smith. It isn't in a book anywhere, I suppose?"

Poor Mrs. Allen! She had given up every thing in her anxiety. They could not even take their beefsteak-and-onion problem to her. And though she knew well enough the tempest of conjecture and criticism and unkindly remark that George Holland's presence in the house would arouse, the nearer misery of these days shut it all out. As for him, he never thought of it. I suppose if he had, he would not have cared. He had lived too long outside of conventionalities.

In the long days when he was not housekeeping he wandered about the still rooms with a strange feeling of treading on sacred ground. Mrs. Allen had given him the freedom of the house with trembling lips. He smoked his cigars wherever he pleased; the feeling of sacredness did not hinder that sort of incense burning.

At sundown one night Dr. Sprague came.

Holland came in from the kitchen. He was in his shirt-sleeves, and there was a dash of flour in his moustache. He looked hot and cross.

"I've been baking biscuit," he said, "and saleratus is the devil."

"Why don't you use baking powder?"

"Because you were not here to send for it."

"I will bring it in the morning. I shall stay here to-night," gravely.

Holland looked at him.

"The turning point comes to-night for both of them," answering the unspoken question. "And the end is doubtful."

He came back to Holland after a while. All night the two men sat in the dimly-lighted porch. At intervals Sprague went to the sick-room. Holland did not leave his chair. The brief summer night went on. He heard the hours strike in the house; the great, slow stars went on and down their short circuit. At dawn, after a longer stay than usual doctor came back.

"They are going to get well," he said, "but how I don't dare think. Next to the way I've struggled for those girls' lives I've fought for their complexions."

"Will you come up now?"

Holland started up. He was still in the house. Indeed the inmates were by no means out of quarantine, though the nurse had gone back, and all sorts of disinfecting disturbances had been going on for some days.

He stood in the room. He knew that the two sisters were there, dressed, waiting for him, but he stood on the threshold without raising his eyes.

"How do you do, Mr. Holland?" It was Kitty's voice, tremulous and high-keyed with weakness. And still he did not look up.

"O, you may look at Leah," Kitty went on, querulously. "She won't shock you; but you may keep your eyes off me, if you please."

He crossed the room and took the two wasted hands that Leah held out to him.

"My dear," he said, "I vowed that if this minute ever came, I should ask the question that I left unspoken the last time I saw you. Will you be my wife?"

Kitty sprang to her feet.

"Leah, you sha'n't! George Holland, she is only selling herself to you because we are so poor. You think because she has been so ill and has lost her beauty that she will say yes."

"Kitty!" Leah's voice sounded clear and stern. But Kitty's hysterical excitement was at too high flood to be checked by a word.

"You came into the house when no one else would come: you have kept us from starvation, I believe; and now you spoil it all by this. Leah shall not marry you."

She stumbled back into her chair with a sob.

"You know just how people will talk about us. It is the price we shall have to pay for being kept alive. And you think it will force her to accept you."

Without one other word, George Holland dropped the hand he held, and went out of the room and out of the house. Dr. Sprague was not in his office. He shut himself into an inner room, and waited. The doctor came after he had had an hour for reflection, and brought him a card with a feebly pencilled line over Leah's name:

"Do not go away till I have seen you again."

"So that little termagant has been giving you a piece of her mind. Dick Mason will have his hands full some day."

"Dick Mason?"

"Yes. If you hadn't been the blindest of infatuated owls, you would have seen that he has been jealous as a Turk all summer. That's an old affair."

"Dick Mason and Kitty!"

"Don't you see that Kitty's question cuts both ways? You had better make them understand that you did play Providence first out of humanity, and then offer to marry one of them to save their feelings. You are a wellmeaning young man, but you are an awful blunderer."

"Yes, thank you," reaching out vaguely for his hat. "I'll go up and make it right."

"No, you won't to-day. You've done quite enough for one day."

Mrs. George Holland finished her convalescence on board her husband's yacht. They had been at sea a month, and Leah had learned the secret of keeping her feet even in a half gale.

Looking at her now with the sea-brown on forehead and cheek, unscarred if not so smooth and clear as of old, George Holland was thinking that she looked far younger than in the days when he had first known her. She looked up and caught his eyes fixed on her. She went over to his side; it was in the twilight, and the shadow of the sail.

"George," she said, "there is one question you have never asked me."

"I wonder what?"

"No matter. Look at me"—creeping closer to his side—"I love you, dear."

They wintered in the Mediterranean.

As the weeks passed Kitty—Kitty was with them—got back something of her lost bloom. She had perseveringly refused to see Dick Mason before she left home—poor Dick who had pleaded with all his eloquence. Even his little notes went back unopened. But toward spring she spoke of him once, the first time, voluntarily.

It was not long after that that the yacht made a quick run to Cowes. "To meet a friend," Holland said.

And the friend was Dick Mason.

C. A. Wright & Co. distinctly state that Acker's English Remedy has and does cure contracted consumption. Ask for circular. An entire new medicine, guaranteed.

C. A. Wright & Co., will refund the price paid if Acker's Blood Elixir does not relieve any skin or blood disorder. A new, but thoroughly tested discovery.

If you are troubled with sores, aches pains and general weakness of the various bodily functions, don't be deceived by the advertisements of bitters kidney medicines, etc., whose certificates of pretended cures, are often paid for. Put your trust in that simple remedy called Dr. Guysett's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. It will cure you by purifying the blood and strengthening the weak portions of your body. You will also find it very refreshing to the brain and nervous system. The proprietors receive hundreds of letters bestowing upon it the highest praise.

We believe that the rank and file of both the Democratic and Greenback parties in Michigan are in favor of uniting their forces and pulling together in the fall campaign. The leaders should be given to understand in unmistakable terms where the people stand on this question. "In union is strength" must be the watch word of the opposition to the Republican party this fall. A fusion ticket properly made will be stronger this fall than it was two years ago.

The testimony of many who long suffered from ill health, caused by an impure state of the blood, goes to prove that the best remedy for making the blood rich, red and pure, for beautifying the complexion, for curing sores, pimples and other skin diseases, for removing aches, pains, stiff joints, rheumatism, etc., for increasing the power of endurance, for giving health and strength to every weak portion of the body, is Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. Its effect pleases the user in every instance. No other remedy equals it.

It is now reported that Henry Ward Beecher has revised his decision to support Cleveland and has concluded to oppose him. Perhaps he is stricken with a conscientious fear that the reports against Gov. Cleveland's private character may possibly be true.

The warm weather often has a depressing and debilitating effect. Hood's Sarsaparilla overcomes all languor and lassitude.

Your cough is growing worse. That soreness pain and in the throat and lungs is increasing. Better get rid of the absurd idea that any thing will cure a cough or cold, and give Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry a trial before it is too late. It never fails to check consumption, and quickly cures all coughs and colds.

The Battle Creek common council has just ordered all hacks and carryalls to pay for and procure a license.

It Will Cure You!

GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS are the great blood purifier, liver and kidney remedy and life giving principle, a perfect renovator and invigorator of the system carrying away all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease. Every moment of our lives, every part of our bodies, is wearing out and is being built up anew. This work is accomplished by the blood. The blood if pure makes the entire circuit of the body every seven minutes. But if it becomes weak or vitiated and does not perform its work properly the system is actually poisoned by the worn-out matter clogging the vital organs instead of leaving the body. Cleanse the blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, sores, etc. Keep the liver in order, the blood pure, health of the system will follow. Take GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS and no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS

The feeble grow strong when Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is used to promote assimilation of the food and enrich the blood. Indigestion, the chief obstacle to an acquisition of strength by the weak, is an ailment which infallibly succumbs to the action of this peerless corrective. Loss of flesh and appetite, failure to sleep, and growing evidence of premature decay, are speedily counteracted by the great invigorant, which braces up the physical energies and fortifies the constitution against disease. For sale by all druggists and dealers generally.

The Democratic and National State Conventions did a good work. A strong ticket was placed in the field which will gather in the entire National and Democratic votes of the State. Anybody cannot carry Michigan this year. Should David Preston be the Union nominee for governor, it will be a very interesting three cornered contest.

Grover Cleveland's letter of acceptance has met with a most favorable response. It is not an essay on current political history during the past twenty years, nor is it a dissertation on the tariff. He says just enough and says it in a brief and manly fashion. Every voter in the land will read it, and after reading it, will comprehend what it means. Every line is characteristic of the man.

Capt. E. P. Allen, of Ypsilanti, is the Republican nominee for Congress in this district. The three contestants for the honor were Capt. Miller, of Adrian, Gen. Spaulding, of Monroe, and Capt. Allen. On the first formal ballot Miller's vote was thrown for Allen, which nominated him. Col. Eldredge was renominated by the Democratic convention yesterday.—The contest will be a lively one, but we believe Col. Eldredge will get there.

The recent racket in the editorial rooms of the Detroit Evening Journal has already had a good effect. Witness the following taken from its columns:

It is not the province of the decent newspaper—even the political newspaper—to slander and smirch the private life of an individual simply for the purpose of defeating him for office. This is especially true of the independent newspaper. The Evening Journal is strickly an independent newspaper, and during the campaign, which now promises to be even more torrid than this present August weather, it will preserve its independence pure and simple. Those bitter partisans who take delight in reading of the skeletons that inhabit the closets of public men and the scandals that hang to the coat-tails of Presidential candidates will look elsewhere for their favorite reading matter—they will not find it in the columns of the Evening Journal. If it be asked how it was that this paper has heretofore in one notable instance departed from this principle, it may only be said, at present, that Providence works in an inscrutable way His wonders to perform, and out of clouds of sorrow and curses often come benefits and benedictions.

WHEN THE CAMPAIGN OPENS.

When the campaign opens, none will mistake its meaning. It will not bring to the fore the false or grossly exaggerated scandals which have been the daily food of party organs and party hummers during the last month. It will not present the inquiry when, where, to whom or under what circumstances one candidate was married a generation ago, nor will it consider what mountain of defamation may have been magnified out of a mole hill in the social life of another candidate half a generation ago. Neither such brutal spewings from the campaign liars of the day, nor the general or circumstantial defense of the assailed candidates, will have any important part in the great battle. There will be petty organs and mean orators to retail exploded and nauseating scandals, because they can understand nothing that is nobler or better; but when the campaign opens, the people and the leaders of the people, will hurl the partisan scavengers out of sight and out of hearing, and the issues, the principals of the contest will be discussed, considered and decided with a degree of intelligence and independence unequaled in all past political struggles.

When the campaign opens some weeks hence, party organs and orators will cease the sensational scandal trade, for the good reason that the people of all parties will resolutely resent them. There will then be a demand—a general and imperious demand—for the sober discussion of the problems of honest government, of reduced taxes, of a surplus of scores of millions exacted from the depressed business of the country, and of protection to labor. These are grave problems; problems which directly affect every honest laborer, banker, merchant, manufacturer, and business man in every section of the country, and they will rise above the poisoned mists of campaign scandals and dissipate them like the god of day in his morning flood of light.—Philadelphia Times.

THE TALLAPOOSA.

Commander Mervy Makes His Report Regarding the Sinking of the Vessel.

An Estimate of the River and Harbor Improvements—A Call for $10,000,000 Three Per Cent. Government Bonds.

REPORT OF THE LOSS OF THE TALLAPOOSA.

WASHINGTON, August 26.—Commander Mervy has made his report to the Secretary of the Navy upon the loss of the Tallapoosa: "On August 21, at 11:15, about four miles off East Chop Light, Mass., by collision with three masted schooner, James L. Lowell, the Tallapoosa was sunk. The Tallapoosa lies in nine fathoms of water at high tide. At the time of the collision the Tallapoosa was steaming with one boiler, half-power, against the flood tide and a strong wind from the southwest, and going over the ground about eight and one-half knots per hour. The weather was hazy near the horizon, but clear overhead. The red and green lights of the schooner were sighted about two points on the starboard bow, we showed our green light. To give her more room the Tallapoosa put her helm to starboard. All at once the schooner luffed and showed her red light. The collision was then inevitable. The schooner struck the steamer just forward of the fore rigging on the starboard side, cutting below the water line nearly amidships. It was evident that the Tallapoosa would sink, and every effort was made to clear the berth, deck, foreroom and ward room. All hands were called to abandon the ship, and officers and men went quickly to the boats. The ship sunk bow first, the bow apparently striking bottom before the stern began to sink. Before the stern went down the men were ordered into the rigging. The Executive officer, Chief Engineer and nine men, besides the Commander, took to the rigging. The ship sank in five minutes. The schooner anchored, and the men were picked up in boats and taken to her. The schooner sent a boat to assist. Another schooner also took thirty-six men. The steamer Gate City was hailed and stopped at the time and kindly provided for officers and men, and took them to Wood's Holl. The deaths of Passed Assistant Surgeon C. C. Black and George Foster, landsman, are reported. William O'Donnell and William Jones are also missing, but are known to be safe. As many as could be spared have been ordered to Boston and officers ordered home. The colliding schooner was a large vessel with 1,100 tons of coal on board. She was not seriously damaged, but leaks about the bow, her cutwater and some of her wood ends being started. One officer and seven men were left on board of her for assistance, after being towed into harbor. She declined further assistance.

IMPROVEMENTS AT HELL GATE.

General Newton has made a report upon the work of improvement on Hell Gate under his direction in which he states that little was accomplished last year owing to the absence of an appropriation, but that the arrangements for the final explosion in September, 1885, will be made this year. One million and a half has already been expended on this work and another million will be required and $600,000 will be needed to clear away the debris from the explosion.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Captain James Mercer has submitted his annual report to the chief of engineers of river and harbor improvements under his direction. For the improvement of the Hudson River, with a view to making an eleven foot channel to Troy $35,000 is asked to complete the project. For the Rondout harbor, New York, $10,000 is asked, and $20,000 for Buttermilk channel. For the Harlem river improvement $40,000 remains available; for Gowanus Bay $50,000 is asked. For New Rochelle harbors $23,000 and for Port Chester harbor $30,000, for the year ending June 30, 1886, $500,000 is asked to complete the work now in progress at Hell Gate, of this amount $60,000 is to be used in making excavations at flood rock; $180,000 for removing rock at Hell Gate and vicinity; and for removing broken stone after explosion of flood rock $260,000. The amount still necessary for the permanent completion of the entire work $1,602,963.

A CALL FOR $10,000,000.

Acting Secretary af the Treasury, Coon, this afternoon issued a call for ten million three per cent. bonds, to mature September 30, next. The bonds included in this call are as follows: $50 bonds, original No. 307 to original No. 314, both inclusive, and original No. 1312 to original No. 1313, both inclusive; $100, original No. 2256 to original No. 2362, both inclusive, and original No. 9514 to original No. 8548, both inclusive; $500, original No. 1115 to original No. 1159, both inclusive, and original No. 4009 to original No. 4024, both inclusive; $1000, original No. 10620 to original No. 11088, both inclusive, and original No. 22858 to original No. 22913, both inclusive; $10,000, original No. 19338 to 20301, both inclusive. Total, $10,000,000.

Attacked With Hydrophobia.

PAINESVILLE, Ohio, August 26.—Joe Kirby, a citizen of this place, was Sunday night suddenly taken with a fit of hydrophobia. At times he froths at the mouth, growls and barks like a dog and snaps at those about him. His spasms were so violent that it took several strong men to hold him. One physician says it is a clear case of hydrophobia, while others assert that it is the result of over drinking. Kirby was bitten by a dog a year ago. The result is anxiously awaited.

Conductor Killed.

MACON, Ga., August 26.—Details reach this city of a horrible murder on the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia Railroad, at Lambert City. Mr. Gus Raleigh, conductor on a freight train, had some dispute with a negro named Ed. Taylor, who knocked him on the right side of the head with a piece of timber, the blow felling him and throwing him under the passing cars, which crushed his head to a jelly. Taylor is at large.

Steamboats Burned.

SHREVEPORT, La., August 26.—Two river vessels, the wharfboat Maria Louise and the steamer Shields, owned by the Red River Cross Line, were burned to the water's edge yesterday. The flames broke out in the Maria Louise, quickly communicating with the steamer, destroying both boats and cargoes. Loss $35,000; insured in New Orleans agencies. There was no loss of life.

Caught at Last.

ELIZABETHTOWN, Ky., August 26.—H. A. Holdsworth, the forging cashier from this place, after having escaped for one year, was captured in New Orleans and brought here yesterday morning to await trial.

ST. JOHN AND DANIEL

Notified of their Nomination by the Prohibitionists for Presidential Honors.

CUBA, N. Y., August 26.—Ex-Governor St. John and Mr. Daniel were yesterday officially notified of their nomination for the Presidential offices by the Prohibition party. During the day these gentlemen were guests of the Cuba House and the ceremony was witnessed by five thousand people in the open air. The notification committee which consisted of prominent members of the party sat on the platform. Professor Dickey, chairman of their committee, opened proceedings with a few well chosen remarks, informing both gentlemen that they were the choice of the Prohibitionists. Ex-Governor St. John then responded in these words:

MR. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN OF THE COMMITTEE—In receiving this formal notification of my nomination for the highest office within the gift of the people, by the National Convention of the Prohibition party, permit me, despite the fact that the distinction was neither sought nor desired by me, to assure you in view of the unanimity with which it was given, of my high appreciation of the very great honor it confers. There are more political parties in the field to-day than there are political issues. Upon the great question as to what should be done with the traffic in intoxicating liquors, both the Democratic and Republican parties are in favor of making the traffic permanent, while the Prohibition party demands that it be placed under the condemnation of the law. There is an issue, clearly made, and, I think it safe to say that it is the only one to-day that reaches the heart and conscience of the citizens. Upon this issue we go to the people, the source of all prohibition power. Let us appeal to reason rather than to prejudice. Let those resort to personal abuse and scandal who have nothing better to uphold their cause.

The Prohibition party was not organized as a mere threat or menace. It is the outgrowth of a rapidly increasing sentiment against the liquor evil, an evil that the old parties dare not attack, but against which this young party of the people in defense of the homes of the Nation has entered upon a warfare that shall not cease so long as the flag of our country waves its protecting folds over a legalized dramshop. In this struggle let us ever remember that we are accountable to God, that our duty to Him is paramount to our duty to any political party. That political ties will never, in His sight, excuse a ballot for any party that does not stand up firmly for the right. Gentlemen, I accept the nomination.

After the ex-Governor had ceased speaking, Mr. Daniel stepped forward and delivered the following reply:

MR. CHAIRMAN AND MEMBERS OF THE COMMITTEE—I am profoundly gratified for the honor conferred by selecting me as one of the standard bearers of this great reform movement. I accept the nomination for the office of Vice President, and expect to do so more formally by letter hereafter, knowing well it is one of great responsibilities and no little of private sacrifice. I appreciate this honor not only as a personal one, but as a token of appreciation by the convention of the earnest prohibition work that has been accomplished in the State of Maryland. I also appreciate it as an evidence of our brethren of the North and West to obliterate sectional party lines, and to build up a grand Union party composed of the best element on both sides of the line arrayed against the worst element, the representatives of homes against the saloons. This is evident from the fact that I am the first Southern man since the war to receive the nomination for a National position. I hope this action may be the harbinger of a reign of harmony and good will in the land whatever may be the result of this effort as to the number of votes cast. I believe the agitation will be of immense advantage to the cause and the country. I believe the result will be to rivet the attention of the American people upon this liquor traffic as to cause the party adoption of such measures as will overthrow it. I have but to say in conclusion that I shall do all in my power, now and hereafter to bear on this Prohibition standard.

Much cheering was elicited from the vast audience both during the delivery of the speeches and at the conclusion.

The Brooklyn Postoffice Discrepancy.

BROOKLYN, August 26.—Colonel McLeer, the postmaster, said yesterday that he had appointed as his assistant in place of Colonel Morton, who had mysteriously disappeared, Mr. Samuel Smith. Colonel McLeer said he was unable even yet to understand why it was that Morton absconded. It certainly could not have been from the small discrepancies which were discovered in his accounts. He had not received a line from him since he went away, and was surprised to learn that Morton had written from Rotterdam to his wife "that he had gone away to save others." If there were others that he dared to save, it seemed rather inconsistent that he should make that statement now. The closest scrutiny had been made in all the departments of the office, and the only discrepancy found was the small amount in his accounts, which he believed Colonel Morton could explain if he were here.

President of the Conference Suspended.

BALTIMORE, Md., August 26.—At the colored M. P. Conference this morning the members had a lively time over the proposition to suspend the Rev. W. W. Wilson from the Presidency of the Conference pending an investigation of charges of immorality and neglect of duty. After lengthy arguments the question was put to a vote which resulted in the suspension of Mr. Wilson. The whole matter was then referred to a committee.

Humane Inventions at the World's Exposition.

BOSTON, August 26.—George T. Angell, President of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, has consented to organize a department at the World's Exposition at New Orleans, in which will be shown humane inventions for the benefit of animals, and literature and appliances used throughout the world by societies organized for this purpose.

Disease Among Swine.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., August 26.—A strange disease resulting fatally has broken out among swine in Guilford. Several animals have died, and previous to and just after death the hair will turn. The farmers are much alarmed.

Rampant Orangemen.

ST. JOHNS, N. F., August 25.—Hundreds of Orangemen attacked the Roman Catholic Church yacht at Henly harbor, threatened the missionary, Father Lynch, with death, tore down the Papal flag and tarred the yacht.

Will Go Out of the Business.

OTTAWA, Ont., August 26.—The cattle trade with England has proved disastrous to shipping this year, many will go out of the business. One firm has dropped $250,000.

DEATH OF DR. CHAS. RYND.

Dr. Charles Rynd, of Adrian, died suddenly of neuralgia of the heart on Wednesday evening of last week. He was on the streets during the afternoon in his usual health and attended the meeting of the Board of Pension Examiners. About 6 o'clock he drove home to supper, but did not come out again as he complained of feeling unwell and soon went to bed. Between eight and nine o'clock Dr. Kirkpatrick was telephoned for and came. He found Dr. Rynd perfectly conscious, and was assured by the latter that his heart was all right. Dr. Kirkpatrick endeavored to administer a preparation of spirits of ammonia, but the patient declined to take more than a teaspoonful, when he turned over and vomited, remarking, "There that will relieve me, and I'll tell you all about it in a few moments." Dr. Kirkpatrick told him not to talk, the patient then appeared perfectly conscious, and with no thought of serious results. He turned to one side, and without spasm or gasp, hardly without a movement of the eyelids, or a twitch of a muscle, he drew a long breath, and with it his life seemed to pass away. In ten minutes from the time Dr. Kirkpatrick reached his bedside, Dr. Rynd was a corpse.

Charles Rynd was born December 28, 1835, in the County of Donegal, Ireland. In May, 1851, having received for a boy of that age the groundwork of a first-class education, he came to this country alone and went directly to Canada. He worked on a farm, clerked in the store of Hon. T. B. Guest, of St. Mary's and afterwards assumed charge of a large school, which he managed with marked ability and success for five consecutive years. During these years he made good use of his spare time. Under the private tuition of a Presbyterian clergyman he became a good classical scholar. He wrote largely for the Toronto journals and studied medicine under the instruction of Dr. Daniel Wilson of St. Mary's. Dr. Rynd then left the Dominion and entered the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, where he took a thorough course of instructions not only in medicine, but also in the chemical laboratory. While in the University he was the private pupil and assistant of Prof. Gunn. In the spring of 1859 he graduated with honor, and devoted the following summer to hospital practice, settling in Adrian in November of the same year, where he has since resided. He has since his residence in Adrian served four years in the Common Council, where he inaugurated several important measures. He also served as President of the Board of Education. In the spring of 1871 he was nominated by the State Republican Convention as a candidate for Regent of the University, and was elected. He was one of the delegates to the convention at Cincinnati in 1876. He has for many years been the medical examiner of the Pension Bureau at Adrian, and when a board was located there he was continued as a member and chosen President by his colleagues. He was always an indefatigable worker, and by his energy and perseverance secured a very large and remunerative practice. He was a ready writer, a fluent and vigorous speaker, a warm friend to those he esteemed, liberal to a fault, thoroughly independent—in short, a good citizen.

Dr. Rynd was thrice married, and leaves a widow and seven children to mourn his loss.

ESTATE OF PARLEY J. SPALDING.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee—ss.

At a session of the Probate Court for the County of Lenawee, holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, on Wednesday, the 20th day of August, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four.

Present, Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Parley J. Spalding deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Charles T. Hewitt and Agnes G. Hewitt, executors of the last will and testament of said deceased, alleging that they are ready to file their second account as such executors, and asking for its allowance; and in case it shall prove feasible for them in rendering the same as and for their final account, that it may be so allowed, and a distribution of the residue of the assets of said estate to the persons entitled thereto, and in that case for their discharge.

Thereupon it is ordered, That Monday, the 15th day of September next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said court then to be holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, and show cause if any there be, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said county of Lenawee, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD,

TECUMSEH, MICH., AUG. 28, 1884.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Delos C. LeBaron, of Toledo, spent Sunday in Tecumseh.

Remember there will be fun at the Skating Rink this evening.

Mrs. Matilda Codner, of Clinton, is visiting friends in Tecumseh.

Mrs. E. C. Smith, of Toledo, was in Tecumseh Friday and Saturday visiting friends.

The Tecumseh Lumber Co. are adding new machinery almost daily to their extensive mill.

Henry Smith and a number of ladies went to Sand Lake on Friday to visit the Tecumseh young folks who were camping there.

Brother Carr, of the Dundee Reporter, paid us a visit on Monday last.—He is printing the best newspaper Dundee has had for years.

The Universalist Aid Society of York will give a social party at the Lake Ridge Hotel, in Macon, on Friday Eve., Sept. 12th. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

There will be a meeting of the Union party at Heesen's hall, Friday evening at 8 o'clock. Rev. B. F. Rapp will speak in the interest of temperance. All are invited. Come and hear what he has to say.

Mrs. A. Whelan and daughter, of Oakland, Cal., are visiting at Mrs. W. Stout's. Mrs. W. is a sister of Mrs. S. and this is their first meeting in thirty years. It is useless to say that they find something to talk about.

The Hause Bros., have been making extensive improvements in their Clinton Cider Mill. Among other things having put in a new engine, and they will soon be ready to begin the fall season at cider making.

P. B. Swick is at home a day or two. He is on the road most of the time selling rights for his new patent tug, and is meeting with good success. He certainly has a good thing, and as it comes into use the demand for it will increase.

Norristown Herald: A man in Norristown has been fooled so often that he wouldn't read Blaine's letter until he had looked at the bottom to ascertain if it contained the rider, "Use Tones' Cast-iron Bitters. For sale by all druggists."

A dangerous and deleterious counterfeit of the new $1,000 bills is in circulation. We are pleased to announce that the editors of this great republic have been placed on their guard by the proper authorities against receiving them in change.

The Ohio yearly meeting of Friends, which is numerously attended from this section, begins at Damascus, south of Cleveland, the latter part of this week. A car has been chartered and leaves Tecumseh to-day. Fare for the round trip, $6.50.

Manie Monaghan returned very unexpectedly from Cleveland last Thursday night, where she was called by the death of her aunt, in response to a telegram announcing the sickness of her sister Lulu, who was visiting friends in Eaton Rapids.

A literary and musical entertainment will be held at the Baptist Church on Monday evening, Sept. 1. A good program is prepared which will close with the annual farewell social to the "boys" who return to Kalamazoo college. Admission ten cents.

There is to be a sermon next Sunday evening at the Methodist Church on the "Unpardonable Sin, or the Sin Against the Holy Ghost." Rev. Geo. W. Hudson is to preach it. Just what he can say on such a subject is hard to guess; but people can find out by going to hear him.

Prof. J. B. Laflin, the new Superintendent of the Clinton schools has arrived with his family and is prepared to begin work on Monday next. Prof. Laflin is a graduate of the Normal, and comes well recommended, and with a determination to give Clinton a first class school.

Wm. McCowen on Monday sold a large bill of furniture to a gentleman residing in the northwestern portion of Iowa. There is no use of talking; when people in want of furniture examine Mac's stock and learn his prices they are bound to buy of him whether they live in Tecumseh or China.

They sit no more in the parlor, where they sat by the glowing grate but they stand and talk in the starlight fair, as they swing on the old front gate. And the old man weeps; but his bitters tears bring never a balm to his soul; it will cost him more for gates, he fears, than it did last winter for coal.

At the grand opening of the Tecumseh Skating Rink, this evening, Mr. J. A. Hayton, the champion roller skater of Canada and the Northwest, will give an exhibition of difficult evolutions and fancy skating. Music by the Manchester cornet band. Admission 10 cents; use of skates 15 cents.—Doors open at 7:15 P. M.

"Ranch 10" at the Opera House next Monday evening.

Cass, of Detroit, vs. Tecumseh are playing ball this afternoon.

The Morenci fair grounds are in excellent condition for this fall sentiment.

Only ten cents will be charged for admission to the Skating Rink this evening.

The Episcopal Sunday School went to Sand Lake on Tuesday last and report having had a good time.

The school census, which has just been taken, shows that there are 615 children in this school district.

If you fail to see "Ranch 10" at the Opera House next Monday evening, you will miss the best thing of the season.

Prof. Condit, for some years past principal of the Morenci schools, has accepted the same position in the Petersburg schools.

The next regular of Tecumseh Lodge, No. 69, F. & A. M., will be held on Friday evening, Sept. 5th.—Let there be a full attendance of the members.

All the children belonging to the Sunday Schools are picnicing at Devil's Lake to-day, and a special train was run over the M. & O. for their convenience.

Mrs. H. E. Stout, who has been spending the past month with her sister, Mrs. Wm. Wooden, of Battle Creek, returned to her home in this village on Friday last.

Dr. Henry Peck, of New York, spent last Sunday as a guest of E. Hand and family. The doctor has purchased a drug store at Independence, Mo., and intends to make that place his future home. We wish him success.

The Detroit Free Press in speaking of "Ranch 10" which is to be at our Opera House next Monday evening says: "Two large audiences witnessed yesterday's performances of 'Ranch 10,' at White's Theater. Sid Smith, as the funniest "Judge" in fact or fancy, is the star of the play this season, and he shines and glimmers and twinkles at every point. Being surrounded by a good company and having one of the best plays of the kind, the ever hopeful but hitherto unlucky veteran seems to have at last struck pay dirt."

The following is the corps of teachers in the Tecumseh Public Schools for the coming year: High School—David A. Hammond, Superintendent; Miss Lillian M. Berkey, A Division; Miss Julia A. Condict, B Division.—Grammar Department—Miss Minnie E. Kinney, Eighth Grade; Miss Emma O. Skinner, Seventh Grade; Miss Grace Willett, Sixth Grade; Miss Nannie Kyle, Fifth Grade. Primary Department—Miss E. May Henderson, Fourth Grade; Miss Grace Parkhurst, Fourth Grade; Miss Julia Snell, East Branch; Miss Hettie McClue, West Branch; Miss Eugenie Church, North Branch.

LAST THURSDAY'S RACES.

A large crowd gathered at Bill's race track last Thursday afternoon to see the race between Henry Keyser's Gray Fly and John Gibson's Birdie G. A foot race between Charlie Snell and W. A. Hoath of Toronto Can. was also one of the attractions, the distance being 75 yards for a purse of $50. It was very easily won in two straight heats by Hoath, who seemed to be an old hand at the business. The equine race was for a blanket, best three heats out of five, and was won by Birdie G. The first heat was trotted in 3:04 Birdie G. winning by a length. The second heat was also won by the same in 2:58. The third heat Gray Fly came in about three lengths ahead; time 2:56. Fourth heat was won by Gray Fly in 2:55. The fifth and last heat was started at 5:15 with Gray Fly leading about half a length, but when at the quarter post she broke and Birdie G. forged ahead and stayed there, coming in about five lengths ahead. Time 2:54.

THE SKATING RINK.

The new skating rink is about completed and will be open to the public this evening. The building is located on Logan Street East of Hayden's warehouse, which will be a very convenient locality, and it is as near the business quarter as a frame building could be erected. It is one hundred and forty five feet in length by forty feet in width, and built in a substantial manner. The floor is a double one with filling between the two layers, which will deaden the sound, and the upper floor is laid in narrow hard wood strips. In tha front end of the building are two dressing rooms, one for gentlemen and one for ladies, and at both ends will be erected seats for spectafors arranged in tiers, amphitheatre style. Messrs Nestell and Cash, the proprietors, have had considerable experience in managing skating rinks, so that the public can rely upon having the enterprise properly managed. A full set of rules and regulations will be adopted for the government of both skaters and spectators, and it will be the aim of the proprietors to furnish a respectable place of amusement which all can attend and enjoy themselves.

Wm. Totten returned from Petoskey yesterday. He says he feels fine.

The Adrian Evening Record has suspended. Non support the cause.

The hog market is opening up lively. A heavy shipment was made from here last Saturday.

Capt. W. A. Weatherhead and wife of South Lyons, are visiting friends and relations in the village.

There were eight cars on the excursion train this morning to Devil's Lake and over 800 passengers.

Our millers are paying from five to eight cents more per bushel for wheat than can be procured at any other point.

Rev. G. W. Hudson will speak on the subject of Temperance, in Grange Hall, Macon, Friday evening, Sept. 5, 1884.

Hon. G. P. Waring of Ridgeway was a delegate to the Union State convention held yesterday at Jackson. He returned this morning feeling quite enthusiastic over the results of the convention.

Albert Brewer has returned from his trip to Petoskey. He says it is just the place to visit for a few weeks' solid recreation. His wife accompanied him, and they both enjoyed their sojourn there exceedingly.

Blissfield suffered a big scorch yesterday morning. The fire was first discovered in a large barn back of Geo. Blivin's residence. Although many of the firemen were absent at the soldiers' reunion at Devil's Lake, still the steamer was on hand promptly and did good work. The fire spread to Bartholomew's lumber yard and furniture store, and also took in Carter's hardware and Young's furniture store before it could be stopped. The total loss will probably reach $20,000, with but little insurance.

Adrian Times: The Tecumseh Herald says the landscape about the M. & O. station at the north end of Devil's Lake is decidedly picturesque. We agree with the statement. It is confoundedly picturesque; especially so when the steamer fails to connect with the train and a fellow is left to bask in the August sun, with nothing left to do but wade across to the hotel, or admire the picturesqueness of the whole job, scenery included, until the next train brings the boat, or a chance to go to Tecumseh and get his blisters pricked.

The reunion of the 18th Mich. Inf. at Beardsell's on Tuesday last was well attended, and the three days' reunion was inaugurated by them in fine style. A kind of a social reunion and business meeting was held in the morning followed by literary exercises. Music was furnished by the Blissfield I. O. O. F. band, and short addresses were made by Gen. R. A. Alger, Capt. Miller, Wm. S Wilcox and others. The county soldiers and sailors association had their reunion yesterday, and the G. A. R. take their innings to-day.

Last Tuesday morning, in the township of Adrian about three miles north of the city, an altercation took place between Joseph Rickerd and Bird Vreeland, in which the former was killed. There has been a feud between the two men for some time, and meeting near Vreeland's residence that morning hot words passed between them, when Rickerd hit Vreenland on the head with a stone. Vreeland then turned and struck Rickerd over the head with the butt end of his gun, killing him instantly. A coroners inquest was held yesterday when a verdict was rendered in accordance with the facts. There is much excitement in the neighborhood over the unfortunate affair.

A TENDER MISSIVE.

Book agents should not drop their love letters on the sidewalk. Such tender missives should be placed under lock and key, or consigned to the flames. Our reporter during his rambles one day last week accidently discovered the following epistle which will be very interesting reading to our young lady friends:

AT HOME, JULY 18, 1884.

RESPECTED FRIEND:—Your letter received and its numerous contents very carefully read and considered. Morning of 19th. Just as I got started yesterday in came a horde of young folks and disturbed my meditations. However I will try to finish to-day.

Oh, dear! dear! what shall I do? what shall I do? No eggs to take to market and no place to visit. Oh, dear! dear! Say, I'll tell you what I wish you'd do. When the train goes past here get off, and I will take you to Manchester. Will you do it? Honest now. You wonder what I will say when I get better acquainted with you? Well, I do not know, Can't say.

I am exceedingly sorry agents are such "orful" creatures. Miss —— doesn't object to agents, oh, no! Thank you for your advice in regard to looking out for them. I think I shall.

By the way, what did you mean by "intoxicating package?" Please rise up and explain. I am sorry you aren't going to be in M., Sunday, for you know I would like to see you. I have something to ask you. Hope you will excuse this rambling mixture. Will do better next time.

Now, as soon as you receive this, please sit down and, while the gentle zephyrs make sweet music among the evergreen trees, and the warm summer sun shades his shimmering glances over space and across the lea, tell me all about that "intoxicating package." Very Hastily, ——.

SWINGING AROUND THE CIRCLE.

On Saturday morning, the 16th, we started overland for a trip through Cambridge. Halting a few moments at Tipton, we interviewed John Conlin, and found him all right side up with care. He is doing as well as he could expect in a dull season like the present one. J. A. Tuttle was found at his old quarters. He runs the post office and a good country store also, and has become one of the fixtures of Franklin. Dr. Junkins has recently improved his residence with a fresh coat of paint and has one of the pleasantest places at the center.

Again starting out, we arrived at C. H. Adam's Sand Lake Hotel just in time for dinner. This was our first visit at Adam's during the present season and we were quite surprised to see the improvements that have taken place there. The old boat-house on the bank has been taken away, a twelve foot addition to the veranda has been built on the South and West sides of the House, which serves as a portico and promenade. The roadway is placed further South on the edge of the lake. Mr Adam now has twenty boats at his disposal, including a fine sail-boat, and an abundance of stable room to accommodate horses. His custom this season has increased very largely over that of any preceding year, since he took charge of the establishment. His house is becoming a favorite resort for small parties, not only from the towns in Lenawee County, but from Toledo and Detroit. Detroit has sent several parties this summer and promises a still larger patronage next summer. Parties from Clinton, Tecumseh, Manchester and Adrian find it a most pleasant place for a few day's recreation, and it is equally good for a visit extending over two or three weeks. The rooms of the house have all been engaged since the opening of the season about the first of June. For a cozy quiet resort with facilities for good boating and fishing, the Sand Lake Hotel cannot be surpassed by any summer resort in Southern Michigan. An excellent dinner and a good rest beneath the shade of the veranda, with the lake breeze cooling the heated atmosphere, put us in good humor for pursuing our journey.

C. W. Akin was found at the East end of Wampler's Lake, entertaining a Sunday School picnic from Clinton. He has a fine grove for picnics, which is liberally patronized, and he has a good dance hall, and refreshment stand and a lot of boats, all of which find plenty of customers.

After a short call here, we proceeded to S. J. Walker's, who lives two miles north of Wampler's Lake, where we arrived at supper time and concluded to halt for the night. Sunday was an awful day, speaking with reference to the weather. With the thermometer at ninety-five degrees in the shade we felt like observing the Sabbath as a day of rest, and we succeeded in so doing admirably, dividing our time between S. J. & J. D. Walkers. S. J. Walker had just secured a magnificent crop of oats. He has painted over and fixed up his house this summer and now has a large and commodious farm residence. Jim Walker farms it "up to the handle" as usual. This dry spell is scorching his squash and lima bean patches. Jim put in his time Sunday afternoon and evening praying for rain and eating ice cream.

Monday morning we prevailed on Scove Walker to hitch up his $400 span and take a trip through Cambridge. Our first halt was at the Allen Bros., but as they were away from home and peaches are not yet ripe, we hurried along.

Henry Marr was up to his ears in threshing. He has a good farm of eighty acres, was putting a splendid crop of wheat in the granary, and consequently was feeling in a happy mood.

C. H. Dewey & Son are at their old stand selling goods, buying wool, produce, etc. They have no fault to find with their trade but complain of dull times the same as all retailers do.

Loss Parsons is running the old farm in Woodstock, where he has lived for so many years. He is satisfied with the general situation, although the price of wheat does'nt suit him.

From there we drove over to Brooklyn for dinner. We started out after dinner to call on a few of our acquaintances, but as we found most of them away we got discouraged and quit. We found Helen H. Sisson and Wm. Perry at home; Dr. Jones, A. P. Cook and Col. King away. We went to the Exponent's old rooms and found the office gone entirely, and did'nt have ambition enough to hunt up the establishment, for which neglect we ask the mercy of the court and promise better things next time.

Starting out again, our first halt was at Robert Sherrard's and he too was away from home. Going on to Springville, we found Thos. H. Mosher on deck. He has been putting repairs and new machinery in his mill this season at an expense of over two thousand dollars. His business is good but he suffers from slow collections like all other business men, and he does'nt expect much easier times until the price of wheat rises to a point which will entice it out of the farmer's granaries.

A brief call at Chauncey Cooper's found him on a Casady sulky plow. He has 190 acres, most of which is in cultivation. He has 800 rods of tile drain on his farm. He was plowing a twelve acre wheat stubble field for wheat again. He believes in stubbling in wheat. A few years ago he planted this selon 12 acres to corn and got 100 bushels of ears to the acre, he then took off a crop of oats, which turned 65 bushels to the acre, and then three crops of wheat which yielded 30, 27 and 35 bushels to the acre. Mr. Cooper has not much faith in new-paper farming. He says every farmer must test his own farm, and ascertain by experiment how to grow the best crops.

John Reynolds is still engaged most of his time in buying and shipping live stock, which he ships to Buffalo. It is a dull season now for shippers, but he anticipates a lively fall trade.

Ben Laur is living on the old farm of 180 acres the care of which keeps him busy. He has a fine herd of thorough bred cattle headed by the Duke of Brooklyn, a two year old from A. P. Cook's stock. Among them are two $75 cows and three splendid spring calves. He will exhibit several head of cattle at the county fair this fall.

We found F. I. Kinney about dark on Monday evening, the night before he was blown up by a thresher boiler explosion. It was too dark to examine his stock, but he has a fine head of full-breds and a flock of nearly three hundred sheep. The 3d Duke of Riverside and Lucy 23d are his best cattle. His sheep are from the "Garfield" stock.

A pleasant ride in the cool of the evening took us back to Walker's, where we spent the night. The next morning we took the Jackson branch train at Norvel and arrived home in time for a day's work.

Next Tuesday, Sept. 2d., there will be an excursion to Toledo over the M. & O. R. R. from Battle Creek and intermediate points, affording an opportunity to our citizens of hearing Hon. John P. St. John, the Prohibition candidate for President, who speaks afternoon and evening. Don't!

DON'T ... Think, just because you have been suffering terribly with Rheumatism or Neuralgia, that you must always continue to suffer.

Nor think lest because nobody has been able to cure you or your friends that Neuralgia and Rheumatism are incurable.

DON'T ... Think that a cure is impossible just because the physicians have been unable to accomplish it.

Nor think that because ATHLOPHOROS has not been known ever since the foundation of the world, it will not cure Rheumatism and Neuralgia.

DON'T ... Neglect the testimony of the hundreds of sufferers who have tried ATHLOPHOROS and are now sound and hearty.

Nor think that because you have tried any other things that failed, that ATHLOPHOROS is like them.

Don't be discouraged! The very thing that will cure Rheumatism and Neuralgia is ATHLOPHOROS.

Don't be Skeptical! ATHLOPHOROS has cured others. It will Cure YOU.

If you cannot get ATHLOPHOROS of your druggist, we will send it express paid, on receipt of regular price—one dollar per bottle. We feel certain that you buy it from your druggist, but if he hasn't it, do not be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us as directed.

WARREN LELAND,
whom everybody knows as the successful manager of the Largest Hotel Enterprises
of America, says that while a passenger from New York on board a ship going around Cape Horn, in the early days of emigration to California, he learned that one of the officers of the vessel had cured himself, during the voyage, of an obstinate disease by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.
Since then Mr. LELAND has recommended AYER'S SARSAPARILLA in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failure to effect a radical cure.
Some years ago one of Mr. LELAND's farm laborers bruised his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, an ugly scrofulous swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible itching of the skin, with burning and darting pains through the lump, made life almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. LELAND's direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to use.
Mr. LELAND has personally used
for Rheumatism, with entire success; and, after careful observation, declares that, in his belief, there is no medicine in the world equal to it for the cure of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of high living, Salt Rheum, Sores, Eruptions, and all the various forms of blood diseases.
We have Mr. LELAND's permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the extraordinary curative powers of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him personally either at his mammoth Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, or at the popular Leland Hotel, Broadway, 27th and 28th Streets, New York.
Mr. LELAND'S extensive knowledge of the good done by this unequalled eradicator of blood poisons enables him to give inquirers much valuable information.

Bangor's Golden Slippers.

Everybody in Maine is familiar with the baggy, yellow boots and shoes called moccasins, which in winter form the favorite footwear of our lumbermen and farmers. These unique boots have a history which dates back to the middle of the century.

The material is common leather, but tanned in a peculiar way. The principal ingredients in the tanning are salt and alum, with a kind of oil. The method is something of a secret known to but few.

Leather thus tanned was first used as lacing for mill belts. It was some time before its utility as boot and shoe material was discovered. In 1851, E. P. Baldwin, who kept a shoe shop in Bangor, obtained some of the leather from Pawtucket, and began the manufacture of the moccasins. In 1852 the business had increased considerably in Bangor, and a manufactory was started in Oldtown. The work in those days was quite crude, and far behind that of to-day in style and finish. In 1855 another factory was started at Bangor, and from this establishment was sent the first pair of moccasins that ever went west to Dubuque. Trade was very prosperous until the opening of the rebellion. Then the business languished, but in 1868 became established upon a permanent basis.

In 1871 the mode of moccasin manufacture was revolutionized by the advent of improved machinery and new ideas. The cut of the leg was altered so as to bring the seam upon the side instead of at the back, and the seam, which formerly made an uncomfortable ridge in the leg, was superseded by the flat lap seam. Much of the sewing is let out at so much a dozen pairs to French Canadian families, who live in the suburbs. The larger part of the stock still comes from Rhode Island, but Bangor is the great centre of the moccasin manufacture, as many pairs being made here, probably, as in all other places combined. At Red Wing and St. Paul, Minn., and Racine, Wis., the manufacture is quite extensively carried on, and it is from these places that Bangor encounters the strongest competition. Over three hundred people are employed here, and the production, which in 1881 was eighty thousand pairs of boots and twenty thousand pairs of shoes, has been increasing yearly.

The tanning renders the leather a perfect non-conductor of water, and, to a considerable extent, a non-conductor of heat and cold. For these reasons the moccasin is popular with lumbermen and farmers, and thousands of Western farmers are supplied from Bangor while our own lumbermen would as soon think of going into the woods without their axes as without moccasins. When new, the boots have an oily feeling, an odor not disagreeable, and are of a bright golden color. The axe artist trudges away in winter in boots to the snowy woods, while the small boy of the city frolics in shoes that are now known as Bangor's golden slippers.—Cor. N. Y. Sun.

Once There Was a Spider.

Once there was a spider. There is nothing very startling about this fact unless you are of a nervous turn and the said unruly insect drops down into your face while you are trying to go to sleep, or you are easily cast down by running into his web thrown across a doorway. Spiders are chiefly domestic in their habits in this latitude, and have a weakness for rounding out the corners of rooms and filling the chinks in out of the way places with a substance which, if it had been a little stronger, would have won them an honorable place in the arts and made them as popular as they are now obnoxious.

One evening the individual subject of this history was discovered spreading his nest across an open window that had been raised to give the supper table a more pleasant surrounding, and as he had not proceeded far when his plans were observed, a close watch was kept on his movements and the following notes taken on the process: The upper limit of the web was the half-raised sash, and enough of the space below was taken to make a structure about a foot square, which was mapped out by single lines fastened to the window frame. Inside of this a few strands were thrown, which crossed at the center, where an irregular bull's-eye like case of operations was formed by cross-webs put in very inartistically. The spider then added more spokes to his wheel until he had twenty, and then accomplished the feat of joining these altogether by circular webs about an inch apart. These kept the rays in place like a set of guy ropes, that made a deal of climbing and calculation necessary.

Next, beginning at the outside, this practical acrobat began running circular webs around the structure, about five to the inch, each inside circular tolerably regular as regards the outer one, and all fastened to each cross line by bit of waxy substance secreted by the animal himself. As each preliminary circle was reached it was found more and more that they took a somewhat different direction from the new ones, or, to be exact about it, were thrown about a different center. So as to avoid a ridiculous crossing of these circular lines the first set were taken up and apparently devoured by the workman. Nothing but the waxy points where they had crossed the rays showed where they had been. The spider did not try to spring from one ray to the other or shoot out his web, but took a trip around by the shortest route and waxed the newly span line to the ray before setting out again. Several times he broke off the line and made a trip to the center, where he inspected the work with the air of a master builder, and once was observed to give the whole fabric a mighty shake, as though testing the capacity for holding winged victims and bearing up his own piratical self when he chose to go on a foray. Sometimes on returning to his work he forgot where he had left off, and began in a new place, which left a rather awkward break in the fabric, though it was not conspicuous as a whole.

Nearer and nearer the center work proceeded, until the master-workman came to the conclusion that it would answer its purposes, and suddenly broke off the process of drawing his web out of himself, and settling down composedly at the focus of the affair with a good appetite, doubtless, and an approving conscience, due to one who has labored faithfully, according to his own light, and not greatly the worse for not being obliged to go abroad for building material. Already his efforts had borne fruits, for two giddy flies had dropped into the web and were fluttering in the breeze, as helpless as though held in the spider's claws, but their grim captor was not ready for the supper and let them flutter. He had worked at its best rate for a full half hour, and couldn't exhaust himself further just now by running after game, that was quite safe where it was.

A careful estimate showed that the whole web was not far from sixty feet long, all of which had been evolved from the builder's consciousness and physical self in this short space of time. But it was getting late. The sun had already gone. Suddenly some one shut down the window, bringing ruin on this carefully built fabric and transforming our late industrious architect, pirate and robber into a trembling fugitive, glad to get off at any price. Such is life.—Buffalo Express.

Tooth-Pulling Now and Then.

"You might write volumes on the appliances used by dentists in extracting teeth," remarked our informant, "but the simple 'pulling' of a tooth plays the most important part in the dentistry of to-day. Since chemistry and electricity have been pressed into the service of the dentist, the removal of a tooth has become more than a mere question of pulling. You sit down in a comfortable arm-chair, a harmless anæsthetic is applied, and the doctor makes a thorough examination of a diseased part of your anatomy. If hopelessly decayed, he will remove it before you can say 'Jack Robinson;' if help is possible, he will clean the tooth, drill a hole into it, kill the nerve or cover it with a cap provided for that purpose, and fill the cavity. Or he will saw off the crown and put a new one on the root if the latter is not sound."

The reporter was shown a small iron cylinder, about twelve inches in length and four in width. "This cylinder," explained our informant, "contains twenty-five ounces of what we call liquid—more correctly speaking, it is compressed nitrous-oxide gas. In their expanded form, ready for use, the contents of this small cylinder assume the respectable proportion of of one hundred gallons. From four to eight gallons are required for each administration, and the gas is administered either from a gasometer provided for that purpose or from a rubber bag. Nitrous-oxide gas is by far the best anæsthetic. It is absolutely harmless, and just as effective as chloroform or ether."

The drill used at the present day for excavating a tooth is either driven by the foot of the operator, or, better still, by electricity. A four-cell battery furnishes power to a revolving rod which turns two thousand times a minute. The end of the rod is hollow, and into it is fitted a drill which the operator selects from a large number as best suited for the size and depth of the cavity. The operation of the drill has been brought to such perfection that it is possible to drill all around the nerve, then put a cap over it, and over the cap the filling. When the tooth's structure shows that the nerve should be destroyed it is devitalized by a painless process. After the filling process is completed the rough surface of the gold is made even with the rim of the tooth by means of a rapidly revolving, corrugated wheel propelled by the same electric power as the drill. An hour suffices for the entire operation which ten or fifteen years ago consumed half a day, and was then done very unsatisfactorily in most instances.

"What progress dentistry has made can best be seen by a comparison with the old methods," said a dentist who stands in the front rank of his profession in this city. "It is not so long ago that a dentist would stretch the lips of his patient, or rather his victim, apart with his fingers, which were often not too clean, and grope about the mouth with a steel prod until the aching tooth was discovered. This was announced on the part of the patient by a howl of pain. Then the tooth doctor selected from his collection of instruments of torture the old-fashioned "key," making a great rattle in the meanwhile, and making the victim tremble in anticipation. Then the gum was lanced, the patient yelled and blood and saliva ran the towel tied around the neck. The 'sitting' of the key occasioned another howl, and then the butchery commenced. If the victim's jawbone did not break, or the tooth splinter, or the handle of the key twist off, something was bound to give way. Sometimes it was the leg of the operating chair, sometimes the operator's wrist bone, occasionally the offending tooth. Now you sit in a wonderful chair, which, by an ingenious attachment, can be made to assume any height or angle. A saliva ejector, is placed in your mouth; a harmless anæsthetic is administered; your cheeks are stretched painlessly apart with a pair of silver stretchers; the cavity of the mouth is lighted up with an electric lamp, a pair of forceps fitting exactly to the tooth is inserted, and the operation is over in a minute."—Chicago Herald.

—A Lowell mill girl thought she had talent with which to become an eminent actress. She saved all she could from her wages for several years, and invested it in a theatrical venture in a small way—all except sixty dollars, which a friend surreptitiously took out of the fund and used in buying in her name a Florida land grant. She returned from her professional tour in a year broken in purse and spirits, and ready to resume work at the looms; but the Florida purchase had happened to appreciate about a hundred-fold in value, and, therefore, she can go to Paris for dramatic education.—Boston Transcript.

Monroe will have a fine new two-story brick school house ready for the fall term, and talks of erecting yet another one.

The sage who lit a candle in the day and wisely said "I seek a man," would not be called crazy in these days if he did the same thing to find a strictly pure Baking Powder, and unless he found DeLand's Chemical Baking Powder, might still be peering around. It is made from Cream Tartar and Soda only, no filling whatever. Sold in cans only. Try it.

Everyone should tell his neighbor that the best remedy for curing coughs and colds, and the sure cure for consumption, is Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. It is pleasant to take and very soothing and healing in its effect.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.
It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand attests its merits. It ships it at once as the greatest discovery of the age for outward application.
The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.
WHAT IT CURES.
All sores, cuts, bruises, sprains, burns, sore throat, lameness, rheumatism, piles, inflammation of lungs and bowels, bronchitis, croup, rheum, chilblains, affection of the spine, erysipelas, nervous irritation, and all disorders attendant with inflammation.
It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame, every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.
Over 40 Years.
This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have in years gone by been in receipt of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to go and tell state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.
Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

The Arctic Mystery.

The ice zones have possessed a fascination for scientists and men of daring for an indefinite time, though it has been but a comparatively few years that large adventure has attracted general interest to those formidable regions. One of the earliest of the noted explorers was Sir John Franklin, who ventured into the polar realm in 1845, and since the July of that year nothing has been learned of him or his companions. He had then reached Melville Bay, north latitude 77 deg. 48 min. The first expedition for the relief of this party was begun in 1848, and for five years there was an uninterrupted effort to find the whereabouts of the missing men, there being thirty-eight different commands, besides six land expeditions, during that time, the United States Government liberally aiding in the search. In 1860 Dr. Isaac I. Hayes undertook a new exploration. The highest point reached by him was named Cape Lieber, north latitude 81 deg. 35 min., and he received several gold medals for his reward. Captain C. F. Hall began the first of his three voyages in 1860, when it was still believed some of the Franklin party might be alive. He again made the voyage in 1864, a cruise of four years, and his last attempt to solve the mystery of the ice realm was made in 1871, during which he died. In 1879, Lieutenant Schwatka, United States Army, made a sledge journey with good results, and in the same year the disastrous De Long expedition was begun. The sad story of this adventure, with Danenhower and Melville's search, is too new in the public mind, through the recent return of the bodies of the unfortunate party, to form other than a quick prelude to the Greely disaster now so live an interest.

One of the most notable cruises was that made under command of Sir George Nares, in 1876, for the reason that, on the day of May 12, he touched the highest point of North latitude that had ever been reached, 82 deg. 24 min. The results of this expedition were regarded as being of great value and importance, and it is not unconsoling now to think that, in spite of the lamentable mischances of the Greely expedition, American enterprise carried exploration four miles to the north of this point, and determined the mooted question of the extent of Greenland. From this cursory review of some of the more conspicuous voyages, it will appear that the charm and fascination of discovery have led many noble champions to dare dangers that cannot be properly conceived by those whose fortune is within the comprehended limits of ordinary experience. The longing of science to look into the mystic possession of the close-locked secrets of the north has inspired an enthusiastic disregard of the perils and intense sufferings entailed by these apparently improvident missions; and though there has been a strong element of conservative opposition to this hazardous course, where there has not been a public spirit to sanction this purpose of legitimate inquiry private enterprise has furnished the means. Reviewing these exploits of research, and perceiving how much larger is the proportion of disaster to the good obtained, it is no wonder many are strenuously resolved against sympathy with movements that appear so foolhardy if not criminal in their risks of life, and refuse to consider the nobler ends and aims, the holier impulses and desires that rise above the mere love of adventure and take the force of an heroic devotion to the broad interests of mankind.

These voyages are not romances with the men who undertake them, and beyond the interest in the exciting contest with the unknown and undetermined there is a practical value in these courageous attempts to demonstrate and explain certain vital physical phenomena. At such a time as this there is the inspiration of applause and commendation to shut out from thought the inclination to censure and condemn. In the presence of these five men who have come back from the most fruitful achievement of all the daring endeavors to pierce to the polar sea, laden with information that will greedily be received by men who are more interested in ascertaining the governing facts and forces of our world than in the preservation of a few lives, there should be only reverent admiration. While there is something to be learned, the only means by which that knowledge may be acquired must be unsentimentally seized upon. Science is selfish, sacrificial, ruinous in its methods, perhaps, but it is so necessarily. In the subjugation of nature the elements of nature must be understood, and the great region of seemingly useless waste in ice and snow has a relation to the balance of the earth that science should understand, and though scores of years are lost and hundreds of lives sacrificed in the endeavor to gain this understanding, the cost will not be too great if the domain of civilization and commerce may by that means be increased or benefited. The extension and correction of geographical knowledge are matters of incalculable National importance, and through exploration alone may be obtained the material and facts for such changes as have revolutionized in a few centuries the practical world.

After two centuries of futile explorations and appalling disasters the imagined northeast passage was finally discovered, and a triumphant Scandinavian opened a water gate to strengthen commerce. It does not become a country of the magnitude and unsurpassed grandeur of the United States to be behind the world in reaching out to aid and foster science, and we can not afford to give advantages to other countries in matters of such gravity as exploration. Indeed, the resolute energy, unwavering bravery and shrewd, clear, judicial character of the American people fit them for the foremost place in such enterprises, and it is not at all unlikely that the secret of the Arctic will yet be snatched from its ice-floes and chilling desolation to the honor of American discovery. But whether the idea of arctic exporation is to be condemned or not, these heroes of the frozen zone are as deserving of popular laurels as men who storm a deadly breach in war's commotion, and serve as admirable a purpose in the general plan of civilization. Greely and his companions have been rescued by men whose resolute singleness of purpose is as well worth remembering as anything that has occurred in the arctic seas.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Confessions of a Mosquito.

I am only a mosquito, one of that outlawed class against whom the hands of the entire world are raised in perpetual warfare and slaughter. I come when the buttercups begin to brighten the summer fields, when fragrant clover diffuses its incense on the soft, tropical air and wallas and the stately golden rod trouble in the zephyrs along the river bank. My advent is heralded by the gentle music of my wings. I sing the romance of mosquito life.

Little as I am I strike terror into the hearts of thousands. The moneyed magnate and the impecunious sport tremble alike at my approach. The high-handed tyrant of the household and the political boss acknowledge in me an object of fear. I am proscribed and undergo a species of relentless persecution that would crush many a haughtier spirit. Nevertheless, I bear up under it all and apply myself to my appointed mission, finding ample compensation in the approval of my own conscience. I have seen strong men who have braved the heat of battle—men to whose ears the roar of cannon was music—tremble with terror at my approach. I know my power, but I can't say that I glory in the consciousness of it.

You must know that there are social distinctions made in mosquitodom just as there are in well regulated society, and they are just, strong and immutable. Each mosquito is a creature of circumstances and into whatever channel chance dire ts his life he goes and follows it until death. When I was ushered into this world I had the good fortune to fall under the guidance of a grizzled old fellow, who had done years of honorable service in mosquito life. His wits were as sharp as his bill, and his skin, which was shrunken and wrinkled, was as tough as leather and calculated to resist the most savage assault. There was not a man of note upon the continent with whom he was not intimately acquainted. His recollections of persons and events were simply marvelous, so it was no wonder that I was an object of envy among the youngsters who came up along with me, as such a mentor insured my future success and social standing. I well remember the day when I was about to start forth into the world the old fellow said to me:

"Now, my son, for heaven's sake do not make yourself common and spoil all of your prospects in your first exploits by biting some politician or book agent. If you do your future is irrevocably blasted." And tears stood in my mentor's eyes as he bade me adieu. I took his advice. The first desirable person I saw was a rich bank cashier, who, it is needless to say, was deacon of a church. With a wildly palpitating heart and filled with excitement to such a degree that I couldn't utter a single note, I paid the old fellow my respects. I must confess that I was really pained and shocked at the startling language he used. It is said that a fledgeling mosquito stings ten times harder than an adult. He gave me an awful fright, the deacon did, and I determined to select some other than a strict church man for my next acquaintance. So I lit on a retired merchant and a severe moralist. I experienced the same startling results. I was young and had strong faith in mankind. Inexperience thrown upon a world of humanity moved by so many different forces will soon receive many severe shocks.

Perched on a netting in a fashionable hotel, with bowed head I yielded myself a prey to the doubts which surged upon me, when my old mentor dropped lightly at my side.

"Why so downcast, my boy?" he inquired, as he complacently wiped his mouth. He had just finished paying his court to one of the bluest bloods in the establishment and consequently felt in excellent humor. I explained to him what had happened and how my sensibilities were affected, and finally expressed my determination to devote myself to the canaille, when the old veteran shook with laughter and said:

"Why, son, yours is the experience of every mosquito. Its benefits may strike you as being doubtful when your good home training is taken into view, but the effect will eventually be good. It will teach you the frailty of man, his susceptibility to make a perfect demon of himself in secret while he masquerades as a saint. You will see how hollow most lives are."

I felt comforted by his advice and went about my mission once more, and though my path was literally crowded with curses, some low, some deep, I took it all with the consoling philosophy my adviser had advanced. I only received one shock after the incident I have referred to, and that was one time when I tried to make friends with Henry Bergh. When he felt my bill I had bit on his nose; he uttered something that did nt sound at all like a greeting and struck murderously at me with his palm. He followed up his assault with several savage endeavors to murder me. Just think of it! After that I positively had faith in no one.

My association with the class of people I moved among placed me high in mosquitodom and I was looked upon as one of its shining lights. It grieved me, however, to see how many of my young companions had fallen from the start. One made his debut by associating with an insurance agent and he has imbibed so much of his characteristics that his whole body has a bright, grassy appearance. Another struck a sibulous politician and he has been doing the politicians and other alcoholic gentry since. He is now a sot and unfit for respectable company. So it is very easy to see where the distinctions are made. A few years ago I had the misfortune to bill a dude in mistake for a gentleman and the mere recollection makes me sick at heart.

The summer season is here again and my work begins.—Philadelphia Times.

—A soldier in Posen gallantly rescued a lad from drowning not long ago. This act caused him to be fifteen minutes late in coming back to the barracks, and the martinets who held sway there punished his crime by eight days' imprisonment in a dungeon. They held that his first duty as a soldier was to be back in time, no matter who was drowning.

Must Have Some More.

There is no indecision about the action of ATHLOPHOROS in Rheumatism and Neuralgia. It is direct, speedy, efficacious, safe. Patients are encouraged from the beginning of treatment. Rev. Samuel Porter, Crete, Will Co., Ill., writes to say: "A few weeks ago, and before Mrs. Porter commenced to take Athlophoros, she could not walk a foot. This morning she walked four rods without help. It is a most valuable medicine and we must have some more of it."

ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP

FOUR POINTS

Prepared by an entirely NEW METHOD.
Composed of the PUREST MATERIALS.
WILL NOT INJURE THE FABRIC.
WILL CLEANSE WITHOUT RUBBING.

You can do a large washing without any rubbing: use the boiling process instead. You can save Time, Labor, Fuel, Soap and Clothing.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.

Cut up fine and dissolve one half bar in half gallon of hot water. Pour half this dissolved soap into a tub with just sufficient hot water to cover a boiler full of clothes. Then put the clothes in to soak, rubbing plenty of soap in the most soiled parts. Be sure that the soaking water is hot; soak the clothes half an hour; stir them occasionally so that they may get the full benefit of the hot suds; pour the remainder of the dissolved soap into the boiler, adding sufficient water to cover the clothes; wring them lightly out of the suds. Soap the stained spots and place loosely in the boiler; boil 10 to 20 minutes, rinse well, blue and hang to dry. Do not crowd the boiler too full. The same boiling water may be used for further boiling by adding a little soap to each boiler-full of clothes. Flannels and prints should not be boiled, only a little rubbing required after soaking. This soap will cleanse clothing as thoroughly as any other without the use of the boiler. We prefer and recommend the boiling process as in itself a cleansing process, saving labor, the wear of the wash-board, and being the best disinfectent known, it is easier to boil the dirt out than to rub it out. You can cleanse perfectly the finest fabric without injury; the finest point lace and lace curtains. Soak point lace in hot suds made with this soap, press water out with the hand; boil 3 to 5 minutes in clean suds made with this soap, rinse thoroughly, press carefully between the folds of a towel, roll in a dry towel, and iron between pieces of old flannel. Soak curtains 10 to 30 minutes and boil 5 to 30 minutes, rinse, stretch on frame, or pin every hollop to carpet over a sheet to dry; no ironing required.

Be sure and ask for ELECTRIC-LIGHT SOAP, and take no other.

Sold by leading wholesale and retail grocers everywhere. Dealers may obtain our goods upon application. ELECTRIC SOAP MANUFACTURING CO., Indianapolis, Ind., and 26-28 South Water St., Chicago, Ill.

General News Summary.

Interesting Home and Foreign News.

DOMESTIC.

THE Postmaster General on the 21st announced the Government contract with P. K. Ouick, of Springfield, Mass., for furnishing official lead letter and registered package envelopes and tags, because of their inferior quality and not being up to the standard contracted for. The contract was annulled to $8,000.

THE remains of the eminent war correspondent, McGahan, arrived at New York from Constantinople on the 21st and after lying in state in the Governor's room at the City Hall were forwarded to his old home.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL excursion train, consisting of fifteen heavily loaded cars, on the 21st left Streator for Kankakee, Ill. While crossing the Illinois Central track near their destination, the fourth coach was run into by a train on the latter road. James Penn was killed and about a dozen more or less seriously hurt. Two or three will probably die. The engineer of the Illinois Central train claims that his brakes refused to work.

MRS. TREECE, residing near Indianapolis, Ind., on the 21st, prepared biscuits for breakfast and by mistake put arsenic in the dough instead of baking powder, the poison and the baking powder being in cans of the same pattern. The entire family, consisting of Mrs. Treece, her son and daughter, Mrs. Della Walker and Mary Treece, and Amanda Hollingsworth, died in great agony, violently sick. The children died in two hours and the women were conscious to the last.

THE Treasury Department on the 21st purchased 40,000 ounces of silver for delivery at the New Orleans and Philadelphia mints.

DR. SALMON, of the Agricultural Department, has made a report to Colonel Carman, Acting Commissioner, upon the outbreak of pleuro-pneumonia among Jersey cattle in Illinois, in which he says it is the most serious outbreak that has occurred for a long time, and unless prompt action is taken to stop it the Jersey cattle interest in the West will be ruined and pleuro-pneumonia be added. Several of the finest herds in the State are infected. The affected animals in the herd examined are worth $500. Some other animals in these herds are worth more than that, and two of the herds contain very valuable cows. The officials at the Agricultural Department say that this is the first time pleuro-pneumonia has appeared in the West, and every effort will be made to prevent the spread of the disease.

THE steamer Sallie M. Grant, on the 23d struck a snag at the head of Kissing Sun bar, near Madison, Ind., and sank. No lives lost.

A TOUCHING INCIDENT.

A Young Girl's Dementia—How it Was Occasioned—Some New and Startling Truths.

The St. Louis express, on the New [illegible] railroad, was crowded to its evening recently, when at one of the way stations an elderly gentleman, accompanied by a young lady, entered the cars and finally secured a seat. As the conductor approached the pair, the young lady arose and in a pleading voice said:

"Please, sir, don't let him force me to the asylum. I am not crazy. I am a little tired, but not mad. Oh! no indeed. Won't you please have papa take the buckboard?"

The conductor, accustomed though he was to all phases of humanity, looked with astonishment at the pair as did the other passengers in their vicinity. A few words from the father, however, however, sufficed, and the conductor passed on while the young lady turned her face to the window. The writer chanced to be seated just behind the old gentleman and could not forego the desire to speak to him. With a sad face and a trembling voice the father said:

"My daughter has been attending the seminary in a distant town and was succeeding remarkably. Her natural qualities, together with a great ambition, placed her in the front ranks of the school, but she studied too closely, was not careful of her health, and her poor brain has been turned. I am taking her to a private asylum where we hope she will soon be better."

At the next station the old man and his daughter left the cars, but the incident, so suggestive of Shakspeare's Ophelia, awakened strange thoughts in the mind of the writer. It is an absolute fact that while the population of America increased thirty per cent. during the decade between 1870 and 1880 the insanity increase was over one hundred and thirty-five per cent. for the same period. Travelers by rail, by boat, or in carriages in any part of the land see large and elaborate buildings, and inquire what they are?

Insane asylums!

Who builds them?

Each state, every county, hundreds of private individuals, and in all cases their capacity is taxed to the utmost.

Why?

Because men, in business and the professions, women, at home or in society, and children at school overtax their mental and nervous forces by work, worry and care. This brings about nervous disorders, indigestion and eventually mania.

It is not always trouble with the head that causes insanity. It far oftener arises from evils in other parts of the body. The nervous system determines the status of the brain. Any one who has periodic headaches, occasional dizziness, a dullness of vision, a ringing in the ears, a feverish head, frequent nausea or a sinking at the pit of the stomach, should take warning at once. The stomach and head are in direct sympathy and if one be impaired the other can never be in order. Acute dyspepsia causes more insane suicides than any other known agency, and the man, woman or child whose stomach is deranged is not and cannot be safe from the coming on at any moment of mania in some one of its many terrible forms.

The value of moderation and the imperative necessity of care in keeping the stomach right must therefore be clear to all. The least appearance of indigestion, or malassimilation of food should be watched as carefully as the first approach of an invading army. Many means have been advocated for meeting such attacks, but all have heretofore been more or less defective. There can be little doubt however, that for the purpose of regulating the stomach, toning it up to proper action, keeping its nerves in a normal condition and purifying the blood, Warner's Tippecanoe The Best, excels all ancient or recent discoveries. It is absolutely pure and vegetable; it is certain to add vigor to adults, while it cannot by any possibility injure even a child. The fact that it was used in the days of the famous Harrison family is proof positive of its merit as it has so thoroughly withstood the test of time. As a tonic and reviver it is simply wonderful. It has relieved the agony of the stomach in thousands of cases; soothed the tired nerves; produced peaceful sleep and averted the coming on of a mania more to be dreaded than death itself.

BROOKLYN BALLAST

A free exhibition of mud larks rivaled the white elephant at Barnum's show, and a fair number of the collection were credited to B.

The new mental elephant on hand is a great unwashed one, strayed from Detroit's zoo, and vexes the minds of our acetic sons of toil; with the eight hours for a day's work problem, and the puzzle attachment of making employers pay the same prices as for ten or twelve, wakes a symphony of swears too wicked for every day music. Its name is Aspiration. It aspires to more leisure, more money, small days works, wee small hours, small families, etc., and unless Providence frowns, a De-Pop-Club will assemble in LaConvenient, every moonlit, starlit, lamplit, and rain-washed night during the period, or until somebody finds out how to wring time enough for studying classical literature from the bread and butter division of day, and enlarge the sinking fund of opportunity, for exercising and developing muscle with billiard ball and cue. There is no end to wrangle because the sun shines early, and the chasm between light and darkness has to be filled by hand. The multitude of complaints concerning this single grievance is enough to make one suspect the master mechanic of the universe has forgotton something; but if women are to be arraigned for the mis-deal, and punished with a numerous old-maid-hood because they persist in taking stray babies to board, its time they deployed on the skirmish line and whistle "I'll come to you, my lad, with a thimble full of truth." It is not the wife and baker's dozen of children that chain a man to poverty and ignorance. It is the full-grown, exacting, limitless family of habits; the girl becomes step-mother to when she marries him; that fills a tenant house with scantiness. They do not abide by the eight hour system.

Whoever smokes one-fourth or one-half dozen cigars a day, drinks the glass of lager with a friend, plays one game of billiards ditto, manages to spend one half dollar of his wages for that day; and $150.50 will board and clothe several babies nicely one year, when the nurse girl does the work from choice. Neither rooms, lights or fire, are extras to be provided for; the man and his wife must have them, or if minus the wife he must pay as much for board and attendance as for tenant house, living, babies and all. It takes years for the children to get there; when grown they are apt to go; but habits are there first, last and all time, hydra headed, multiplying, pleading only for self-indulgence until if wealth was reckoned by the amount spent in their gratification, nine laboring men out of ten would be counted millionaires. Some kinds of work exhaust life rapidly, and it is best to restrain the exaction of selfish employers, but the world would be inconvenienced and lots of shirts left unironed when wanted most, if eight hours constituted a day's work for mother and the hired girl. For the latter to demand the same price for a few hours work as the day's service, would be called nonsensical, especially if supper was not ready until next day. Everyone recognizes the absurdity of being required to pay for more than they receive, and it is almost as irrational to demand as much pay for eight hours work as has formerly been received for ten, if the first was a fair equivilent. How many strikes originate in employers refusing to contribute to the support of habits, is not known; but lots of women die while trying to find out whether they belong to a waste-basket or savings bank. To shirk home cares and throw away children, in order to lessen labor and expense so as to gain time for study and mental culture, is sacrificing the greater to the less and climbing downward.

Nature has decreed that hearts and minds are best cultivated in unison, and the broader the base the firmer the structure. No doubt that is why the D's and G's are fusing to aid Butler in his philanthropic scheme of cushioning a chair for Blaine and enticing Republicans to vote for Cleveland and thus save Prohibitionists from growing freckled. Not all the old maids in christendom have been caricatured as much as General Butler, and now the venom becomes a laurel such as no nation ever before crowned a hero with. The flimsiest pretenses are seized upon and made into an excuse to do his bidding. After all the vituperation, the magnetism of bravely speaking an honest opinion overpowers bluster, and foes and friends alike acknowledge him as drill-master. The political heart beat is regulated by his faulty but interesting letter. One more billet doux and the fame of getting lost during the great eclipse may immortalize the chosen. PEARLIE.

RIDGEWAY RACKET.

We had a fine rain Thursday.

Mrs. Dr. R. H. Nelson made her sister of Dundee a visit last week.

Mr. Alfred Mosher, of Addison, spent the sabbath with Miss Vina Underwood.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Linn made friends at Dundee a visit over Sunday.

Mr. Henry Smith and Miss Anna Poucher, of Manchester, spent the Sabbath with Miss Lou Arner.

Prof. H. C. Wilson commenced his duties as instructor of the youth at Blissfield Monday.

The annual school meeting was held Monday night, and S. P. Smith was elected Assessor for full term, and then voted to build a new school house to cost $3,000 and to be built the coming year.

Quite a good many went to hear Ex. Gov. St. John at Toledo, Tuesday.

Mr. Phillip Hathaway died at his home Tuesday night and the funeral was held at the house Wednesday at 10:30 A. M. The deceased was one of Ridgeway's first pioneers. He was past 96 years of age.

Those boys that are doing so much shooting around the village had better look a little out which way they shoot or constable Smith will take care of them.

The week of camp meeting passed off very pleasantly with one or two exceptions. Sunday morning Master Frankie Wilcox, of Wellsville, was run over by a horse and died in half an hour from internal hurts. The funeral services were held on the camp ground Monday afternoon. He was taken home for burial. Sunday there were thousands that attended the services and the best of order prevailed.

Rev. Mr. Hudson, of Tecumseh, will talk on the temperance issue at the Grange Hall Macon on Friday night of this week.

Ralph Mills commenced school in Tecumseh Monday.

Sunday School concert at the M. E. church next Sunday evening.

Rev. J. A. DeSpelder and wife arrived in Macon last week. They start for Iowa this week.

Maude Howell commenced her school in the Harring district Monday.

Sumner Collins spent Sunday in Macon.

At the annual school meeting, Henry Miller was elected assessor. A good choice.

Mrs. St. John organized a singing class here last Monday. There is a large attendance.

The ice-cream social at Grange Hall Friday evening was largely attended.

Our school board have been endeavoring for a number of weeks to find teachers. So far their efforts have been in vain. It might be well to import a few pedagogues.

The Republican ticket for county officers nominated Monday gives entire satisfaction in Macon. It will secure a rousing victory in Nov. in this town.

TIPTON TATTLE.

Mr. and Mrs. Caldwell are visiting friends in the state of New York.

Wesley Rogers is unable to work, being afflicted with rheumatism.

Rev. Whiteley preaches his farewell sermon next sabbath morning.

The hay fever is becoming a little too common for the comfort of many.

The child of B. F. Norcross was buried last Saturday.

Several farmers have left their wheat fields but partially prepared for the sowing on account of the drought.

Mrs. Wheelan, of California, is visiting her brother Mr. James Hunter whom she has not seen before in more than thirty years.

A goodly number of persons patronized the excursion to Toledo last Tuesday and several others propose to join the excursionists to Detroit next Friday to witness the deplorable wrestling match.

Willie Colvin went to Kansas about a couple of weeks since and was taken suddenly ill with dysentery and died a few days ago in the eighteenth year of his age. Much regret is expressed here in view of his premature death among strangers.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

Alonzo Clark returned from Chicago Tuesday night.

The very dry weather is preventing many farmers from sowing as much wheat this fall as they intended.

The Baptist parsonage is receiving much needed repairs.

Some roller skaters in this town speak very highly of the rink that has just been built in Tecumseh.

We understand that the editor of the Tecumseh News some time last week finished the foundation for a structure that, like the tower of Babel, will lean—on the front gate—as it nears completion. It is a girl baby. Now, let some brother in the profuse, like the celebrated Mr. Wegg, drop into poetry. We can't: the above metaphor knocked our muse out in the first round.

While the exposition is open this fall, the Lake Shore will sell round trip tickets to Chicago, including an exposition ticket, every Tuesday for five dollars. The tickets will be good to return up to and including the following Monday. The tickets will be for sale for the first time next Tuesday.

The social at Geo. Wrights last Tuesday evening was largely attended. The Saline and Bridgwater bands were present and discoursed some good music.

Miss Mary Keyes returned Wednesday from a three weeks visit in Saline and Ann Arbor.

Schools opened here last Monday with a full corps of teachers and a larger attendance than ever before at the opening of a fall term. Many foreign scholars are enrolled and the work as begun with the large attendance promises that the year just at hand will be one of the most prosperous in the annals of the Clinton Public Schools.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY CONVENTION.

The Republicans held their convention for putting a county ticket in the field on Monday last. There was a large attendance and a lively contest over most of the offices. The convention was called to order by J. G. Mason, on whose motion Capt. C. R. Miller was elected temporary chairman. After a short speech by Mr. Miller the convention got down to work. The several committees were appointed and the meeting adjourned till afternoon. At the afternoon session Dean's Opera House was packed. The committee on resolutions, permanent organization, etc., reported and the work of nominating a ticket was then proceeded with. Judge Geddes was nominated for Judge of Probate by acclamation. As there were several candidates for all the remaining positions on the ticket, nearly the entire afternoon was consumed in balloting. Without giving the ballots in detail we append the ticket as finally made up

Judge of Probate—Norman Geddes.
Sheriff—William Jibbs.
Clerk—Cyrus Crandall.
Register—S. W. Bennett.
Treasurer—Jay Hoag.
Prosecuting Att'y.—B. F. Graves.
Circuit Court Com'rs—Thos C. Sawyer, Geo. W. Ayres.
Coroners—Harlowe Seaver, J. R. Bennett.
State Senator—Mason Carpenter.

At the last republican county convention a committee was appointed to change the basis of representation in future conventions. The committee reported through Mr. John Mason and asked to be allowed to wait until after election before the basis of representation was determined upon, in order that the vote this fall might be taken as a basis of calculation. The members of the county committee and the successful candidates were requested to meet Mr. Mason in the jurors room immediately, and the convention then adjourned.

BIGGER 'N BARNUM.

The Tri-State Fair occurs at Toledo, September 8 to 13. Acres of agricultural machinery in motion; printing, book-binding, weaving, rope making, file cutting, etc. The biggest live stock show in the West, and a superb racing program, which includes an offer of $2,000 for "Jay Eye See," Gen. John A. Logan and Gov. Hendricks, Vice Presidential candidates, are expected to be present. Excursion rates from this point.

THE STATE PROHIBITION PLATFORM.

Resolved, That this convention, recognizing Almighty God as the ruler and governor of all things, and asking his blessing on our work, does this day present to the people a full, clean ticket for officers of the state of Michigan. We ask for it the moral and political support of all who would abolish legalized traffic in intoxicating liquors; all who favor intrusting the affairs of the government to honest, capable and sober men; all who believe in the adoption of the most rigid rules of the civil service reform.

Resolved, That capital is necessary in the employment of labor and laboringmen should look favorably upon the development and increase of capital. But capital with labor is useless. The great army of toilers is the foundation of our prosperity. Their interests and sacred rights should be maintained by appropriate legislation. No one thing will so effectually do this as the suppression of the liquor traffic, and therefore we invite all laboring men to unite with us in pledging ourselves to a favorable action in behalf of their interests and welfare.

Resolved, That we regard it altogether inexpedient for us to indorse the candidates of any other political party to any office, as it tends to weaken our own forces and encourage the political parties who are organically disqualified to deal with the question of prohibition.

Resolved, That we do not believe sex alone should debar any citizen from all the rights of citizenship. We declare ourselves favorable to woman suffrage and will hail the coming of the time when it can be made a distinct and prominent political issue.

Resolved, That we fully indorse the platform of the national prohibition party and will heartily support its candidates.

Resolved, That we call attention of the members of the democrat and greenback parties to the shameful and ignoble position in which the greedy office seekers who control those organizations have placed them. The direct foes to good government never proposed a scheme more destructive of political virtue and prejudicial to the people's interest than the bargain and sale arrangement made by these fusionists for the mere purpose of political spoils. No reform in the existing abuses of the government can take place if we put our state in control of men who trade their votes before election, because they will cheat the people after, and cannot be trusted to bring about those reforms which the people so much demand.

We present a clean issue overshadowing in its importance all others which affect alike the poor and rich man's home. We earnestly appeal to all voters to come with us and by their votes to contribute to a victory which means the grand uplifting of the human race rather than the mere parceling out of spoils as brigands divide plunder which they have gained from a successful raid.

Resolved, That the resolution adopted by the convention of the republican party at Kalamazoo two years ago and reaffirmed at the late convention at Detroit as a substitute for the report of the committee on platform, upon the subject of temperance, is an acknowledgement of its inability to grapple with the question of prohibition of the liquor traffic, inasmuch as it is a confession that there is no unity upon the subject in its own ranks. Even the demand which it makes for the submission of a constitutional amendment is of very little value as the leading organ of the party of this state frankly confesses that "no state convention can prohibit voters from sending a republican to Lansing who does not favor prohibition or the submission of either." A convention can not bind its local constituencies and therefore we cannot secure the election of proper candidates in a party having such various opinions and convictions upon the subject.

Frank Leslie's Popular Magazine.

THE number for September opens with a timely and able article on "The Presidential Canvass of 1884" with nine illustrations, including portraits of the candidates, etc. Norton Rutherforth has an interesting article, "Across the Pampas," with eight illustrations. Duyckinck's "New York After the Revolution" nine illustrations, "Hunting an Empire's Ghost" by Alfred Trumble illustrated. "The Scientific Schools of the United States," by J. E. Hallock, Ph.D. 12 illustrations; and "Chamounix," by Frederick Daniel illustrated, are noteworthy features of the number. The departments of Fiction, Sketches Adventures, etc., contain contributions by H. Cleveland Ward, Annie Thomas, K. V. Hastings, etc. Etta W. Pierce continues her deeply interesting serial, "A Dark Deed." The poems are by Mrs. Dennison and others. There are also a large variety of short articles, anecdotes, paragraphs, etc; over 100 illustrations, and a beautiful colored frontispiece, "The Bitter with the Sweet." The 128 quarto pages of valuable and delightful reading are sold for 25 cents; yearly subscription $2.50, post paid. Mrs. FRANK LESLIE, Publisher, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

A correspondent to a neighboring paper says that "when a frost has hurt the leaves of corn much, the sooner it is cut and shocked the better it will be for both fodder and corn and if the kernels have begun to glaze the corn will ripen."

A gardener recommends tying old newspapers about celery to bleach it. He finds that in this manner he can bleach it better, easier and cheaper than by earthing it up.

he Three Strangers.

BY THOMAS HARDY.

Among the few features of agricultural England which retain an appearance but little modified by the lapse of centuries may be reckoned the high, grassy, and furzy mounds, coombs, or cwms, as they are indifferently called, that diversify large areas of certain counties in the south and southwest. If any mark of human habitation is met with hereon it usually takes the form of the solitary cottage, or some shepherd.

Fifty years ago such a lonely cottage stood on such a down, and may possibly be standing there now. Despite its loneliness, however, the spot, by actual measurement, was not more than five miles from a county town. Yet what of that? Five miles in irregular upland during the long-drawn season, with their sleets, snows, rains, and mists, afford withdrawing space enough to isolate a Timon or a Nebuchadnezzar, much less, in fair weather, to please that less repellant tribe, the poets, philosophers, artists, and others who "conceive and meditate of pleasant things."

Some old earthen camp or barrow, some clump of trees, at least some starved fragment of ancient hedge, is usually taken advantage of in the erection of these forlorn dwellings. But, in the present case, such a kind of shelter had been disregarded. Higher Crowstairs, as the house was called, stood quite detached and undefended. The only reason for its precise situation seemed to be the crossing of two footpaths at right angles hard by, which may have crossed there and thus for a good five hundred years. The house was thus exposed to the elements on all sides. But, though the wind up here blew unmistakably when it did blow, and the rain hit hard whenever it fell, the various weathers of the winter season were not quite so formidable on the coomb as they were imagined to be by dwellers on low ground. The raw rimes were not so pernicious as in the hollows, and the frosts were scarcely so severe. When the shepherd and his family, who tenanted the house, were pitied for their sufferings from the exposure, they said that upon the whole they were less inconvenienced by "wuzzes and flames" (hoarses and phlegms) than when they had lived by the stream of a snug neighborhood valley.

The night of March 28, 182-, was precisely one of the nights that were wont to call forth these expressions of commiseration. The level rain-storm smote walls, slopes, and hedges like the cloth-yard shafts of Seniac and Crecy. Such sheep and outdoor animals as had no shelter stood with their buttocks to the wind; while the tails of little birds trying to roost on some scraggy thorn were blown inside out like umbrellas. The gable-end of the cottage was stained with wet, and the eaves-droppings flapped against the wall. Yet never was commiseration for the shepherd more misplaced. For that cheerful rustic was entertaining a large party in glorification of the christening of his second girl.

The guests had arrived before the rain began to fall, and they were all now assembled in the chief or living-room of the dwelling. A glance into the apartment at 8 o'clock on this eventful evening would have resulted in the opinion that it was as cozy and comfortable a nook as could be wished for in boisterous weather. The calling of its inhabitants was proclaimed by a number of highly-polished sheep-crooks without stems that were hung ornamentally over the fireplace, the curling of each shining crook varying from the antiquated type engraved in the patriarchal pictures of old family bibles to the most approved fashion of the last local sheep fair. The room was lighted by half-a-dozen candles, having wicks only a trifle smaller than the grease which encircled them, in candlesticks that were never used but at high-days, holy-days, and family feasts. The lights were scattered about the room, two of them standing on the chimney-piece. This position of candles was in itself significant. Candles on the chimney-piece always meant a party.

On the hearth, in front of a back-brand to give substance, blazed a fire of thorns, that crackled "like the laughter of the fool."

Nineteen persons were gathered here. Of these, five women, wearing gowns of various bright hues, sat in chairs along the walls; girls shy and not shy filled the window-bench; four men, including Charley Jake, the hedge-carpenter, Elijah New, the parish-clerk, and John Pitcher, a neighboring dairyman, the shepherd's father-in-law, loiled in the settle; a young man and maid, who were blushing over tentative pourparlers on a life-companionship, sat beneath the corner cupboard, and an elderly engaged man of 50 or upward moved restlessly from spots where his betrothed was not to the spot where she was. Enjoyment was pretty general, and so much the more prevailed in being unhampered by conventional restrictions. Absolute confidence in each other's good opinion begat perfect ease, while the finishing stroke of manner, amounting to a truly princely serenity, was lent to the majority by the absence of any expression or trait denoting that they wished to get on in the world, enlarge their minds, or do any eclipsing thing whatever—which now-a-days so generally nips the bloom and bonhomie of all except the two extremes of the social scale.

Shepherd Fennel had married well, his wife being a dairyman's daughter from the valley below, who brought 30 guineas in her pocket and kept them there till they should be required for ministering to the needs of a coming family. This frugal woman had been somewhat exercised as to the character that should be given to the gathering. A sit-still party had its advantages; but an undisturbed position of ease in chairs and settles was apt to lead on the men to such an unconscionable deal of loping that they would fairly drink the house dry. A dancing party was the alternative, but this, while avoiding the foregoing objection on the score of good drink, had a counterbalancing disadvantage in the matter of good victuals, the ravenous appetites engendered by the exercise causing immense havoc in the buttery. Shepherdess Fennel fell back upon the intermediate plan of mingling short dances with short periods of talking and singing, so as to hinder any ungovernable rage in either. But this scheme was entirely confined to her own gentle mind; the shepherd himself was in the mood to exhibit the most reckless phases of hospitality.

The fiddler was a boy of those parts, about 12 years of age, who had a wonderful dexterity in jigs and reels, though his fingers were so small and short as to necessitate a constant shifting for the high notes, from which he scrambled back to the first position with sounds not of unmixed purity of tone. At 7 the shrill tweedle-dee of this youngster had begun, accompanied by a booming groundbass from Elijah New the parish clerk, who had thoughtfully brought with him his favorite musical instrument, the serpent. Dancing was instantaneous. Mrs. Fennel privately enjoining the players on no account to let the dances exceed the length of a quarter of an hour.

But Elijah and the boy, in the excitement of their position, quite forgot the injunction. Moreover, Oliver Giles, a man of fifty, one of the dancers, who was enamored of his partner, a fair girl of 20 young years, had recklessly handed a new crown-piece to the musicians, as a bribe to "keep going as long as they had wind and hand." Mrs. Fennel being the storm began to generate on the countenances of her guests, crossed over and touched the miller's elbow, and put her hand on the serpent's mouth. But they took no notice, and fearing she might lose her character of genial hostess if she were to interfere too markedly, she retired and sat down behind. And so the dance whizzed on with cumulative fury, the performers moving in their planet-like courses, direct and retrograde, from apogee to perigee, till the hand of the well-kicked clock at the bottom of the room had traveled over the circumference of an hour.

While these cheerful events were in course of enactment within Fennel's pastoral dwelling, an incident having considerable bearing on the party had occurred in the gloomy night without. Mrs. Fennel's concern about the growing fierceness of the dance corresponded in point of time with the ascent of a human figure to the solitary hill of Higher Crowstairs from the direction of the distant town. This personage strode on through the rain without a pause, following the little-worn path which, further on in its course, skirted the shepherd's cottage.

It was nearly the time of full moon, and on this account, though the sky was lined with a uniform sheet of dripping cloud, ordinary objects out of doors were readily visible. The sad, wan light revealed the lonely pedestrian to be a man of supple frame; his gait suggested that he had somewhat passed the period of perfect and instinctive agility, though not so far as to be otherwise than rapid of motion when occasion required. In point of fact he might have been about 40 years of age. He appeared tall, but a recruiting sergeant, or other person accustomed to the judging of men's height by the eye, would have discerned that he was not more than five feet eight or nine.

Notwithstanding the regularity of his tread, there was caution in it, as in that of one who mentally feels his way; and despite the fact that it was not a black coat nor a dark garment of any sort that he wore, there was something about him which suggested that he naturally belonged to the black-coated tribes of men. His clothes were of fustian, and his boots hobnailed, yet in progress he showed not the mud-accustomed bearing of hobnailed and fustian peasantry.

By the time that he had arrived abreast of the shepherd's premises the rain came down, or rather came along, with yet more determined violence. The outskirts of the little homestead partially broke the force of the wind and rain, and this induced him to stand still. The most salient of the shepherd's domestic erections was an empty sty at the forward corner of his hedgeless garden, for in these latitudes the principle of masking the homier features of your establishment by a conventional frontage was unknown. The traveler's eye was attracted to this small building by the pallid shine of the wet slates that covered it. He turned aside, and, finding it empty, stood under the pent roof for shelter.

While he stood, the boom of the serpent within, and the lesser strains of the fiddler, reached the spot as an accompaniment to the surging hiss of the flying rain on the sod, its louder beating on the cabbage-leaves of the garden, on the eight or ten bee-hives just discernible by the path, and its dripping from the eaves into a row of buckets and pans that had been placed under the walls of the cottage. For at Higher Crowstairs, as at all such elevated domiciles, the grand difficulty of housekeeping was an insufficiency of water, and a casual rainfall was utilized by turning out as catchers, every utensil that the house contained. Some queer stories might be told of the contrivances for economy in suds and dishwaters that are absolutely necessitated in upland habitations during the droughts of summer. But at this season there were no such exigencies; a mere acceptance of what the skies bestowed was sufficient for an abundant store.

At last the notes of the serpent ceased and the house was silent. This cessation of activity aroused the solitary pedestrian from the reverie into which he had lapsed, and emerging from the shed, with an apparently new intention, he walked up the path to the house-door. Arrived here, his first act was to kneel down on a large stone beside the row of vessels, and to drink a copious draught from one of them. Having quenched his thirst, he rose and lifted his hand to knock, but paused with his eye upon the panel. Since the dark surface of the wood revealed absolutely nothing, it was evident that he must be mentally looking through the door, as if he wished to measure thereby all the possibilities that a house of this sort might include, and how they might bear upon the question of his entry.

In his indecision he turned and surveyed the scene around. Not a soul was anywhere visible. The garden path stretched downward from his feet, gleaming like the track of a small snail; the roof of the little well (mostly dry), the well cover, the top rail of the garden gate, were varnished with the same dull liquid glaze; far away in the vale, a faint whiteness of more than usual extent showed that the rivers were high in the meads. Beyond all this winked a few bleared lamplights through the beating drops, lights that denoted the situation of the country town from which he had appeared to come. The absence of all notes of life in that direction seemed to clinch his intentions, and he knocked at the door.

Within a desolatory chat had taken the place of movement and musical sound. The hedge-carpenter was suggesting a song to the company, which no one just then was inclined to undertake, so that the knock afforded a not unwelcome diversion.

"Walk in," said the shepherd promptly.

The latch clicked upward, and out of the night our pedestrian appeared upon the door-mat. The shepherd arose, snuffed two of the nearest candles, and turned to look at him.

Their light disclosed that the stranger was dark in complexion, and not unprepossessing as to feature. His hat, which for a moment he did not remove, hung low over his eyes, without concealing that they were large, open, and determined, moving with a flash rather than a glance round the room. He seemed pleased with the survey, and baring his shaggy head, said, in a rich, deep voice: "The rain is so heavy, friends, that I ask leave to come in and rest awhile."

"To be sure, stranger," said the shepherd. "And faith, you've been lucky in choosing your time, for we are having a bit of a thing for a good cause—though to be sure a man could hardly wish that glad cause to happen more than once a year."

"Nor less," spoke up a woman. "For 'tis best to get your family over and done with as soon as you can, so as to be all the earlier out of the pangs."

"And what may be this glad cause?" asked the stranger.

"A birth and a christening," said the shepherd.

The stranger hoped his host might not be made unhappy either by too many or too few of such episodes, and, being invited by a gesture to pull at the mug, he readily acquiesced. His manner, which before entering had been scrupulous, was now altogether that of a careless and candid man.

"Late to be traversing athwart this coomb—hey?" said the engaged man of 50.

"Late it is, master, as you say. I'll take a seat in the chimney-corner, if you have nothing to urge against it, ma'am, for I'm a little moist on the side that was next the rain."

Mrs. Shepherd Fennel assented, and made room for the self-invited comer, who, having got completely inside the chimney-corner, stretched out his legs and his arms with the expansiveness of a person quite at home.

"Yes, I am rather thin in the vamp," he said freely, seeing that the eyes of the shepherd's wife fell upon his boots, "and I am not well-fitted, either. I have had some rough times lately, and have been forced to pick up what I can get in the way of wearing, but I must find a suit better fit for working days when I reach home."

"One of hereabouts?" she inquired.

"Not quite that—further up the country."

"I thought so. And so am I; and by your tongue you come from our neighborhood."

"But you would hardly have heard of me," he said quickly. "My time would be long before yours, ma'am, you see."

This testimony to the youthfulness of his hostess had the effect of stopping her cross-examination.

"There is only one thing more wanted to make me happy," continued the new comer. "And that is a little baccy, which I am sorry to say I am out of."

"I'll fill your pipe," said the shepherd.

"I must ask you to lend me a pipe likewise."

"A smoker, and no pipe about ye?"

"I have dropped it somewhere on the road."

The shepherd filled and handed him a new clay pipe, saying, as he did so: "Hand me your baccy-box—I'll fill that too, now I'm about it."

The man went through the movement of searching his pockets.

"Lost that too?" said his entertainer, with some surprise.

"I am afraid so, said the man with some confusion. "Give it to me in a screw of paper." Lighting his pipe at the candle with a suction that drew the whole flame into the bowl, he resettled himself in the corner, and bent his looks upon the faint steam from his damp legs, as if he wished to say no more.

Meanwhile the general body of guests had been taking little notice of this visitor by reason of an absorbing discussion in which they were engaged with the band about a tune for the next dance. The matter being settled, they were about to stand up, when an interruption came in the shape of another knock at the door.

At sound of the same the man in the chimney-corner took up the poker and began stirring the fire as if doing it thoroughly was the one aim of his existence, and the second time the shepherd said "Walk in!" In a moment another man stood upon the straw-woven door-mat. He, too, was a stranger.

This individual was one of a type radically different from the first. There was more of the commonplace in his manner, and a certain jovial cosmopolitanism sat upon his features. He was several years older than the first arrival, his hair being slightly frosted, his eyebrows bristly, and his whiskers cut back from his cheeks. His face was rather full and flabby, and yet it was not altogether a face without power. A few grog-blossoms marked the neighborhood of his nose. He flung back his long drab great coat, revealing that beneath it he wore a suit of cinder-gray shade throughout, large, heavy seals of some metal or other that would take a polish, dangling from his fob as his only personal ornament. Shaking the water-drops from his low-crowned, glazed hat, he said: "I must ask for a few minutes' shelter, comrades, or I shall be wetted to my skin before I get to Casterbridge."

"Make yerself at home, master," said the shepherd, perhaps a trifle less heartily than on the first occasion. Not that Fennel had the least tinge of niggardliness in his composition, but the room was far from large, spare chairs were not numerous, and damp companions were not altogether comfortable at close quarters for the women and girls in their bright-colored gowns.

However, the second comer, after taking off his great-coat, and hanging his hat on a nail in one of the ceiling-beams, as if he had been specially invited to put it there, advanced and sat down at the table. This had been pushed so closely into the chimney-corner, to give all available room to the dancers, that its inner edge grazed the elbow of the man who had ensconced himself by the fire, and thus the two strangers were brought into close companionship. They nodded to each other by way of breaking the ice of acquaintance, and the first stranger handed his neighbor the large mug—a huge vessel of brown ware, having its upper edge worn away like a threshold by the rub of whole genealogies of thirsty lips that had gone the way of all flesh, and bearing the following inscription burnt upon its rotund side in yellow letters:

There is no fun
Until I cum.

The other man, nothing loath, raised the mug to his lips and drank on, and on, till a curious blueness spread over the countenance of the shepherd's wife, who had regarded with no little surprise the first stranger's free offer to the second of what did not belong to him to dispense.

"I knew it," said the toper to the shepherd with much satisfaction. "When I walked up your garden afore coming in, and saw the hives all of a row, I said to myself, 'Where there's bees there's honey, and where there's honey there's mead.' But mead of such a truly comfortably sort as this I really didn't expect to meet in my older days."

He took yet another pull at the mug, till it assumed an ominous horizontality.

"Glad you enjoy it!" said the shepherd warmly.

"It is goodish mead," assented Mrs. Fennel with an absence of enthusiasm, which seemed to say that it was possible to buy praise for one's cellar at too heavy a price. "It is trouble enough to make, and really I hardly think we shall make any more. For honey sells well, and we can make shift with a drop of small mead and metheglin for common use from the comb-washing."

"Oh, but you'll never have the heart to!" reproachfully cried the stranger in cinder-gray, after taking up the mug the third time and setting it down empty. "I love mead, when 'tis old like this, as I love to go to church o' Sundays, or to relieve the needy any day of the week."

"Ha, ha, ha!" said the man in the chimney-corner, who, in spite of the laciturnity induced by the pipe of tobacco could not or would not refrain from this slight testimony to his comrade's humor.

"Now," the old mead of those days, brewed of the purest first yeast or maiden honey, four pounds to the gallon—with its due complement of whites of eggs, cinnamon, ginger, cloves, mace, rosemary, yeast, and processes of working, bottling, and cellaring—tasted remarkably strong; but it did not taste so strong as it actually was. Hence, presently, the stranger in cinder-gray at the table, moved by its creeping influences, unbuttoned his waistcoat, threw himself back in his chair, spread his legs, and made his presence felt in various ways.

"Well, well, as I say," he resumed, "I am going to Casterbridge, and to Casterbridge I must go. I should have been almost there by this time; but the rain drove me into ye, and I'm not sorry for it."

"You don't live in Casterbridge?" said the shepherd.

"Not as yet, though I shortly mean to move there."

"Going to set up in trade, perhaps?"

"No, no," said the shepherd's wife. "It is easy to see that the gentleman is rich and don't want to work at anything."

The cinder-gray stranger paused, as if to consider whether he would accept the definition of himself. He presently rejected it by answering: "Rich is not quite the word for me, dame. I do work, and I must work. And even if I only get to Casterbridge by midnight I must begin work there at 6 to-morrow morning. Yes, hot or wet, blow or snow, famine or sword, my day's work to-morrow must be done."

"Poor man! Then, in spite o' seeming, you be worse off than we?" replied the shepherd's wife.

"'Tis the nature of my trade, men and maidens. 'Tis the nature of my trade more than my poverty. But really and truly I must be up and off, or I shan't get a lodging in the town." However, the speaker did not move, and directly added, "There's time for one more draught of friendship before I go; and I'd perform it at once if the mug was not dry."

"Here's a mug o' small," said Mrs. Fennel. "Small we call it, though to be sure 'tis only the first wash o' the coombs."

"No," said the stranger disdainfully; "I won't spoil your first kindness by partaking o' your second."

"Certainly not," broke in Fennel. "We don't increase and multiply every day, and I'll fill the mug again." He went away to the dark place under the stairs where the barrel stood. The shepherdess followed him.

"Why should you do this?" she said reproachfully, as soon as they were alone. "He's emptied it once, though it held enough for ten people; and now he's not contented wi' the small, but must needs call for more o' the strong! And a stranger unbeknown to any of us. For my part I don't like the look o' the man at all."

"But he's in the house, my honey; and 'tis a wet night, and a christening. Daze it, what's a cup of mead more or less? There'll be plenty more next bee-burning."

"Very well—this time, then," she answered, looking wistfully at the barrel. "But what is the man's calling, and where is he one of, that he should come in and join us like this?"

"I don't know. I'll ask him again."

The catastrophe of having the mug drained dry at one pull by the stranger in cinder-gray was effectually guarded against this time by Mrs. Fennel. She poured out his allowance in a small cup, keeping the large one at a discreet distance from him. When he had tossed off his portion the shepherd renewed his inquiry about the stranger's occupation.

The latter did not immediately reply, and the man in the chimney-corner, with sudden demonstrativeness, said: "Anybody may know my trade—I'm a wheelright."

"A very good trade for these parts," said the shepherd.

"And anybody may know mine—if they've the sense to find it out," said the stranger in cinder-gray.

"You may generally tell what a man is by his claws," observed the hedge-carpenter, looking at his hands. "My fingers be as full of thorns as an old pincushion is of pins."

The hands of the man in the chimney-corner instinctively sought the shade, and he gazed into the fire as he resumed his pipe. The man at the table took up the hedge-carpenter's remark, and added smartly: "True; but the oddity of my trade is that, instead of setting a mark upon me, it sets a mark upon my customers."

No observation being offered by anybody in elucidation of this enigma, the shepherd's wife once more called for a song. The same obstacles presented themselves as at the former time—one had no voice, another had forgotten the first verse. The stranger at the table, whose soul had now risen to a good working temperature, relieved the difficulty—he would sing himself. Thrusting one thumb into the arm-hole of his waistcoat, he waved the other hand in the air, and, with and extemporizing gaze at the shining sheep-crooks above the mantelpiece, began:

Oh, my trade it is the rarest one,
Simple shepherds all—
My trade is a sight to see;
For my customers I tie, and take them up on high,
And waft 'em to a far countree.

The room was quiet when he had finished the verse—with one exception, that of the man in the chimney-corner, who, at the singer's word, "Chorus!" joined him in a deep bass voice of musical relish—

—And waft them to a far countree.

Oliver Giles, John Pitcher, the dairyman, the parish clerk, the engaged man of fifty, the row of young women against the wall, seemed lost in thought not of the gayest kind. The shepherd looked meditatively on the ground, the shepherdess gazed keenly at the singer, and with some suspicion; she was doubting whether this stranger was merely singing an old song from recollection, or was composing one there and then for the occasion. All were as perplexed at the obscure revelation as the guests at Belshazzar's feast, except the man in the chimney-corner, who quietly said, "Second verse, stranger," and smoked on.

The singer thoroughly moistened himself from his lips inward, and went on with the next stanza as requested:

My tools are but common ones,
Simple shepherds all,
My tools are no sight to see:
A little hempen string, and a post where on to swing,
Are implements enough for me.

Shepherd Fennel glanced round. There was no longer any doubt that the stranger was answering his question rhythmically. The guests one and all started back, with suppressed exclamations. The young woman engaged to the man of 50 fainted half away, and would have proceeded, but finding him wanting in alacrity for catching her she sat down trembling.

"Oh, he's the——!" whispered the people in the background, mentioning the name of an ominous public officer. "He's come to do it." 'Tis to be at Casterbridge jail to-morrow—the man for sheepstealing—the poor clock-maker we heard of, who used to live away at Anglebury and had no work to do—Timothy Sommers, whose family were a-starving, and so he went out of Anglebury by the high road, and took a sheep in open daylight, defying the farmer, and the farmer's wife and the farmer's man, and every man jack among 'em. He" (and they nodded toward the stranger of the terrible trade) "is come up the country to do it, because there's not enough to do in his own county town, and he's got the place here, now our own county man's dead; he's going to live in the same cottage under the prison wall."

The stranger in cinder-gray took no notice of this whispered string of observations, but again wetted his lips. Seeing that his friend in the chimney-corner was the only one who reciprocated his joviality in any way he held out his cup toward that appreciative comrade, who also held out his own. They clinked together, the eyes of the rest of the room hanging upon the singer's actions. He parted his lips for the third verse, but at that moment another knock was audible upon the door. This time the knock was faint and hesitating.

The company seemed scared; the shepherd looked with consternation toward the entrance, and it was with some effort that he resisted his alarmed wife's deprecatory glance, and uttered for the third time the welcoming words, "Walk in!"

The door was gently opened, and another man stood upon the mat. He, like those who had preceded him, was a stranger. This time it was a short, small personage, of fair complexion, and dressed in a decent suit of dark clothes.

"Can you tell me the way to ——?" he began, when, gazing round the room to observe the nature of the company among whom he had fallen, his eyes lighted on the stranger in cinder-gray. It was just at the instant when the latter, who had thrown his mind into his song with such a will that he scarcely heeded the interruption, silenced all whispers and inquiries by bursting into his third verse:

To-morrow is my working day,
Simple shepherds all—
To-morrow is a working day for me;
For the farmer's sheep is slain, and the lad who did it ta'en,
And on his soul may God ha' mercy!

All this time the third stranger had been standing in the doorway. Finding now that he did not come forward or go on speaking, the guests particularly regarded him. They noticed to their surprise that he stood before them the picture of abject terror—his knees trembling, his hands shaking so violently that the doorlatch by which he supported himself rattled audibly; his white lips were parted, and his eyes fixed on the merry officer of justice in the middle of the room. A moment more and he had turned, closed the door, and fled.

"What a man can it be?" said the shepherd. The rest, between the awfulness of their late discovery and the odd conduct of this third visitor, looked as if they knew not what to think and said nothing. Instinctively they withdrew further and further from the grim gentleman in the midst, whom some of them seemed to take for the prince of darkness himself, till they formed a remote circle, an empty space of floor being left between them and him—

—circulus centrum diabolus.

The room was so silent—though there were more than twenty people in it—that nothing could be heard but the patter of the rain against the window-shutters, accompanied by the occasional hiss of a stray drop that fell down the chimney into the fire, and the steady puffing of the man in the corner, who had now resumed his pipe of long clay.

The stillness was unexpectedly broken. The distant sound of a gun reverberated through the air—apparently from the direction of the country-town.

"Be jiggered!" cried the stranger who had sung the song, jumping up.

"What does that mean?" asked several.

"A prisoner escaped from the jail—that is what it means."

All listened. The sound was repeated, and none of them spoke but the man in the chimney-corner, who said quietly, "I've often been told that in this county they fire a gun at such times, but I never heard it till now."

"I wonder if it is my man?" murmured the personage in cinder-gray.

"Surely it is," said the shepherd, involuntarily. "And surely we've seen him! That little man who looked in at the door by news and quivered like a leaf when he see'ye and heard your song."

"His teeth chattered, and the heart went out of his body," said the dairyman.

"And his heart seemed to sink within him like a stone," said Oliver Giles.

"And he bolted as if he'd been shot at," said the hedge-carpenter.

"True—his teeth chattered, and his heart seemed to sink, and he bolted as if he'd been shot at." So way summed up the man in the chimney-corner.

"I didn't notice it," remarked the grim songster.

"We were all a-wondering what made him run off in such a fright," latered one of the women against the wall, "and now 'tis explained."

KING'S EVIL

Was the name formerly given to Scrofula because of a superstition that it could be cured by a king's touch. The world is wiser now, and knows that can only be cured by a thorough purification of the blood. If this is neglected, the disease perpetuates its taint through generation after generation. Among its earlier symptomatic developments are Eczema, Cutaneous Eruptions, Tumors, Boils, Carbuncles, Erysipelas, Purulent Ulcers, Nervous and Physical Collapse, etc. If allowed to continue, Rheumatism, Scrofulous Catarrh, Kidney and Liver Diseases, Tubercular Consumption, and various other dangerous or fatal maladies are produced by it.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Is the only powerful and always reliable blood-purifying medicine. It is so effectual an alterative that it eradicates from the system Hereditary Scrofula, and the kindred poisons of contagious diseases and mercury. At the same time it enriches and vitalizes the blood, restoring healthful action to the vital organs and rejuvenating the entire system. This great Ringworm Humor and Salt-Rheum.

RAYNHAM, MASS., Aug. 12, 1873.

C. I. Hood & Co., Gentlemen:— * * * I have had ringworm humor and salt-rheum so badly that my body was covered with raw sores; so, also, my head and face. I have had any number of doctors for the last seven years, and none of them could cure me. One day my mother was in the city of Taunton, and found one of your cook books, and in reading it found many people testifying to cures from the use of your Sarsaparilla and Dyspepsia Ointment. I felt forced to try it, although I had seen many things advertised that never did me any good. I have now taken two small bottles and one large one of Sarsaparilla, and used three boxes of Ointment. I now call myself cured. Nothing can be seen of the humor but the dim outlines of the sores. I shall take two more bottles, and then the cure will be complete.

I am gratefully yours,
EDGAR F. WHITMAN.

Biliousness, Sick Headache.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gents—Please send me by express two bottles HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA and a few Cook Books for distribution. Your preparation has worked wonders in the case of my wife, who has been troubled with sick headache and biliousness for years. She only took one-half teaspoonful at a dose, and has not been so well for five years as now. She found that within a week after taking it she felt very much better, and is now entirely free from those severe headaches. She has not taken any of it of account since last spring, and what little she had is lent to do some others some good, and we must have it in the house.

Yours truly,
HOMER B. NASH.

THE THREE STRANGERS.

Concluded from First Page.

The firing of the alarm-gun went on at intervals, low and sullenly, and their suspicions became a certainty. The sinister gentleman in cinder-gray rouse himself. "Is there a constable here?" he asked in thick tones. "If so, let him step forward."

The engaged man of 50 stepped quivering out of the corner, his betrothed beginning to sob on the back of the chair.

"You are a sworn constable?"

"I be, sir."

"Then pursue the criminal at once, with assistance, and bring him back here. He can't have gone far."

"I will, sir, I will—when I've got my staff. I'll go home and get it, and come sharp here, and start in a body."

"Staff! Never mind your staff; the man'll be gone!"

"But I can't do nothing without my staff—can I, William, and John, and Charles Jake? No; for there's the king's royal crown a painted on en in yaller and gold, and the lion and the unicorn, so as when I raise en up and hit my prisoner, 't's made a lawful blow thereby. I wouldn't 'tempt to take up a man without my staff—no, not I. If I hadn't the law to gie me courage, why, instead o' my taking him up he might take up me!"

"Now, I'm a king's man myself, and can give you authority enough for this," said the formidable person in cinder-gray. "Now then, all of ye, be ready. Have ye any lanterns?"

"Yes—have ye any lanterns?—I demand it," said the constable.

"And the rest of you able-bodied—"

"Able-bodied men—yes—the rest of ye," said the constable.

"Have you some good stout staves and pitchforks——"

"Staves and pitchforks—in the name o' the law. And take 'em in yer hands, and go in quest, and do as we in authority tell ye."

Thus aroused, the man prepared to give chase. The evidence was, indeed, though circumstantial, so convincing, that but little argument was needed to show the shepherd's guests that after what they had seen it would look very much like connivance if they did not instantly pursue the unhappy third stranger, who could not as yet have gone more than a few hundred yards over such uneven country.

A shepherd is always well provided with lanterns, and, lighting these hastily, and with hurdle-staves in their hands, they poured out of the door, taking a direction along the crest of the hill, away from the town, the rain having fortunately a little abated.

Disturbed by the noise, or possibly by unpleasant dreams of her baptism, the child who had been christened began to cry heartbrokenly in the room overhead. These notes of grief came down through the chinks of the floor to the ears of the women below, who jumped up one by one, and seemed glad of the excuse to ascend and comfort the baby, for the incidents of the last half hour greatly oppressed them. Thus in the space of two or three minutes the room on the ground-floor was deserted quite.

But it was not for long. Hardly had the sound of footsteps died away when a man returned round the corner of the house from the direction the pursuers had taken. Peeping in at the door and seeing nobody there he entered leisurely. It was the stranger of the chimney-corner, who had gone out with the rest. The motive of his return was shown by his helping himself to a cut piece of skimmer-cake that lay on a ledge beside where he had sat, and which he had apparently forgotten to take with him. He also poured out half a cup more from the quantity that remained, ravenously eating and drinking these as he stood. He had not finished when another figure came in just as quietly—the stranger in cinder-gray.

"Oh—you here?" said the latter, smiling. "I thought you had gone to help in the capture." And this speaker also revealed the object of his return by looking solicitously round for the fascinating mug of old mead.

"And I thought you had gone," said the other, continuing his skimmer-cake with some effort.

"Well, on second thoughts, I felt there were enough without me," said the first confidentially, "and such a night as it is, too. Besides, it is the business o' the government to take care of its criminals—not mine."

"True; so it is. And I felt as you did, that there were enough without me."

"I don't want to break my limbs running over the lumps and hollows of this wild country."

"Nor I neither, between you and me."

"These shepherd people are used to it—simpleminded souls, you know, stirred up to anything in a moment. They'll have him ready for me before the morning, and no trouble to me at all."

"They'll have him, and we shall have saved ourselves all labor in the matter."

"True, true. Well, my way is to Casterbridge; and 'tis as much as my legs will do to take me that far. Going the same way?"

"No, I am sorry to say. I have to get home over there" (he nodded indefinitely to the right) "and I feel as you do, that it is quite enough for my legs to do before bedtime."

The other had by this time finished the mead in the mug, after which, shaking hands at the door, and wishing each other well, they went their several ways.

In the meantime the company of pursuers had reached the end of the hog's back elevation which dominated this part of the coomb. They had decided on no particular plan of action, and finding that the man of the baleful trade was no longer in their company, they seemed quite unable to form any such plan now. They descended in all directions down the hill, and straightway several of the party fell into the snare set by nature for all misguided midnight rambles over the lower cretaceous formation. The "lynchets," or flint slopes, which belted the escarpment at intervals of a dozen yards, took the less cautious ones unawares, and losing their footing on the rubbly steep, they slid sharply downward, the lanterns rolling from their hands to the bottom, and there lying on their sides till the horn was scorched through. When they had again gathered themselves together, the shepherd, as the man who knew the country best, took the lead, and guided them round these treacherous inclines. The lanterns, which seemed rather to dazzle their eyes and warn the fugitive than to assist them in the exploration, were extinguished, due silence was observed, and in this more rational order they plunged into the vale. It was a grassy, briary, moist channel, affording some shelter to any person who had sought it; but the party perambulated, it in vain, and ascended on the other side. Here they wandered apart, and after an interval closed together again to report progress. At the second time of closing in they found themselves near a lonely oak, the single tree on this part of the upland, probably sown there by a passing bird some hundred years before. And here, standing a little to one side of the trunk, as motionless as the trunk itself, appeared the man they were in quest of, his outline being well defined against the sky beyond. The band noiselessly drew up and faced him.

"Your money or your life!" said the constable sternly to the still figure.

"No, no," whispered John Pitcher. "Well, well," replied the constable impatiently, "I must say something, mustn't I? and if you had all the weight of this undertaking upon your mind, perhaps you'd say the wrong thing too. Prisoner at the bar, surrender, in the name of the Fath—the crown, I mane!"

The man under the tree seemed now to notice them for the first time, and, giving them no opportunity whatever for exhibiting their courage, he strolled slowly toward them. He was, indeed, the little man, the third stranger, but his trepidation had in a great measure gone.

"Well, travelers," he said, "did I hear ye speak to me?"

"You did; you've got to come and be our prisoner at once," said the constable. "We arrest you on the charge of not biding in Casterbridge jail in a decent, proper manner, to be hung tomorrow morning. Neighbors, do your duty, and seize the culprit!"

On hearing the charge, the man seemed enlightened, and, saying not another word, resigned himself with preternatural civility to the search-party, who, with their hands, surrounded him on all sides, and marched him back toward the shepherd's cottage. It was 11 o'clock by the time they arrived. The light shining from the open door, a sound of men's voices within proclaimed to them as they approached the house that some new events had arisen in their absence. On entering they discovered the shepherd's living-room to be invaded by two officers from Casterbridge jail and a well-known magistrate who lived at the nearest county seat, intelligence of the escape having become generally circulated.

"Gentlemen," said the constable, "I have brought back your man; but every one must do his duty. He is inside this circle of able-bodied persons, who have lent me useful aid, considering their honor-ance of crown work. Men, bring forward your prisoner." And the third stranger was led to the light.

"Who is this?" said one of the officials.

"The man," said the constable.

"Certainly not," said the other turnkey; and the first corroborated his statement.

"But how can it be otherwise?" asked the constable. "Or why was he so terrified at sight o' the singing instrument of the law?" Here he related the strange behavior of the third stranger on entering the house.

"Can't understand it," said the officer coolly. "All I know is that it is not the condemned man. He's quite a different character from this one; a gaunt sh—'Tisn't our side ought to say that. That's the doctrine of vagabonds like him, and we be on the side of the law." fellow, with dark hair and eyes, rather goodlooking, and with a musical bass voice that if you heard it once you'd never mistake it as long as you lived."

"Why, souls—'twas the man in the chimney-corner!"

"Hey—what?" said the magistrate, coming forward after inquiring particulars from the shepherd in the background. "Haven't you got the man after all?"

"Well, sir," said the constable, "he's the man we were in search of that's true; and yet he's not the man we were in search of. For the man we were in search of was not the man we wanted, sir, if you understand my everyday way; for 'twas the man in the chimney-corner."

"A pretty kettle of fish altogether!" said the magistrate. "You had better start for the other man at once."

The prisoner now spoke for the first time. The mention of the man in the chimney-corner seemed to have moved him as nothing else could do. "Sir," he said, stepping forward to the magistrate, "take no more trouble about me. The time is come when I may as well speak. I have done nothing; my crime is that the condemned man is my brother. Early this afternoon I left home at Anglebury to tramp it all the way to Casterbridge jail to bid him farewell. I was benighted, and called here to rest and ask the way. When I opened the door I saw before me the very man, my brother, that I thought to see in the condemned cell at Casterbridge. He was in this chimney-corner, and jammed close to him, so that he could not have got out if he tried, was the executioner who'd come to take his life, singing a song about it and not knowing that it was his victim who was close by, joining in to save appearances. My brother looked a glance of agony at me, and I knew he meant, 'Don't reveal what you see; my life depends on it.' I was so terror-struck that I could hardly stand, and, not knowing what I did, I turned and hurried away."

The narrator's manner and tone had the stamp of truth, and his story made a great impression on all around. "And do you know where your brother is at present?" asked the magistrate.

"I do not. I have never seen him since I closed this door."

"I can testify to that, for we've been between ye ever since," said the constable.

"Where does he think to fly to?—what is his occupation?"

"He's a watch and clock maker, sir."

"'A said 'a was a wheelwright—a wicked rogue," said the constable.

"The wheels o' clocks and watches he meant, no doubt," said Shepherd Fennel. "I thought his hands were palish for's trade."

"Well, it appears to me that nothing can be gained by retaining this poor man in custody," said the magistrate; "our business lies with the other, unquestionably."

And so the little man was released; off-hand; but he looked nothing the less sad on that account, it being beyond the power of magistrate or constable to raze out the written troubles in his brain, for they concerned another whom he regarded with more solicitude than himself. When this was done, and the man had gone his way, the night was found to be so far advanced that it was deemed useless to renew the search before the next morning.

Next day, accordingly, the quest for the clever sheep-stealer became general and keen, to all appearances at least. But the intended punishment was cruelly disproportioned to the transgression, and the sympathy of a great many country folk in that district was strongly on the side of the fugitive. Moreover, his marvelous coolness and daring under the unprecedented circumstances of the shepherd's party won their admiration. So that it may be questioned if all those who ostensibly made themselves so busy in exploring woods and fields and lanes were quite so thorough when it came to the private examination of their own lofts and outhouses. Stories were afloat of a mysterious figure being occasionally seen in some old overgrown trackery or other, remote from turnpike roads; but when a search was instituted in any of these suspected quarters, nobody was found. Thus the days and weeks passed without tidings.

In brief, the bass-voiced man of the chimney-corner was never recaptured. Some said that he went across the sea, others that he did not, but buried himself in the depths of a populous city. At any rate the gentleman in cinder-gray never did his morning's work at Casterbridge, nor met anywhere at all, for business purposes, the comrade with whom he had passed an hour of relaxation in the lonely house on the coomb.

The grass has long been green on the graves of Shepherd Fennel and his frugal wife; the guests who made up the christening party have mainly followed their entertainers to the tomb; the baby in whose honor they had met is a matron in the sere and yellow leaf. But the arrival of the three strangers at the shepherd's that night, and the details connected therewith, is a story as well known as ever in the country about Higher Crowstairs.—Longman's.

If you are troubled with sores, aches pains and general weakness of the various bodily functions, don't be deceived by the advertisements of bitters kidney medicines, etc., whose certificates of pretended cures, are often paid for. Put your trust in that simple remedy called Dr. Guysett's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. It will cure you by purifying the blood and strengthening the weak portions of your body. You will also find it very refreshing to the brain and nervous system. The proprietors receive hundreds of letters bestowing upon it the highest praise.

We believe that the rank and file of both the Democratic and Greenback parties in Michigan are in favor of uniting their forces and pulling together in the fall campaign. The leaders should be given to understand in unmistakable terms where the people stand on this question. "In union is strength" must be the watchword of the opposition to the Republican party this fall. A fusion ticket properly made will be stronger this fall than it was two years ago.

The testimony of many who long suffered from ill health, caused by an impure state of the blood, goes to prove that the best remedy for making the blood rich, red and pure, for beautifying the complexion, for curing sores, pimples and other skin diseases, for removing aches, pains, stiff joints, rheumatism, etc., for increasing the power of endurance, for giving health and strength to every weak portion of the body, is Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. Its effect pleases the user in every instance. No other remedy equals it.

It is now reported that Henry Ward Beecher has revised his decision to support Cleveland and has concluded to oppose him. Perhaps he is stricken with a conscientious fear that the reports against Gov. Cleveland's private character may possibly be true.

"That tired feeling" from which you suffer so much, particularly in the morning, is entirely thrown off by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Your cough is growing worse. That soreness pain and in the throat and lungs is increasing. Better get rid of the absurd idea that any thing will cure a cough or cold, and give Dr Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry a trial before it is too late. It never fails to check consumption, and quickly cures all coughs and colds.

A chronic Rheumatism which has been paining and disturbing a system of ten years is a mighty enemy to attack. It is like a fiend behind a barricade—hard to hit and harder to dislodge. But ATHOLOPHOROS don't seem to fear even such a desperado. It works its way into his fastness in the system, and ousts him without ceremony. Says Mr. H. Charley, Muskwonago, Wis: "My brother has been taking Atholophoros for chronic Rheumatism of ten years standing. It is doing all you claim for it. His pain is gone, and his limbs are warm and lifelike."

The Secret of Wealth.

Broken down invalids do you wish to gain flesh, to acquire an appetite, to enjoy a regular habit of body, to obtain refreshing sleep, to feel and know that every fiber and tissue of your system is being braced up and renovated. If so commence at once a course of Golden Seal Bitters. In one week you will be convalescent. In a month you will be well. Don't despair because you have a weak constitution. Fortify the body against disease by purifying all the fluids with Golden Seal Bitters. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fortified. The liver, the stomach, the bowels, the kidneys, are rendered disease proof by this great invigorant. Bilious bills for medical attendance may be avoided by counteracting the first symptoms of sickness with these Bitters. They are recommended from friend to friend, and the sale increases daily. We warrant a cure. They are a positive cure also for all female complaints. In these diseases they have no equal. Take no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

PROHIBITION COUNTY CONVENTION.

The prohibition county convention met at Dean's Opera House last Saturday with a good attendance.

T. F. Moore called the convention to order and J. H. Osborn of Tecumseh was chosen temporary chairman, and C. E. Mitchell of Fairfield temporary secretary.

On motion of T. F. Moore a committee on credentials was appointed by the chair as follows: T. F. Moore, Adrian, M. P. Brown, Tecumseh, and C. Quick, Weston. The committee on permanent organization and order of business was next appointed and consisted of A. VanOstrand, of Dover, L. R. Damon, Adrian, W. S. Kimball, Clinton.

Rev. Geo. W. Hudson, of Tecumseh, T. F. Moore, of Adrian, and C. Quick, Weston, were appointed the committee on resolutions.

C. E. Conley moved that all resolutions be referred to the committee on resolutions without debate.

U. R. Evans moved that each representative district name its candidates for the legislature in this convention. This was amended to vote by representative districts. A motion to take an expression of each district as to whether they wished to nominate their candidates to-day or not, was substituted and carried. The first and second districts on being called wished to nominate to-day. The third district wished to wait.

Mr. Waring, of Ridgeway, called on the Lenawee county delegation to the congressional convention to hold an informal caucus in the jury room.

At 11:20 the convention adjourned until 1 P. M.

At one o'clock the convention met again and after prayer adjourned until after the congressional convention. John H. Osborn was made chairman. The ticket nominated was Zachariah Cook of Raisin, state senator; Prof. E. D. Walker of Adrian, judge of probate; J. K. Johnson of Adrian, sheriff; W. H. Moore of Palmyra, clerk; Jos. Kempton of Woodstock, register; C. P. West of Madison, treasurer.

The congressional convention nominated Mr. Chas. Mosher, of Hillsdale, who received 40 votes to 23 for Capt. E. P. Allen.

Geo. Humphrey, of Palmyra, was nominated in the first district and W. K. Green in the second.

No nomination were made for prosecuting attorney or circuit court commissioners. The matter was left with the county committee for action.

PROHIBITION STATE CONVENTION.

The prohibition state convention last week was a large and enthusiastic gathering. A full state and electoral ticket was put in the field, with David Preston for Governor, and a vigorous canvass of the state will be made. The state ticket placed in nomination was as follows:

Governor—David Preston.
Lieut. Gov.—Alonzo Sherwood.
Sec. of State—Zachariah Chase.
Treasurer—A. B. Cheney.
Auditor Gen.—O. E. Downing.
Com. of Land Office—W. W. Barcuss.
Atty. General—J. H. Tatem.
Supt. of Public Instruction.—J. B. Steere.
Member Board of Education—Isaac W. McKeever.

ELECTORAL TICKET.

At Large—Rev. John Russell, and Prof. Samuel Dickie.
1st Dist.—Frank B. Cressy.
2d " —Guernsey P. Waring.
3rd " —B. W. Warren, Eaton.
4th " —T. A. Granger VanBuren.
5th " —E. A. Richards, Ionia.
6th " —D. H. Stone, Oakland.
7th " —Mark Corrington.
8th " —E. L. Brewer, Shiawassee.
9th " —O. M. Brunson, Osceola.
10th " —Brent Harding, Bay.

The appointment of an elector for the Eleventh District was left to the State Central Committee who were also empowered to fill all vacancies that might occur.

The platform adopted by the convention appears in another column.

The Pioneers.

On Wednesday, Aug. 27th, the annual pioneer meeting of Lenawee Co. was held at Ogden center; a bright and cheerful day, with an excellent band of music, also a choir of singers to give cheer to the large number, over 300, in attendance. At half past ten A. M. the assembly was called to order by the President, F. A. Dewey. A large number joined the society. A few preliminary addresses was made. At noon dinner was in order and the tables were bountifully spread with genuine good cheer for all, and we will venture to say that Ogden never had a more cheerful thanksgiving party. At two o'clock P. M. officers were elected, most of them continued for another year. There was an address by the president, and a very excellent historic account of Ogden by Hon. T. McComb. Hon A. Gilmore addressed the pioneers, also Mr. Allen and several others. With cherished good will to all, the pioneers had a rousing meeting.

Fashion Items.

Hoop earrings are more worn than any other style now in vogue. It is claimed, however, that these "relics of barbarism," in any form, are soon to be numbered among the things that were.

There is a new way of trimming the armholes of dresses. A piece of medium-sized velvet or ribbon goes entirely round, and the two ends which meet on the top of the shoulder are tied in a graceful looped bow. When the sleeve is a long one, a similar trimming is placed just above the elbow and tied to correspond, but with no ends of any length. The band is frequently repeated at the neck, tying behind.

As full bodices are so general, Swiss bodices are likely to come into use again. Very deep ones are more becoming to the figure than narrow ones, and by deep is meant the genuine sort, such as the Swiss peasantry affect. These are made as formerly of velvet, satin, jetted cloth, or corded silk, and the richest and dantiest for evening toilets are made of white or pale tinted satin, hand-painted, with a tiny blossoming vine, which forms a delicate floral bordering to the entire girdle or band.

An old sunshade stripped of its former cover may be easily recovered to match any costume. Take one of the sections removed and cut as much of the new material as was first used when the old sunshade was new; have them stitched together by machine-sewing, and fasten to the frame. A new lining, if required, is as easily made. The work is not difficult, and will pay just now, when the effect of uniformity in dress details, now so studied, requires a change of parasol for time, place and costume. A little ingenuity and finger dexterity combined go almost as far, and sometimes further, in giving finish and elegance to toilet et cetera.

Feather fans are extremely fashionable in evening dress, and the latest styles from Vienna are made of pure downy white plumage. These are much larger than the oval fans formerly carried. An all-white fan is preferred with a white toilet, but in many cases a cluster of crimson roses, a spray of carnations, or any seasonable flower, is added for the evening to give a touch of color to the otherwise colorless toilet. The fans are hung from the waist in chatelaine fashion.

Stylish young ladies have seized upon the pretty little Russian jacket recently introduced by Mme. Peponsy, of Paris, as a favorite novelty very appropriate to the present season. These jaunty little shapes reach only to the belt in front, and end in a short postillion in the back. Beneath the fronts, which part at the neck, is a plaited vest, which also terminates at the waist line. The sleeves are short, with a chic-looking turn-back cuff of lace or passementerie finishing the lower edge, which, upon most of these jackets, reaches the elbow. The richest model yet seen was made of black Lyons velvet with a very handsome border trimming of jet-beaded passementerie, and a vest of crimson silk laid in flat plaits from throat to belt, and snugly fitted. The most dressy model was formed of a dark shade of Neapolitan red velvet, embroidered in a much darker shade of the same color in silk floss, the design outlined with deep colored ruby beads. The vest was of pale pink corded silk arranged and fitted exactly as the crimson vest just described.

Some very stylish dresses for young girls are now being made in plaid and cashmere. They are very much trimmed with ribbon loops and ends, and some have an added trimming of shot tafletas. One pretty little suit of plaid, in blue and chestnut, has a kilted skirt faced up the kilting to the depth of six inches with chestnut and blue shot tafletas. The tunic—a la washerwoman—has the turned-up portion faced to match, and the bodice is of the plaid, with blouse vest of the tafletas. Another dress of gray cashmere, crossed with crimson, has a facing upon the kilts and tunic of crimson serge. Above these skirts is a Russian jacket of the plaid, with plaited waistcoat of the serge ending at the waist and finished by a ribbon belt of crimson satin, clasped with a silver buckle.—N. Y. Evening Post.

An Application of Cerebral Knowledge.

The experiments of Nature and of the physiologist are therefore parallel. The only difference is in the order of the observation. The physiologist cuts out a definite part and observes the result. The pathologist observes the result of Nature's experiment by watching the symptoms of his patient, and after the patient's death he can ascertain the position of the part diseased. Now, if the old theory be true, according to which the brain acts as a whole, and its various parts do not posses distinct mental functions, a limited area of disease in one part may impair the mental powers but will not produce the loss of one function. If, on the contrary, the new theory be true—the one to which the anatomical arrangement and the physiological experiments point—that each part of the brain has its own work to do, a limited area of disease will interfere with the work of the part diseased—will produce a loss or impairment of one function, and will not affect all the powers.

The following incident shows that pathology supports anatomy and physiology, and that the location of functions and memories is no longer a matter of question among scientists:

Not long ago a man was brought into Bellevue Hospital, in this city, suffering from fever, headache, delirium and stupor, which had developed after a blow on the head. In addition to these symptoms, he had a paralysis of the muscles on the back of the fore-arm so that he could not raise his left hand. The general symptoms indicated the presence of an abscess in the brain. To the surgeon, familiar with the anatomy and with the physiological experiments upon animals, the paralysis of the arm muscles indicated that the abscess was situated in the part of the brain whose function it was to raise the hand. He therefore sawed through the skull over the supposed site of the abscess, and, although the hole which he made was only large enough to admit his little finger, the abscess was found lying just beneath it, and was emptied.—M. Allen Starr, M. D., in Popular Science Monthly.

The Borrower.

At this very busy season of the year, when harvest begins before corn and potato cultivation ends, the full measure of meanness of the borrower becomes apparent, and the magnitude of the nuisance which he is stands out in bold relief. For at this season there are few tools and implements which are not in daily demand, and it is an exceptional case if accommodating the borrower does not inconvenience him. In the winter, when tools and machines are mostly idle, it is not so bad; but in the hurry and heat of mid-summer, what is more irritating than to run to the barn or tool-shop in a great hurry for some article, search in vain for it in every conceivable hiding place, and then, going to the house, be told that neighbor Brown borrowed it, and all hands must lie idle until it can be fetched?

There are occasional and there are chronic borrowers. The former is to be excused. The best of us find it necessary to borrow at times. Few can keep every implement and machine, the use of which may become necessary, on the farm or about the barn and house. We are forced to borrow; and in return, to lend to some good neighbor similarly circumstanced is a duty and a pleasure. It would generally be very, and needlessly, expensive to be independent of neighbors in this way. But there is the chronic borrower, who is a never-ceasing torment to all decent people, and whose character is so mean that there is no word to give it a fit expression. He has few or no implements of his own, and does not propose to get any so long as he can practice his imposition upon other people. He considers his depredations upon your tools and implements a right, and considers you mean and niggardly if you do not lend to him, no matter how much doing so may inconvenience you. He is arrogant in his requests. Lending to him is giving to him, for he has nothing to lend you in return; and you would not borrow of him if you could. You bestow charity on an undeserving beggar who does not ask but demands. Of all beggars, the chronic borrower is the meanest.

He is also the most thankless. This he shows by his words; better still by his lack of words, and least of all by his actions. The occasional borrower is pretty apt to return borrowed articles as soon as done with them; but this would be beneath what the chronic borrower considers his dignity. You may assure yourself when you have lent him anything, that when you want to use it again, you will have the felicity of going after it. This is very pleasant at all times, but gives its fullest measure of joy at this season of the year, when time is so precious.

The occasional borrower returns articles in fairly good order, and if anything has been broken he tries to repair the damage. Not so the chronic borrower. The article which you have entrusted to his care, or rather his gross negligence, he treats as if neither wood nor iron could positively be broken. And if the article is broken, what does he care? It is not his, and he does not intend to pay for it; therefore he need have no concern in the matter. When you lent him the article you took your chances, and now you can take your broken implement. When you get it mended he would like to borrow it again.

Thus it is that when you have traveled two miles to this neighbors, you feel that your cup is not quite full on the way. When you survey the wreck of what has cost you money, representing your hard labor, and are calmly told, in a matter-of-course way, that "Jim broke it," you feel that a world without a chronic borrower in it would be near the seventh heaven.

But very likely the kind chronic borrower has saved you all this misery by losing the article instead of breaking it. In this case, you are told that the last seen of it "Willie was playing horse with it in the cattle pasture;" and Willie (eight years old, and of poor and dishonest parentage) is sent out to help you hunt for it in the luxuriant growth of weeds in a ten-acre field. A tantalizing search of half an hour convinces you that it is lost.

I have known families who stole the greater part of their living by "borrowing" from their neighbors. They thought nothing of walking a mile for a pound of coffee. Once in a great while they made a feint of returning an equivalent, shrewdly contrived to be enough, and not a whit more, to keep them secure of a continuance of their pilfering. No matter what they could get, it was acceptable. I remember that on a certain occasion a member of one of these families came to borrow some sugar. It was refused her, and she then asked if she could not get sugar, would we not let her have some coal oil! It was apparent that she had come to borrow something, and she was not particular what it was.

The chronic borrower is always a lazy, shiftless person. The industrious man or woman takes pride in owning what tools are needed, and will borrow only as compelled. Yet it seems strange that the borrower should be lazy, for, all-in-all, borrowing is a costly affair so far as labor is concerned. It is true that the chronic borrower generally saves himself the labor of returning the articles; but the labor of fetching them whenever wanted, if profitably employed, would more than buy them. This, however, is characteristic of a lazy person.

Borrowing is a necessary evil at times, but none the less an evil. Time, temper and money are saved. A grindstone will cost less than the worth of the time going to and coming from your nearest neighbor's, to make use of his. If the person called upon to lend has more than one implement of the kind sought for, he is sure to give you the poorest, old and dull, and you work at a great disadvantage. Nothing short of sudden emergency or disaster will justify you in borrowing a shovel, hoe, ax, fork, or similar article.—Country Gentleman.

—A Prussian General, noted for his severity, was inspecting some military stables. "What do I see there?" he thundered, pointing toward a lot of cobwebs. "Sir," replied a subordinate, whose quick wit saved him, "we keep the cobwebs there purposely, to catch the flies and prevent them from teasing the horses!"

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS

The feeble grow strong when Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is used to promote assimilation of the food and enrich the blood. Indigestion, the chief obstacle to an acquisition of strength by the weak, is an ailment which infallibly succumbs to the action of this peerless corrective. Loss of flesh and appetite, failure to sleep, and growing evidence of premature decay, are speedily counteracted by the great invigorant, which braces up the physical energies and fortifies the constitution against disease. For sale by all Druggists and dealers generally.

A NARROW ESCAPE

Sleep after fatigue, and health after disease, are two of the sweetest experiences known to man. Fourteen years is a long time in which to suffer, yet Mr. Peter Lawler, of Dalton, Mass., had led a miserable life for that period through the presence of stone in the bladder. That he sought in all directions for a cure is an almost superfluous statement. He did obtain temporary relief, but nothing more. Last January he called on Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who said after examination: "Mr. Lawler, you have stone in the bladder. We will first try Dr. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY before risking an operation." A few days later the following letter passed through the Rondout post-office:

DALTON, Mass., February 6.

Dear Dr. Kennedy:—The day after I came home I passed two gravel stones, and am doing nicely now. PETER LAWLER.

Dr. Kennedy now has the stones at his office, and they are sufficiently formidable to justify the claim that Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is the leading specific for stone in the bladder. In this letter Mr. Lawler mentions that Favorite Remedy also cured him of rheumatism. The subjoined certificate tells its own story.

OLD BERKSHIRE MILLS,
DALTON, Mass., April 27, 1882.

Mr. Peter Lawler has been a resident of this town for the past seventeen years, and in our employ for fifteen years, and in all these years he has been a good and respected citizen of the town and community. He has had some chronic disease to our knowledge for most of the time, but now claims to be, and is, in apparent good health. CHAS. O. BROWN, President.

DALTON, Mass., June 9, 1884.

Dr. Kennedy—Dear Friend:—Thinking you might like to hear again from an old patient, I am going to write you. It is now three and a half years since first I went to see you. As I told you then I was troubled with kidney disease for about fifteen years, and had seven of the best doctors to be found; but I received only temporary relief until I visited you and commenced taking your "Favorite Remedy." I continue taking the Remedy according to your directions, and now consider myself a well man. Very gratefully yours, PETER LAWLER.

Our letter of April 27, 1882, holds good as far as Mr. Lawler's testimony is concerned regarding his health. CHAS. O. BROWN.

The skating rink was opened to the public on Thursday evening last. The Manchester band was in attendance, a large crowd was on hand notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, and J. A. Hayton the champion roller skater, entertained the spectators by his admirable skating. The rink was well patronized on both Friday and Saturday evenings and on Saturday afternoon. The interior of the building presents a very tasty appearance and it is large enough to accommodate all the crowds that may come. Nestell & Cash, the proprietors, are enterprising young men, and they propose to run a first class place of amusement. The rink will be open for the present on Tuesdays Thursdays and Saturdays, both afternoon and evening. We believe our young people will reward their enterprise by returning them a generous patronage.

School directors should be very prompt in making their annual reports to the township clerk before the second Monday in September, or they may loose their portion of the public school money.

Hank Jones' duties as agent of the United States Express has increased to that degree that it became necessary for him to have help, so on Monday last he secured the services of Miss Dena Heesen as assistant.

The graduating class of the High School for the year just opening consists of ten members, as follows:—Frank Hall, Lyster Dewey, Will Hayden, Fred Hillman, Bert McNair, Nellie Reynolds, Rose Hendershot, Mabel Hayden, Maggie Clarkson, May Avery.

The first political banner unfurled to the breeze in Tecumseh this year was stretched over Brown street in front of the residence of J. T. Daglish. It is very neatly painted and bears the names of Butler & West.—Mr. Daglish is bound to let the world know where he stands.

On Friday, Sept. 5th, there will be a cheap excursion from Battle Creek and intermediate stations to Detroit and return, over the Michigan & Ohio and Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific Railroads. This excursion affords an opportunity to witness the great double wrestling contest at Recreation Park between H. M. Dufur and J. J. Benjamin, collar and elbow, for the championship belt of the world and $1,000, and Col. J. H. McLaughlin and Geo. W. Flagg, mixed wrestling, for the championship belt of the world and $1,000. Train leaves Tecumseh at 9:32 A. M.; returning leaves Detroit at 7 P. M., standard time, from 12th street depot. The train will be under the charge of that efficient excursion manager, G. W. Lewis, who will do all in his power to make the trip a pleasant one.

The St. John & Daniels men of Adrian have organized a lively campaign club. Rev. A. Crane is chairman and F. A. Smiley secretary.

Prof. H. C. Wilson has been elected Secretary of the County Board of School Examiners. He goes back to Blissfield this year as Superintendent of Schools.

E. B. Wood is on the sick list. Nothing serious, we understand, but indisposition caused by over work and hot weather. We presume he will soon be about again.

Democratic candidates are plentiful since the Republican county convention. The impression has evidently gone abroad that the Republican ticket can be beaten.

The addition to Temple's planing mill is now completed and the Tecumseh Lumber Company is putting in a lot of new machinery which will greatly increase their facilities for doing first-class work.

We have an unusual large grist of Council Proceedings this week. Owing to the sickness of Recorder Schoolcraft the publication of the proceedings during the past month has been unavoidably delayed.

The first Teachers' Examination for the current school year will be held at Dean's opera house, in Adrian, on Saturday next, Sept. 6th. Physiology will then be required in addition to the other branches for a third grade certificate.

The Star Shoe Company have purchased the Marsden stock of boots and shoes and added a large stock lately bought at mortgage sale at Cleveland, Ohio. Look out for bargains. We call attention to their business announcement elsewhere.

Sheriff Bidwell was in town Saturday. His official term will close on the 31st day of December, and on the first day of January he will occupy his old home in Tecumseh. The county will lose a good sheriff, but Tecumseh will gain a good citizen by the change.

We notice the nomination for County Register of Deeds made by the Prohibitionists falls to Mr. A. J. Kempton, of Addison. Mr. K. is a young man of marked ability, both as a speaker and writer. The county can do worse than elect him to the office named.

A special train of one car and locomotive went up the branch last Tuesday. It contained the ninth fraction of one passenger, that is to say, one tailor. He was engaged in measuring the employees of the road, preparatory to making the new uniforms soon to be adopted.

Bro. Field has no reason to regret his removal to Tecumseh. In addition to an increase of business his wife presented him with a fine girl baby last Thursday. All the printers in Tecumseh, regardless of sex or previous condition, extend their hearty congratulations.

As the excursion train on the M. & O. last Thursday morning was pulling out for Devil's Lake, Mrs. Fred Knight attempted to board the moving train, but slipped and fell between the cars. Dr. L. G. North, who happened to be near, succeeded in pulling her off the track just as the wheels got to her.

A. L. Brewer and Henry Heesen are attending the Iowa state fair this week, and Hudson Conkling is taking in the Ohio fair at Columbus, exhibiting their new Tiffany Tile Machine. They have also engaged space at the Michigan state fair at Kalamazoo. Their machines carry off the blue ribbon wherever shown.

W. H. Passmore has gone north for a few weeks recreation. During his absence the Lilley House is under the management of Capt. Foster, and it is safe to say the house will suffer no detriment under his careful hand. The Captain is a great favorite among traveling men, and much of the popularity of the House is due to the fact of his connection with it.

Our marriage notices chronicle the wedding of Mr. Charles Blanchard and Minnie B. daughter of Hon. John J. Adam, of this village, which took place at Chicago on the 27th ult. The friends of the contracting parties here in Tecumseh extend their congratulation. They began housekeeping the morning after their marriage and expect to make Chicago their future home.

N. M. Sutton has purchased of John J. Adam his Opera House stock. This purchase makes Mr. Sutton the owner of over three-fourths of the entire stock, and the entire management is now in his hands. He has engaged some fine companies already and intends to make a season of amusements this winter worthy of the conveniences the Opera House affords, and worthy of the united and liberal patronage of this community. Success to him.

After a lingering illness of several months, Rufus R. Hall died yesterday afternoon about four o'clock.

Geo. S. Tiffany has placed plate glass windows in his residence, corner Chicago and Oneida streets.

Mrs. S. W. Temple was called to Angola Ind. yesterday morning on account of sudden illness of her mother, Mrs. S. M. Shiel.

We are in receipt of a complimentary ticket to the Sixth annual fair of the Western Mich. Society to be held at Grand Rapids, Sept. 22d to 26th inclusive.

The first number of the Michigan Prohibitionist is at hand. It is a neatly printed, well edited sheet, and will doubtless do a good work in promoting the cause of the Union party.

There will be preaching on Sunday Sept. 7th, on the Big Prairie at I. S. Osborn's new barn at 2:30 P. M., by Rev. Peter Sharp. Subject, Origin of Sin. A general invitation is extended to all.

Several Tecumseh people went to Toledo last Tuesday to hear St. John speak. He was not there in the afternoon but spoke in the evening. Those who stayed over to hear him did not regret it. They were much elated with the man and with his speech. The towns on the M. & O. were all represented at the meeting

Geo. P. Pardington is in town for a few weeks, the guest of S. W. Anderson. George is looking much better than when he left Tecumseh. His father, Rev. R. S. Pardington, will arrive here on the 12th inst., and will remain a few days on his western trip. He will probably occupy the pulpit of the M. E. Church on Sunday evening, the 14th inst.

The Petersburg people are trying to organize a stock company and lease twelve acres of ground for a ten year's term, for air purposes, shares to sell at $5.00, and the company to be called "The Union Fair Company," of Petersburg. They want to raise money enough to fence the grounds and put up a building in which to hold their fair this fall.

On September 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12, 1884, the Michigan and Ohio Railroad will sell excursion tickets from all stations at which they have agents to Toledo and return, for one fare for the round trip, with return limit of Sept. 13th, 1884, to enable all to visit Toledo and attend the Tri-State Fare, which will be held on the dates named above. Property for the exhibition at this Fare will be carried at the regular rates to Toledo, and upon presenting freight bills and a certificate from the Fair Association (stating that the property has been on exhibition, and not changed hands) to the freight agent at Toledo, it will be returned free. The above applies to all kinds of property for exhibition, except Speed and Race Horses, upon which the regular rates will be charged both ways.

BASE BALL.

The Tecumseh's Play their Last Game this Season with the Cass of Detroit and get Scooped.

The admirers of the National game in Tecumseh probably witnessed the last game this season at Base Ball park last Friday, when the Cass club of Detroit (ably assisted by the umpire) beat the Tecumseh's seven to two. We presume many sincerely hope it was the last. The audience and the umpire, who was from Detroit, seemed to disagree on almost every decision made by the latter. The crowd should remember that the umpire was young at the business and probably got a little rattled. At any rate he seemed to delight in calling strikes on the home nine whenever any of them stepped up to the plate to bat, whether the ball was pitched over the base or over the striker's head.

The game was called at 3:30 P. M. with Cass at bat. Adams, the first man to bat, was given his base on balls and got to second on wild throw by Freeman. Buskinburger struck out. Wright got to first, and also Pelouze who sent Wright to second and Adams to third, thus filling the bases. All three of them died on bases, as Campau and Weiss both struck out. The Tecumseh's then came to bat. Bostwick and Heidenrich both got out at first and Chapman struck out, or rather the umpire called him out, making a whitewash for both sides.

In the second innings Lawrence was given first on six balls, and got in on a pass ball by Faatz. Beaubian also waited until the umpire had obligingly called six balls and took first base. Adams made a safe hit and got to first. Then Wright thought it would be only right to bring them in, which he accordingly did by making a nice two-base hit, and made the score stand three to nothing in their favor. Kelly then came in and made a base hit and got to second and third on a pass ball by Catcher, and was brought home by McKinney.

The next innings was a goose-egg for both sides. In the fourth innings Chapman got to first base on an error by first baseman and came home on muffed ball by second baseman, making the score three and two in favor of the visitors.

The fifth and eighth innings the Cass scored two tallies each innings.

Monday the law was out on partridges, or ruffled grouse, wood duck, teal duck, mallard duck, or grey duck, and they can be killed until Jan. 1st. Prairie chickens can also be shot in the months of Sept. and Oct.

A big crowd went to the S. S. picnic at Devil's Lake last Thursday, and a more drenched lot of young ones than they were on their return one seldom sees. If any thing will bring a rain in this latitude it is a S. S. picnic. The farmers owe a debt of gratitude to the children for this rainy day. The children can congratulate themselves on the fact that the rain which soaked their dinner baskets was worth millions upon the crops.

The fall season at the Opera House was most auspiciously opened last Monday evening with Sid Smith in "Ranch 10". This is one of the best plays that has ever been put on the boards in Tecumseh, and it was well presented on Monday evening. Ollie Hunt's orchestra furnished the music, which is enough to say on that point. Sid Smith as "The Judge" is immense. He is exactly adapted to that role. As theatrical successes the court scene and the fire scene have never been surpassed in this village. If the Judge will give us another call at some future time we will guarantee him a rousing house.

ANNUAL SCHOOL MEETING.

The regular annual school meeting of this district convened at the Central Building on Monday evening last. There was a good attendance of tax payers present, and the meeting possessed some of the old time enthusiasm which formerly characterized the school meetings of this district. David McNair, the Moderator of the Board, presided and the first business presented was the reading of the minutes of the last annual meeting. The annual report of the Board, was then presented which is given below.

The report was accepted and adopted with no dissent, and the meeting then proceeded to the election of two trustees in place of Lucius Lilley and S. C. Stacy, whose terms expired. An informal ballot was first ordered for a successor to Mr. Lilley. A formal ballot followed which resulted in the election of O. P. Bills, by a good majority. Two ballots—an informal and a formal ballot—were then taken for a successor to S. C. Stacy. A. W. Mills having received a large majority of the votes cast was declared duly elected.

A resolution was presented by Judge Stacy to raise $100 additional tax for the purchase of apparatus. An amendment was offered making the amount $150 and the amendment was adopted. Prof. Hammond has needed additional apparatus for some time, and he will doubtless appreciate the liberal action of the meeting in voting an appropriation for that purpose. The new school year opens very auspiciously. About forty non-resident pupils entered school last Monday, which is considerably in excess of the number last year. There are 612 scholars of school age in the district, being 77 more than last year.

After passing a vote instructing the Board to trim the trees at the Central Building, the meeting adjourned.

The Presbyterian and Methodist churches will unite in a meeting next Sunday evening, in the interest of the American Bible Society. Short addresses will be given by the pastors and others. A collection will be taken for the benefit of the Bible Society fund. The services will be held in the Methodist Church at 7:30 P. M.

Prof. Samuel Dickie, who was chairman of the National Prohibition convention that nominated John P. St John for President, will address the people at Tecumseh, in the Opera House on Saturday, Sept. 13th, at 8 P. M. Also in the Clinton town hall, that evening at 8 P. M. Everybody should make it a point to hear him.

There will be a gospel temperance rally of one week at the Opera House, beginning on Sunday next, Sept. 7th, at three o'clock P. M. The meetings will be conducted by James M. Dunn of Sidney, Ohio. Let there be a grand rally of temperance workers. Admission free. Singers are requested to bring their gospel hymns and take front seats.

John J. White of Clinton, who has been confined to the house by sickness is out again. He was in town this morning and made the HERALD a brief call. Mr. White had a severe attack of peritonitis, and his condition was considered critical for several weeks, but he finally weathered the storm. He expects to attend to his usual business again now, at his merchant tailoring shop in Clinton.

Last evening at the residence of the bride, in this village occured the marriage of Dr. B. R. House and Miss Jennie Boyd. Dr. House has a host of friends in this community who will tender him their best wishes and who will honor the bride for the good judgment, displayed in her choice. The Doctor needs a helpmate, and he displays wisdom in his selection. That the union will prove a happy one is the belief of all who know the parties. Bon voyage.

The architect of the State column of the Detroit Evening News is responsible for the following:

Tecumseh is the most charming village that adorns the banks of the river Raisin. It is situated in the very heart of Michigan's garden of Eden—Lenawee county. It is a dangerous rival of its less attractive sister, Adrian, who is always subject to spasms whenever the old Indian chief's fair name-sake indulges in any new and successful enterprise, or extends an invitation to the Lenawee county agricultural society to come over and hold its fair where the streets are broad and level, and grand stands never fall. Tecumseh has the best flouring mills in the state, which have exported large quantities of flour to Ireland for several years, and the finest high school of any village of its population. Its opera house boasts of the largest stage outside of Detroit. Its churches are built of brick, nicely furnished with upholstery and pipe organs, while St. Peter's episcopal is the first church built in the state outside of Detroit. The principal articles of manufacture are tile machines, chairs, barrels, hosiery, farming implements, cigars, millinery and gossip croquets. It has two weekly papers, one monthly church organ and several more promiscuous papers waiting exchange courtesies with Col. Fitzsimmons. It has three hotels, two railroads, two banks—sound ones with plenty of capital—a fire department, water works, two public parks, a soldiers' monument, five drug stores and seven saloons and the largest and most complete dry goods house south of Jackson. Strangers always remark upon the beauty of the streets, the surplus of ladies from 25 to 60 years eligible for marriage, and the hungry looking set of old bachelors from 30 to 70 who have attained that age in life when they can almost take of themselves. Building is increasing rapidly, and when the town is lighted by gas and paved with asphalt it is feared the Raisin will overflow its banks with Adrian's tears of envy.

Quick Relief!

When a man has suffered from Rheumatism only a little while, and is relieved from his pain, he is happy and delighted. But suppose he has Suffered for more than a third of a century.

Alvin Grim, of Wale, Iowa, writes: "Athlophoros has helped me much. The 1st bottle gave me almost ease. But as the large one is all gone, and I feel as well as I do for I have been troubled for thirty-five years with Rheumatism."

Mrs. A. B. Baker, of Chicago,

Had rheumatic pains in her back for fifteen years, and Mr. Baker had been the victim of Rheumatism until his head was drawn down over his right shoulder. Mr. Baker writes:

"But I bottle of Athlophoros made me as good as new. My wife has taken two bottles and has not complained of her back since. Scarcely her back never was a day from all, and she as it has been since she has taken Athlophoros."

There are many people who think that because they have suffered so long, and have tried so many medicines in vain, they must "suffer on their three score years." But you see what Athlophoros has done.

However Old your Case;
However Severe your Pains;
However Great your Disappointments,

Try Athlophoros

If you cannot get Athlophoros of your druggist, we will send it, carriage paid, on receipt of regular price—one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it from your druggist, but if he has not it and will be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us as directed.

HALL'S Vegetable Sicilian HAIR RENEWER

was the first preparation perfectly adapted to cure diseases of the scalp, and the most successful restorer of faded or gray hair to its natural color, growth, and original beauty. It has had many imitators, but none have fully met all the requirements needful for the proper treatment of the hair and scalp. HALL'S HAIR RENEWER has steadily grown in favor, and spread its fame and its influence to every quarter of the globe. Its unrivalled success can be attributed to but one cause, the entire fulfilment of its promises.

The proprietors have often been surprised at the receipt of orders from remote countries, where they had never made an effort for its introduction.

The use for a short time of HALL'S HAIR RENEWER wonderfully improves the personal appearance. It cleanses the scalp from all impurities, cures all humors, fever, and dryness, and thus prevents baldness. It stimulates the weakened glands, and enables them to push forward a new and vigorous growth. The effects of this article are not transient, like those of alcoholic preparations, but remain a long time, which makes its use a matter of economy.

BUCKINGHAM'S DYE FOR THE WHISKERS

Will change the beard to a natural brown, or black, as desired. It produces a permanent color that will not wash away. Consisting of a single preparation, it is applied without trouble.

Literature in the South.

A pound of the best rice in the New York market sells for eight cents. It has a pearly, transparent grain, a beautiful polish and is relished by very few who use it every day. At a cheap article of food are among the laboring classes required to place it before them in this perfect state. As an article of food it is second alone to wheat, and is the grand natural cereal upon which at least four hundred millions, or nearly one-third of mankind, mainly subsist.

Almost needless areas of it are raised in India and China, the various charming seaside gardens. On the Indian Ocean, on ground no less than four times the area of London, but the finest is raised in our own States of North and South Carolina and Georgia, where those vast expanses of low-lying swampy land and rich vegetable soils render its cultivation comparatively easy and profitable.

The great fields lying low along the river banks are divided into sections, and trunnels and canals carry the water to any part of the field at a moment's notice, by which they are flooded whenever desired. The rice is frequently sown on the water-covered soil, where it quickly germinates, covering the fields with a beautiful delicate green grassy carpet, which turns a lighter and yellower tinge as it ripens.

As most of the fields have been reclaimed from the rivers near which they lie, they are certainly subject to sudden overflows, the utmost vigilance being required to guard against this enemy, which often in one night ruins the hopes of months of labor. So far the larger plantations cover two and three hundred acres, and employ several hundred men, women and children.

From 172 to 179 tons of rice from the Carolinas was 14,000 tons, for 1880 alone, 9,000 barrels were shipped. At the outbreak of the war one million acres were under cultivation in South Carolina alone. In 1861 the production was 187,062,062 pounds, but the war almost ruined this important industry, and in 1870 the combined production of the two Carolinas, Louisiana and Georgia was reduced to 70,000 pounds. A steady improvement, however, toward the old time prosperity is now seen by comparing the productions of later years with that of 1876, when it had dwindled to the comparatively insignificant amount of 57,000,000 pounds.

Very few besides Chinese and negroes can be kept on the plantations as workers, and owing to the inherently trying nature of the climate in summer, with its accompanying marsh fevers, the question of labor supply is a very serious one to the planters. But while the old-fashioned methods of cutting, sowing, and transporting still prevail, in most plantations numerous labor-saving machines and improvements have been introduced with marked success in the various milling processes.

Many large mills are to be seen on the low shores of the Mississippi, in the vicinity of New Orleans, but those at Charleston and Savannah are perhaps the largest and most complete in their appointments. Many are lofty buildings of brick or iron, their many stories crowded with the latest improved machinery for hulling, dusting, cleaning, burnishing, and packing the grain ready for shipment. Situated at the water's edge, their tall chimneys pouring forth heavy columns of smoke, their derricks lifting the rough grain from the decks of the river craft, while the elevators, with long-armed spouts, dip deep into and fill the great holds of seagoing steamers with milled grain, the clouds of drifting half dust, the whir of machinery, and hurrying of boats and tugs all present a most charming picture, and unmistakably indicate the rapid revival of one of the most valuable of our Southern industries.—Harper's Weekly.

You Can't Afford It.

You can not afford to throw away or waste wood ashes; to expose manure to sunshine and rain; grow weeds, haul manure; raise inferior fruit; keep poor, unremunerative stock; neglect your tools and utensils; use poor seed; get in green hay; have dilapidated, broken-down fences; let boards and nails get out of place; allow the milk to be exposed to dirt and vile odors; use impure water; neglect your personal appearance; always look sour; make home miserable; live on pork twelve months in the year; go without plenty of fruits and vegetables for family use; let your neighbors prepare better produce for market than yourself; work sixteen hours a day and sleep eight; neglect mental culture; neglect raising roots for stock; be cruel to the live stock; slight animals in sickness; farm without a profit-and-loss account; think you are smarter than your neighbors; mortgage your farm; spend five cents a day for tobacco, and do without an agricultural paper; be ignorant of the topics of the day; let insects eat your fruit and vegetables without making a prompt, practical protest; half feed your stock; run your farm without using oil to make things run smoothly; allow decaying organic matter to remain in the cellar; neglect underdraining when necessary; mow twenty acres with a scythe when it can be mowed in one-eighth the time with a machine; neglect thorough cultivation; keep the pigs shut up when they can just as well be pastured; have a filthy, objectionable door yard; let this year's planting of strawberry plants blossom and mature fruit; keep cows, but not a milk record; go without a good fruit garden and orchard; neglect sheep culture; expose the live stock to the burning sun and midsummer's heat; do without a few grapevines; expect to gather figs of thistles or to let others think for you.—Ohio Farmer.

—Two negro women of Concordia Parish, Louisiana, recently fought a duel, the one having a revolver and the other a shot-gun. It was believed, however, that both antagonists shut their eyes during the firing, as neither was hit.—N. O. Times.

—The widow of the great novelist, W. M. Thackeray, is hopelessly deranged, and has been cared for by one of her husband's friends for years.

—Joel T. Hart's remains are to be brought home to Kentucky from Italy. Mr. Hart was called by the late Hiram Powers "the greatest sculptor of the world."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

—A company has been formed with a capital of $80,000 to publish an American edition of the London Illustrated News, at ten cents a copy. The paper will be revised and edited, and a large amount of new matter relating particularly to American affairs, will be added.

—At a recent literary party in London Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Wilde made their first formal appearance in London society, the bride of the esthete being attired in an utterly utter gown of white satin, with huge sleeves, a mediæval collar, a girdle of golden filigree, and a chaplet of real white lilies round the head.

—Tyson, who owns or controls most of the hotel news stands in New York, began his career as a barefooted news boy in the streets of New York, and to his credit be it said he is rather proud than otherwise of his small beginnings. To-day he is worth about $[illegible], and he has one of the handsomest country seats on the Sound.—N. Y. Sun.

—The editor of a London juvenile publication, especially devoted to little girls, offered a prize "for the best selection of a hundred famous women." He received no fewer than 4,366 replies. These weighed close upon a ton. The total number of sheets of paper used was about 292,000. These, we are told, if laid flat on the top of one another would form a pile seventy-seven feet high.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

—Mr. Gladstone's career as Prime Minister of England has covered a period of over nine years. Lord Palmerston was not as long in office as Mr. Gladstone. Two statesmen only during the last hundred years have governed the English people for a longer period than Mr. Gladstone. One of these was William Pitt, who held the office for eighteen years and ten months; the other was Lord Liverpool, whose period was fourteen years and ten months.

—"Here, prisoner, stand up there and give an account of yourself," said a magistrate to a man who had been brought before him for drunkenness. The prisoner slowly arose, and steadying himself with great effort, responded: "Your honor, how can you expect an account from a man who has lost his balance?"—N. Y. Ledger.

—Sweet Innocence.—"Ma, is it wrong to kiss a man you are not engaged to?" Ma.—"Certainly, my dear, very wrong." "There now, that's just what I told them." "Told whom?" "Why, Dick and Jack, and Tom and Charlie, and Arthur and Will, and Bob and Al, and Sam and Gus, and——" But ma had fainted.—Philadelphia Call.

—"When Jennie Meets Me at the Gate," is the title and burden of a new song. If the night is clear, When the Stars are Twinkling, Love, keep your weather eye out for the old man, say about the time Our Grandfather's clock strikes ten, for he may be Comin' Thro' the Rye from the village store with Towser in which case you had better get Over the Garden Wall, while she goes in and Pulls Down the Blinds to make pa believe she said her little Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep at nine o'clock.—Peck's Sun.

—Last Decoration Day, a member of a school committee in Auburn, Me., asked a class of girls and boys what Decoration Day was for. "To decorate the soldiers' graves," said several in reply. "Why should they decorate the soldiers graves any more than yours or mine?" There was a long silence. One little fellow in the further corner of the room finally put up his hand. The visitor asked him to speak. The boy said: "If you please, sir, I think it is because they are dead and we ain't."—Golden Days.

—"For ten years past," said the newboard, "my habits have been regular as clock-work. I rose on the stroke of six; half an hour later I sat down to breakfast; at seven I was at work; dined at twelve, ate supper at six, and was in bed at 9:30; ate only hearty food, and hadn't a sick day in all that time." "Dear me," said the Deacon, in sympathetic tones, "and what were you in for?" And in the awful silence that followed you could hear the hash grate its teeth.—Burdette, in Brooklyn Eagle.

Passing the Toothpick.

The fastidious denizen of the city who engages board for the summer in the country sometimes meets with strange experiences. A writer tells of a friend of his who was recreating at a farm house in the Catskills, the owner of which regarded the toothpick an indispensable article after dinner. Thinking economy in all things is necessary to accumulate a fortune, he imagined that the boarders were possibly not provided with toothpicks, and called out to his son at dinner: "Johnnie, pass the toothpick." The boy produced the called for article and proceeded to make the best possible use of it himself, and when he had finished with it, offered it to the person next to him. It is needless to say the toothpick went no further.—N. Y. Mail.

DR. A. FRANK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with it speaks, stamps it at once as the greatest curative of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Diseases of Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame, every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence is based on the testimony we have received during the last 40 years of the numerous cures effected by its use. If we have from any part of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have never used this Ointment, to freely state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If, but one in a hundred would do this, we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Only 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

The Fifth Annual Report of the Director to the Secretary of the Interior Amount of Work Done.

The Public Debt Statement—Reduction During the Month of August of $8,542,852—Custom Receipts for the Month.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

WASHINGTON, September 2.—Major Powell, Director of the Geological Survey, has submitted his fifth annual report to the Secretary of the Interior. It shows that on a whole, more work has been done than during the preceeding year. The districts in which the work has been most expanded are the North and South Atlantic, while in the South Pacific and great basin districts the work has been contracted.

In the North Atlantic district the work of preparing a topographical map of New England is progressing favorably the State of Massachusetts having co-operated with the survey and appropriated $40,000 for that purpose.

In the South Atlantic division about 19,750 square miles have been surveyed. In the Rocky Mountain division, a map has been completed of the Elk Mountain district. The survey of the Yellow Stone Park has been continued with excellent results.

In the Paleontologic division of the report mention is made of the discovery of a remarkable order of birds, furnished with teeth; also an extinct reptile order, the Sauropoda, several species of which are of gigantic size. These discoveries are believed to be of great value to science.

PUBLIC DEBT STATEMENT.

The debt statement issued from the Treasury Department yesterday, shows a reduction in the public debt during the month of August of $8,542,852. The total debt now, less cash in the treasury is $1,216,526,400 is interest bearing debt. The total cash in treasury is $414,541,952, against which there are current liabilities amounting to $273,469,411, leaving an available cash balance of $141,072,541. The Treasurer's statement shows about $122,000,000 in gold and $121,000,000 in silver certificates outstanding with $163,000,000 gold coin, $51,000,000 gold bullion and about 141,000,000 standard silver dollars in the treasury vaults.

The customs receipts for August were $18,413,708, and internal revenue receipts were $9,506,307 against $18,585,147 and $9,845,889 respectively in August, 1883. While the receipts from miscellaneous sources were $3,446,492 or three-quarters of a million more than in August, 1883.

LABOR'S DAY.

The Laboring Men of New York in Line 20,000 Strong.

NEW YORK, September 2.—Broadway was lined yesterday morning from City Hall to Fourteenth street with people assembled to witness the labor parade. The first division of the parade was composed of printers, building trades union, and bricklayers unions. The second division was made up of cigarmakers and workmen from the furniture and clothing trades. The third division was comprised of butchers, scoopers, and other trades unions. The fourth division was made up of numbers of working men not attached to any organization who had asked permission to the join procession. For weeks the various trades unions have been making untiring efforts to make the parade a success and their labor has not been wasted. It had been anticipated that 20,000 men would form in the lines. This number was fully reached if not exceeded. Both those who paraded and the thousands of spectators were dressed in holiday attire. Each body of men in the procession wore some distinctive badge, cap, apron, or other symbol of their trade to give a uniform appearance. Many of the trades gave illustrations of their occupation. The butchers intended to illustrate their trade by killing innumerable cattle as they went along the streets, but Henry Bergh with a squad of police interfered with that portion of the programme. At Printing House Square the procession was reviewed by Patrick Ford, Henry George, John Swinton, Louis F. Post and a number of others. After the procession had been dismissed the men attended in large numbers the picnics given in honor of the holiday.

Will Change the Place of Meeting.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., September 2.—Major William H. Warner, Chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, arrived here yesterday morning. He will call the Committee together this morning to take into consideration the advisability of removing the State Convention from Moberly. Numerous petitions have been sent to the Chairman asking him to change the place of meeting on account of the Moberly Fair Association inviting Frank James to exhibit his two war horses at the fair, which is to be held at Moberly at the same time as the convention. The general belief entertained is that the committee will order the convention to be held in this city.

Man Drowned.

TOLEDO, September 2.—Sunday evening, Martin Fay, went fishing near Elevator No. 4. He by some means lost a portion of his bait, and while in the act of leaning over the side of the boat to recover it, lost his balance, was precipitated into the water, and taking violent cramps, sank before assistance could arrive. After an hour's search the police found his body. This is a very sad case indeed, as the man was in poor circumstances and leaves a wife and five children.

Absconded With the Firm's Money.

BOSTON, Mass., September 2.—Charles Blaine, aged twenty-two, for ten months chief clerk of the Mechanic's Iron Foundry, Boston Highlands, has absconded with several thousand dollars of the companies money. He lived with his widowed mother and was a prominent member of the Y. M. C. A., and neither drank nor used tobacco.

Railway Mail Service Convention.

BUFFALO, September 2.—The United States Railway Mail Service Mutual Benefit Association holds its tenth annual convention in this city, beginning to-day and continuing for four days. A reception will be tendered the visiting delegates at the Genessee House, which will be their head quarters during the meeting.

A Whiskey Pool.

CINCINNATI, September 2.—The agreement establishing a whiskey pool went into effect yesterday morning. The running capacity of the pool will be 57,000 bushels of grain per day, and no distillery can go beyond forty per cent. of its capacity.

AUSTRIAN FLAG.

Letter From Secretary of State Frelinghuysen in Regard to the Action of the Chief of Police of Pittsburgh in Ordering the Removal of the Flag on the Emperor's Birthday.

PITTSBURGH, September 2.—Governor Pattison yesterday forwarded to Mayor Fulton, of this city, a copy of a letter from Secretary of State Frelinghuysen regarding the recent action of Chief of Police Braun, of Pittsburgh, in ordering the Austro-Hungarian Consul to take down the Austrian flag which had been hung out in front of the Consulate in honor of the Emperor's birthday, about two weeks ago. Chief Braun based his action on a city ordinance prohibiting swinging signs, considering that the flagstaff, with flag attached, came under this head. Consul Schamberg refused to take down the flag; Chief Braun then made information against Mr. Schamberg for violating the ordinance, but as Schamberg stood firm, insisting on his right as Consul to display the flag, and threatened to make it a national issue, Mr. Braun did not press the matter. The flag was not removed nor was Schamberg arrested.

Secretary Frelinghuysen's letter to Governor Pattison recites that the Baron Schaefer, the Austrian Minister, has applied to the State Department for interference, after quoting the law showing that Schamberg had a right to hang out the flag. The Secretary requests that the Governor will bring the subject to the early attention of the superior municipal authority of the city of Pittsburgh, advising the Mayor that any proceedings which may have been instituted by the Chief of Police against the Consul should be at once dismissed without any cost or charge to that gentleman and at the same time that a courteous and fitting explanation be made to him.

Mayor Fulton was interviewed last night and said that he was out of the city at the time the flag was ordered down, and would take no steps towards replying until he had legal advice.

Arrested for Poisoning Race Horses.

ST. LOUIS, September 2.—A horse jockey named Thomas P. Redmond, alias Texas Jack, was arrested yesterday morning, charged with poisoning horses at the races. It appears that several horses, whose chances for winning were deemed good, were dosed with laudanum and other poisonous drugs, and thus incapacitated from winning. Several parties have testified that Redmond employed, or sought to employ them to dose horses likely to win. There is great excitement among racing men, and the humane society have taken the matter in hand. Mr. Bryant, owner of "Lady of the Lake," states that Redmond approached his stable man, Whalen, with an offer to give poison to the horse. Whalen appeared to accept the proposition, but straightway notified his employer. It is said Redmond has been expelled from the race track at New Orleans.

Arrested for Obtaining Money Under False Pretences.

MONTREAL, Quebec, September 2.—Harold C. DeWolf, son of Dr. De Wolf, of New York, was arrested here yesterday morning charged with obtaining money under false pretences from W. C. Gale, manager of the Equitable Life Assurance Company. De Wolf has been living luxuriantly at the Windsor Hotel with Bebe Vining, the actress, whom he recently married. Mr. Gale cashed checks for him amounting to $3,500, which are said to be worthless. His father, on being communicated with, has telegraphed that he has no money for an insane son or his deluded victims. The doctor was strongly opposed to his son's marrying Miss Vining.

Terribly Injured in a Runaway.

DOVER, N. H., September 2.—At Salmon Falls Sunday evening, Jeremiah McNamara, Mrs. J. O. Wentworth, Miss Ella Knowlton and Mrs. Herbert Hamilton were going to the residence of James M. Brown, whose only daughter is dead, when the carriage capsized and the horse ran away, dragging the carriage for some distance. All the occupants were terribly injured. McNamara's shoulder blade was broken, Miss Knowlton received bad gashes in the head and body, Mrs. Wentworth and Mrs. Hamilton were cut severely.

Two Little Girls Outraged and Murdered.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., September 1.—Near Flag Springs, Andrew County, Sunday evening, two little girls, aged seven and nine, were brutally outraged and then murdered by unknown men while passing through some woods. One was disembowled and shot and the other's throat was cut. When this was learned great excitement prevailed in the vicinity, and searchers started out to lynch the men if they could find them.

Arrested for Embezzlement.

MILFORD, Mass., September 2.—Atrask Woodbury, aged twenty, ticket seller at the Milford, Franklin & Providence Railroad station, mysteriously disappeared some months ago. The cause was unknown until Saturday last, when he was arrested and held in $2,000 for the Grand Jury on a charge of embezzling $2,800 from the company. Woodbury comes of a good family, but is very wild and has been rescued from many bad scrapes by friends.

Fastest Skating on Record.

BAR HARBOR, Me., September 2.—Edward Whitmore, of Bar Harbor, skated five miles yesterday at the Casino, Bar Harbor against Kenneth A. Skinner, of Boston, the champion roller-skater of America. Whitmore won in seventeen minutes and fifty-eight seconds, the fastest time ever made. Whitmore is only about seventeen years of age.

Heavy Failures.

NEW YORK, September 2.—Dessar, Wise & Co., wholesale dealers in clothing at 557 Broadway, announced their failure yesterday. Their liabilities are reported at about $300,000 but no definite idea of the assets has yet been ascertained. C. C. Russell & Co., well-known bankers of Zanesville Ohio, have also suspended.

Convention of Deaf Mutes.

PERU, Ind., September 2.—A convention of the Deaf Mutes of the West is in progress on the Fair Grounds here. Revs John Chamberlain, of New York, and A. W. Mann, of Cleveland, Ohio, are the principal visitors from abroad.

The Voice of the People.

The people, as a whole, seldom make mistakes, and the unanimous voice of praise which comes from those who have used Hood's Sarsaparilla, fully justifies the claims of the proprietors of this great medicine. Indeed, these very claims are based entirely on what the people say Hood's Sarsaparilla has done, for them. Read the abundant evidence of its powers, and give it a fair, honest trial.

Beecher's Bad Head.

For two months in the year Henry Ward Beecher can't preach. In August and September he takes his vacation and endures the onset of the hay fever. A man with hay fever isn't accountable for his actions. He is frantic with sneezing and headache. Every nerve in his skull thrills with distress, and his head is a fountain of tears. He flies only to fly from seaside to mountain top in search of relief. This form of catarrh hay fever Ely's Cream Balm will cure. Placed in the nostrils it penetrates and soothes the affected parts at once, restores the impared senses and erettes healthy secretions. You cannot run away from hay fever, but you can drive it from you by using Ely's Cream Balm.

ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP

FOUR POINTS

Prepared by an entirely NEW METHOD. Composed of the PUREST MATERIALS. WILL NOT INJURE THE FABRIC. WILL CLEANSE WITHOUT RUBBING.

You can do a large washing without any rubbing; use the boiling process instead. You can save Time, Labor, Fuel, Soap and Clothing.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.

Cut up fine and dissolve one half bar in half gallon of hot water. Pour half this dissolved soap into a tub with just sufficient hot water to cover a boiler full of clothes. Then put the clothes in to soak, rubbing plenty of soap in the most soiled parts. Be sure that the soaking water is hot; soak the clothes half an hour; stir them occasionally so that they may get the full benefit of the hot suds; pour the remainder of the dissolved soap into the boiler, adding sufficient water to cover the clothes; wring them lightly out of the suds. Soap the stained spots and place loosely in the boiler; boil 10 to 20 minutes, rinse well, blue and hang to dry. Do not crowd the boiler too full. The same boiling water may be used for further boiling by adding a little soap to each boiler-full of clothes. Flannels and prints should not be boiled, only a little rubbing required after soaking. This soap will cleanse clothing as thoroughly as any other without the use of the boiler. We prefer and recommend the boiling process as in itself a cleansing process, saving labor, the wear of the wash-board, and being the best disinfectent known, it is easier to boil the dirt out than to rub it out. You can cleanse perfectly the finest fabric without injury; the finest point lace and lace curtains. Soak point lace in hot suds made with this soap, press water out with the hand; boil 3 to 5 minutes in clean suds made with this soap, rinse thoroughly, press carefully between the folds of a towel, roll in a dry towel, and iron between pieces of old flannel. Soak curtains 10 to 30 minutes and boil 5 to 20 minutes, rinse, stretch on frame, or pin every scallop to carpet over a sheet to dry; no ironing required.

Be sure and ask for ELECTRIC-LIGHT SOAP, and take no other.

CATARRH IN THE HEAD

TRADE MARK

Can positively be cured, by using DR. P. HALL'S CATARRH REMEDY. A new compound, entirely different from all other preparations. It is in the form of a fine ointment which is easily applied in the nostrils and nars, and reaches the seat of the disease by absorption. Pleasant to the smell, and most efficient in operation. For Hay Fever, also impaired Hearing, Sight, Smell and Taste, produced by Catarrhal disease, it is a positive cure. The most noted Physicians and prominent Druggists all over the land have given it their endorsement. We have the unsolicited testimonials of hundreds of prominent and reliable men, who have been permanently cured. Do not be humbugged by nostrums, prepared by the inexperienced and unreliable, but insist upon having this Excellent Remedy, compounded by a Physician who has made this disease a study for 30 years. Two to four bottles generally suffice to effect an entire cure. Satisfaction guaranteed or Money refunded. It is a positive cure for Ear-ache. For sale by Druggists. Also sent by mail, post paid, upon receipt of 50c. single bottle, package of twelve $1.00. Circulars and testimonials free.

Big Prairie, on which I. S. Osborn owns a fine farm, on which he has a splendid new barn, in which Rev. Peter Sharp preached a grand sermon on the "Origin of Sin" last Sunday were all scenes of delightful inferest to all who went, and saw, and heard for the first time. The gathered and growing crops both indicated a superb soil, and give promise that in a few years there will be one of the richest, and most beautiful farming sections of country on the prairie, to be found in Michigan. Mr. Osborn is developing an elegant farm which at the rapid rate he has hitherto progressed will soon be a thing of beauty, and a joy to its owner. A new school house bespeaks the intelligence and enterprise of the new settlers in that locality. It seemed a strange thing to hold religious service in a barn in these days of multiplied churches, but in this case it was very appropriate, for although surrounded with settlements of half a century of existence, this Prairie, though unsurpassed for richness of soil, has until lately been left in an uncultivated state, consequently no "country church" as yet adorns its beautiful landscape, hence Mr. Osborn invited Rev. Peter Sharp of Ridgeway to hold service in his spacious barn which he fitted up in good shape for the occasion. There was quite a large congregation present, and all seemed interested in the able and impressive sermon, and delighted with the music which Mr. Osborn had taken pains to provide for, inviting some of the Ridgeway musical talent to be present, who acquited themselves admirably, as did also the home talent, for there was some very excellent musical talent in the congregation. On the whole it was a very enjoyable occasion reminding one of the days of yore, when barns, log cabins and the forest were the only temples to be found in which to worship, and the venerable preacher seemed to catch some of the inspiration of the old time fire as memories of fifty years ago were awakened, when in the full strength of his young manhood he was accustomed to preach the gospel in these primitive temples.

ADDISON ATOMS.

The people of this place were startled about five o'clock yesterday afternoon by the report made upon the streets that Mr. Henry S. Williams an old resident of the village had been drowned in the mill pond. The facts surrounding the case are as follows as near as we can ascertain. The old gentleman as it is well known has deen slightly unbalanced in mind for some years, more especially so however upon subjects of a religious or moral nature and during discussions with the author has frequently treated human life as a thing of little value. This mental delusion added to the fact of declining health is thought by some to have impelled him to a premeditated close of life. And yet such a fact is by no means proven by the circumstances. On the other hand this failing strength and the position of the body when found added other circumstances connected with the case which serve to substantiate the theme of accidental drowning as found by the jury. Mr. W. was a man of unparellelled habits of industry, being the most, successful gardener in Western Lenawee. Was strongly devoted to his family, and a neighbor whom no one can utter a word of reproach, was a man of fair education and is the author of numerous poems illustrating his ideas of "cause and effect" in philosophy, both moral and natural. Whatever failings he may have possessed his originality of thought and sincerity of purpose will find few equals. Let us draw the veil of charity over his weaknesses and trusting to the goodness and mercy of Deity believe that Henry S. Williams has found rest from his labors in a world which is purer and better than this. Funeral services to-day at two o'clock.

MACON MUSIC.

The concert that was to be held at the M. E. church last Sunday evening was indefinitely postponed on account of the storm. The rain, however, was more acceptable than the concert could possibly have been.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

The change of ministers by the Presbyterian church of Manchester, and the Congregational church on Sunday the 31st of August last was enjoyed by the people who attend church here and was an intellectual treat. We congratulate the people on their good fortune in securing the Rev. Mr. Wallace as pastor. May the ministers above named change again and often.

We notice in the last issue of the HERALD a notice of the social and as we think the social spoken of at Bro. Wright's in Bridgewater last week deserves a more extended notice than was given by your correspondent we give you a few items from actual observation. The social was very largely attended; there being from three hundred and fifty to four hundred in attendance. We witnessed while on our way a bright light and as we thought at the time they had procured in some way for the occasion an electric light, and as we neared Bro. Wright's we imagined that Barnum was there with his tents, for in the yard was an immense canvass spread overhead sufficiently large to remind us of Barnum's Big Show. The teams and vehicles in the yard and road reminded us of camp meeting we used to attend when a boy; in short the social was a great success in every way. The music both instrumental and vocal was fine and reflected credit upon the singers as well as the band which were in attendance. All passed off quietly and in good order. We understand the receipts of the evening were from forty to fifty dollars. Long live Bro. Wright.

Our usually quiet little town was the scene of quite a high time and of a good deal of inebriety. All this hilarity was caused by the country people coming to Clinton to witness the sale of a ditch or drain to be sold by drain Commissioner Bruce, who had advertised to sell the Drain to the lowest bidder in sections. The time 10 o'clock brought a large number of ditchers here to witness the sale and to buy a section or two for themselves, and had the sale gone off then all would probably gone off well, but Com. Bruce adjourned the sale until 1 o'clock P. M. which gave all who wished an opportunity to visit the line of the proposed drain and prospect for water which we understand they did, but when the sale was resumed at 1 o'clock it seemed as though in prospecting for water all had struck not water but whiskey for such a time has not been seen in Clinton since the celebrated Catholic picnic of a few years ago. All was pandemonium in the office of S. Brown when the sale was commenced and was confusion until they were turned into the street when passable order was restored and the sale proceeded to the close with considerable spirited bidding which run the price down to very low figures. Hence all was sold and satisfactory security given by all for the digging of the drain at the price bid.

Our new Doctor Cameron recently located in Clinton seems to be a gentleman of fine medical attainments and is fast gaining friends among the good people of Clinton. He is also receiving a share of the patronage.

We notice also that our street commissioner is putting in some very efficient work in the way of sidewalks, graveling the streets, etc.

We notice also that our friend and fellow citizen S. Brown is giving the Chandler block a coat of paint which greatly improves the appearance of said block. May others do likewise.

We notice upon our streets a good many idle persons and boys, white as well as colored, which makes us wish we understood the vagrant law. Tell us.

Schroeder delegates to represent this town in the 1st Representative District convention whenever that shall be held.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

A mild protest against Butler's explanation of Tariff benefit is sent forth like a vesper, wail by some leading papers; and he certainly did take that kid to the river brink, and dropped it; but it was fished out alive. There is not a manufacturer, merchant, milliner, or sewing girl, but can if they will answer the question intelligently and truthfully, why Tariff is a government necessity, and how it can be made a curse to the laborer, and a boomerang of calamity to the unscrupulous capitalist, unless gifted with all the tactics of his uncle Harry. The enigma is, that those who have so long trod the way of weariness and privation, persist in misapplying their remedy. Take for sample the two dollars per thousand on lumber, which he said raised the price but one dollar on that made here. What becomes of the other I don't know unless it is the collector's perquisite; but one goes into the treasury, helps pay government expense, leaves that much off the tax roll, and gives our lumberman a chance to add that much extra to the price of his own and get even. Its design is to insure him against loss through unfair competition with those who can procure more work at less wages and less transit expense. So far all is serene. It assesses the great capitalist, to prevent his taking advantage of the lesser one, and forms a general dividend for all tax payers. But if I was a lumberman, I could defeat that good intention, some by my own effort, and more if others in my line of business would help. To the buyer, I could quote tariff as a reason why the market was bare of foreign product, and high wages that was necessary to offer to obtain the great number of workmen to supply increased demand, would compel me to charge more per thousand of course. To the workmen I could preach of markets flooded with Canadian pine manufactured at far less cost. That in order to compete I must cheapen my goods by paying less for labor. The reduction might be very small, but half a dozen counts something and in the end becomes starvation price. A fiddler and whisky-jug is patronized in lumber camps almost as much as the printer. Such men do not read the price current over much, and take their Gospel second hand. A few years of life in dense woods, debarred from all but the primitive requirements of civilization, is not as favorable to the growth of saints now as when St. John took to the wilderness, but the man who sits at the city office desk contracting sale and shipment, becomes an autocrat just the same. The phrase, he works three hundred men, gradually assumes a meaning, like machinery, especially if he adds a covetous nature to haste in amassing wealth. He unites with brother lumbermen in requesting some favor that will protect his trade. It may be infinitesimal if applied to one foot or board, but is an appreciable gain on a month or year's product, so he pays freely to the party who can plead his cause with cunning and champagne. Without special legislation in his favor the tariff excuse could make his trade a channel to widen daily between labor and just renumeration, if he choose to take advantage of his workmen's credulity or necessity, but with legal concessions for bedrock it becomes an artery, tapping every money vein that leads from mind or appetite, to pocket. He can reduce the price of their work and increase the price of everything almost linked with the industry, besides the lumber produced until his giant matures thusly. He sells at good profits to contractors, partly on credit who in time divides time and advance in price among wholesale dealers, who favor the retail merchant likewise. This goes on for years apparently safe, but some drain commissioners are at work all the time and sap the foundation. The men who build their cots beneath the hill, ask credit, and everything in this Republic, except chipmunk holes, wears the tariff saddle girthed on by legislative favor, their wages are absorbed in every direction. They fail to pay; so does the retailer; that leaves the wholesalers assign, the contractor skips out or flats out, and the manufacturers edit another reduction by withholding a months pay, cutting rates, giving due bills, and making what he can on tea and sugar. This leavens the camp with dissatisfaction, and a strike closes the mills. He is fettered with cords of his own twisting, and can resume only by selling the remaining stock for cash. To do so he forces it on the market at half its cost, and that completes his tangle. He can keep what he can snatch and hide, and leave the balance for a receiver and the benefit of science. His workmen are fortunate if paid enough to buy their tickets to day right, and his friends set up the tombstone outcry, overproduction, as an apology.

THINGS THAT NEVER DIE.

The note, the tragic, the tender, the
The sacred, or solemn, or mirthful
The impulse to a noble or generous
The dreams of love and truth—
The longing after something purer
The soul's yearning cry
These, by his better brother, Hopes—
These things can never die.

The pledge of a friend, tried and true,
A heart-felt, unbiased
The cordial voice of a friend we love dearly,
That proves a friend indeed—
The sigh for dear departed loved ones,
When, passing, they cast a look
The sorrow of a contrite heart—
These things shall never die.

The memory of a clasped hand,
The pressure of a kiss,
And all the treasured sweet and frail
That make up life's first bliss.
If were a deep, unchanging faith,
And hope, trust and love,
Those bonds have clasped and they have met,
These things shall never die.

The cruel and the bitter word
That wounded as it fell,
The chilling want of sympathy
We feel but never tell—
The hard repulse that chill's the heart
Whose hopes were bounding high,
In unrelenting record kept—
These things shall never die.

Let nothing pass, for every hand
Must help some work to do;
Lose not a chance to waken love—
Be firm and just and true,
So shall a light that can not fade
Beam in the darkest night,
And angels voices say to thee—
These things shall never die.

—All the Year Round.

MIRIAM DOUGLAS.

"I'm sorry to interrupt you, sir, but the lock on your sachel is broken, making the things unsafe, besides being a very shabby old bag, sir, begging your pardon." So quoth Eliza, relict of Josiah Nims, the sexton, to her lodger, Rev. Julius Byron.

"What a bore," exclaimed this gentleman, "when I really haven't the time to attend to anything but these letters!"

"I have an errand which takes me past Piper and Tipson's! I could buy you a new sachel, if you would trust me. Going among all those fine people at the wedding with your lock tied up with a bit of string wouldn't do at all, sir."

"Thank you, Mrs. Nims; I have great trust in your judgment, and should be obliged if you would attend to the matter for me and save my going into town."

As the door closed after his landlady Rev. Julius Byron resumed his writing with a sigh of relief. As he sat leaning his head on his disengaged hand—a hand beautiful enough to atone for plainness in all other features had nature willed him to be plain—Julius Byron was an ideal picture of a student—brown eyes, with a far-away, dreamy look, hair long enough to show a tendency to wave loosely back from the forehead, and a pale, clear complexion set off by a golden-brown velveteen coat, which he wore when in his study. Twenty-nine years old, undeniably handsome, gifted with winning manners and shepherd of a flock most willing to be guided, Julius Byron, as if by a miracle, had escaped being spoiled and petted into effeminacy. His safeguard lay perhaps in a pair of soft eyes which had held him spell-bound for a few rapturous weeks, and the witchery of which had lasted over three years of almost total separation.

Miriam Douglas, dispensing tea and gingerbread to a horde of charity children in the park at Mount Edgecombe, was one of the prettiest and daintiest of modern Hebes, in a muslin dress in colors matching forget-me-nots and her eyes equally well, and with roses at her waist and throat which stole their delicate tint from her cheeks. Miriam was seventeen that day, and the blue muslin was her first long dress, to this the little lassie paid far more attention than to the admiring gaze of two dreamy brown eyes. After the feast there were offerings of flowers, good wishes, and rather too many kisses and embraces from the charity children, and, among her other trophies, Miriam Douglas carried away the heart of Rev. Julius Byron. Had she known this, it would have affected her less than the consciousness that the Barclay girls, her former playmates, were enviously admiring the grown-up womanish arrangement of her bright silky hair.

There were a few tennis parties and five o'clock teas after this, during which Mr. Byron worshipped his divinity from afar. She seemed a little in awe of him and rarely spoke with him more than five minutes at a time. What a delightful task it would be to chase away the timidity from the soft, fawn-like eyes, and how pleasant to think that the sea-shell pink stole to her cheeks from joy at his approach!

Fate, however, cruelly interfered with Mr. Byron's dream of awakening loving confidence in the bosom of this bashful maiden of seventeen. In three short weeks, before he had made any perceptible headway, Miriam was summoned to the bed-side of a dying relative, and Julius Byron was called to a parish in a commercial town.

Three long years this idyl had been in the past and through all this time the memory of Miriam Douglas excluded any other love from the young clergyman's heart, though many were the goddesses willing to be therein enshrined.

He wondered at himself; she had slipped completely out of his material existence; he knew not where she was, or if she were dead, or worse—married. Still with all this uncertainty, he could not forget her, and a voice within him seemed to whisper that they would meet again.

The rapid skimming of his pen over the white page was stayed for the second time by a heavy footstep at the door outside; and Mrs. Nims, panting and crimson from the ascent of the steep stairs, exclaimed:

"There, sir; you could not have found a better or cheaper sachel yourself if you had searched the town from end to end. Piper and Tipson say on their oath that it is a first-rate one, and that you needn't fear exchanging with any one by mistake, for they had only one of the kind. This decided me to take it, for, being rather an absent-minded gentleman, you might easily pick up the wrong bag."

"Thank you, Mrs. Nims, thank you; each time that you do anything for me you give me fresh cause to admire your clever management and forethought."

In the wedding to take place on the following day Mr. Byron felt no particular interest. The contract parties were almost strangers to him, as were also the guests, with the exception of Willis Howard, a schoolmaster of days gone by, and a friend ever since of the young clergyman.

Owing to the illness of the bride's mother, the ceremony was performed at home. It was a pretty wedding, the bride graceful, sweet and pale as a lily in her shimmy, diaphanous drapery; and among the guests was the subdued raiment which prevails when the entertainers exhibit unreservedly the signs of joy and sorrow, the smile and tear both coming from the heart.

After the ceremony Mr. Byron partook himself to a dressing-room to fold his surplice and replace it in the sachel chosen by Mrs. Nims. While so engaged a letter was handed him with the word "immediately" written conspicuously on the envelope. The contents were as follows.

MARLOW HALL, Thursday, 18th.—If Rev. Julius Byron could find it convenient to officiate at a private baptism this afternoon at Marlow Hall, he would confer a great favor on the undersigned. Mr. Byron is requested to pardon the apparent disregard of this notice, as the case is urgent. The 2 p. m. train stops at Portland Station, where a carriage will be in waiting.

STANFIELD MARLOW.

"You will go I suppose?" said Willis Howard, to whom Mr. Byron presently showed his note.

"Of course; one cannot refuse such a summons. It is probably a question of life and death."

"I am due at Uxmore to-night—rather a different errand from yours—a masquerade party. I'm sorry we are not traveling in the same direction."

"I am sorry also. Do you know anything of the people at Marlow Hall, Howard?"

"Never had heard of them before. Are they strangers to you?"

"Entirely so."

"Now good-bye, old fellow; my traps are all stowed away in the train, and I had better follow them. Take care of yourself among those mysterious strangers."

In the bustle and confusion at the station Mr. Byron's sachel was mislaid, but he presently caught sight of the familiar object on a distant table, and felt inwardly thankful for its ungainly proportions and the huge brass diamond which made it so easily recognized.

At Portland a respectably dressed man in charge of a wagonette came forward to meet Mr. Byron, and, during the drive to the Hall, the former discoursed freely upon the existing state of affairs there. A son and heir to the fine estate had arrived, and there had been great rejoicing, but within the past twenty-four hours their joy had been turned to mourning by a dispatch summoning the newly-made father to the death-bed of his only sister in Germany. The young mother seemed to feel a presentiment of misfortune, and she insisted upon the young baby being baptized before the departure of its father. The clergyman of the parish was temporarily absent, hence Mr. Byron's hasty summons. The ceremony would be performed in the chapel connected with the Hall, and would be very quiet, being witnessed only by the father and grandfather of the child, with possibly one or two guests.

After lunching in a somber, richly-decorated dining-hall, Mr. Byron was shown to a bed-room, with the intimation that his services in the chapel would be required in an hour if convenient to him.

There was something strange and interesting about the fine old mansion, so lately a scene of rejoicing, and now silent as an empty church. No members of the family were visible, and the great house seemed deserted, save for a few silent footed servants.

As the time for the baptism drew near, Mr. Byron asked to be conducted to the vestry-room. To make sure that everything was in readiness he opened his sachel, when, to his consternation, instead of drawing forth a neatly folded surplice, he held up before his astonished gaze a doublet and hose of scarlet and gray satin, such as might be seen on the stage in "As You Like It."

Alas for the veracity of Messrs. Piper and Tipson and the credulity of the worthy Mrs. Nims. The so-called unique bag had many duplicates, and Mr. Willis Howard had bought one that very morning in which to stow away his fancy ball costume.

Here was a predicament indeed for Rev. Julius Byron! In desperation he flew to the wardrobe in the vestry-room. Vain hope. Not a shred of the other clergyman's vestments hung there. What was to be done? Even if in extreme cases the church rules permitted the clergy to officiate without robes in the sacred edifice—and for a moment Mr. Byron was too bewildered to think whether this would be permissible or not—how could he explain the annoying mistake to those strangers? They, already so troubled, would think him an untrustworthy, careless trifler.

In his perplexity he rang for the man who had already waited on him.

"Is there a lady in the house with whom I could speak for a few moments?" Mr. Byron asked.

"My mistress' cousin is here; but she does not leave the invalid's rooms for anything just at present."

"Then I will write my message in a note."

He stated the case as clearly as he could on paper, and dispatched the servant with it. In answer the lady sent her maid to inquire if search had been made everywhere in the vestry-room for a surplice. He sent back a word that further search was useless.

After some moments of to him, terrible suspense—for the time was almost come for him to appear in the chapel—the maid returned, and, with deep blushes and a nervous twitching of her apron hem, began:

"My young lady told me to tell you, sir, that, if you would not think it any harm, she would send you her—Oh, no, I don't mean that, sir! She said I was not to say who it belonged to, but she would cut the bands off the sleeves and the lace from the neck, and it would be long, and nobody would notice that it was a night-gown, sir; and, if you didn't mind, sir, I would go and fetch it at once, for there is no time to lose."

The girl's concluding remarks were only too true, and, however much he might have hesitated at her suggestion in cooler moments, he was thankful now for any solution of the difficulty.

"Tell your mistress that I shall be very grateful for the loan she proposes, if she thinks the deception will not be discovered."

The servant vanished, and was soon on the spot again with a snowy linen night-gown. The neck at the back had been torn down to admit broader shoulders, and a linen handkerchief had been hastily stitched in to cover the rent. Most of the ornamentation had been cut away, but enough remained to prove that the garment belonged to a lady of very dainty tastes.

Thankful for this semblance of a surplice and too hurried to feel amusement, Mr. Byron arrayed himself, entered the chapel, and the service began anon. He observed with a sigh of thankfulness that the chapel was very dark, and this enabled him to read without much nervousness. Two gentlemen came forward with the baby and its nurse, and for a brief time during the service the young clergymen saw indistinctly the slender figure of a lady standing in the dimly lighted aisle. Before the end of the ceremony her feelings seemed to overcome her, for she left the church sobbing what might have been a sob, but which sounded strangely like a laugh.

What Mr. Byron feared would be a trying ordeal was soon over, and he reentered the vestry-room with a much lighter heart than when he left it. While disrobing a name in indelible ink on the gown attracted his attention. Perhaps he should have respected his fair benefactress' wish to remain unknown, but the temptation was too strong. He turned to the light and read the name—"Miriam Douglas"—under the tucks and embroidery of the robe which he had just discarded.

Was it a coincidence, or had a kind of fate led him to the shrine of his idol? The uncertainty was not to be borne.

"Will you ask Miss Douglas if she can grant me five minutes' interview before I go?" he said to the girl who came, in great trepidation, for the novel surplice.

In a cosy little reception-room Julius Byron was presently received by her who had been the companion of his happiest dreams during more than three years. The blushing timidness had disappeared, leaving in its stead a graceful, womanly dignity. She was a sweeter, fairer Miriam even than of old, "divinely tall and most divinely fair!"

"Oh, Mr. Byron, how horrified you must be. You signed initials only to your note, and I little imagined to whom I was offering that garment. I recognized you at once in church, and in spite of the solemnity of the occasion I had to laugh. It was such an uncommonly bad fit."

"It was a great boon to me, and I shall be everlastingly grateful to you for coming to the rescue."

A sudden indifference as to the hours of departing trains seemed to take possession of Mr. Byron, and he found himself with a certain amount of magnanimity, accepting an invitation to spend the night at the Hall.

At the conclusion of her visit to her cousin, Mrs. Marlow, Miriam betook herself to the house of a friend, who extended many formal invitations to Mr. Byron as well.

One soft fragrant evening, among the June roses, Julius Byron told his love story, and Miriam listened with a look in her eyes which told her lover that he spoke not in vain. * * *

"How provoked you, in your turn, must have been at finding my surplice instead of the fancy costume," said Mr. Byron to his friend Willis, when they again met.

"I was in a rage at first, I admit," answered Mr. Howard, "but affairs turned out not so bad, after all. I put on the surplice to see how it became me, when one of the maids, catching a glimpse of me through the window, set up a scream, declaring that she had seen a ghost. This brought a lot of visitors out of their rooms, among whom, to my sorrow, was Edith Fuller—my Edith, you know. We had quarreled and parted, never to meet again; but the ridiculous feature of this scene seemed to break the ice between us, and—. Well, Byron, I have blessed the memory of your surplice ever since."

"That contretemps of the sachels was a lucky thing for us both."

"Piper and Tipson and their humbugs forever!" exclaimed young Howard.

Newspaper Editorials in Turkey.

It will be interesting, I think, to the people of such a free country as America to read the extract translation of the language the newspapers have to use in Turkey, no matter what nationality they may be. An Armenian college in Turkey was totaly ruined by fire through some Mohammedan incediaries, and, though the case was quite clear to the courts, yet because of their being Mohammedans the Armenians will find some difficulty in securing their conviction. The following is an exact translation of an editorial of the leading Armenian newspaper, called Arevelk, published in Constantinople, giving an account of this fire, and inviting the attention of the authorities to punish the parties who caused the fire.

"We again publish a minute description we have received of the burning of the Armenian College in the city of Lovrig, begging at the same time the pity and sympathy of his august majesty of our Ottoman fatherly sovereign over this sad ruin of the college, which was built with so much expense and hard labor, and was reduced to ashes in a moment. The good and virtuous will of our august sovereign Sultan Hamid, which is as clear as the sun, and whose sovereignty's motto has always been to give particular care and attention to the great work of education and discipline, according to the requirements of the century, undoubtedly assures us that this ruined condition of the college will invite the august Sultan to be well pleased to wash away, with his fatherly, most pitiful and merciful grace-bestowing drops of favor, the tears of his many hundreds of obedient and grateful children who are in so great need of education."

Editors of American papers would not enjoy being forced to write in that strain.—Constantinople Letter.

AYER'S
Cherry Pectoral.

No other compounds are so in demand by the sick as those which are found in the vegetable kingdom, and have stood the test of years. The ordinary cough or cold, requiring simple treatment, if neglected, fastens upon the lungs, and consumption sets in. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has cured many cases in every part of the world, and should be taken in all cases at the beginning.

A Terrible Cough Cured.

ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP

FOUR POINTS

Prepared by an entirely NEW METHOD.
Composed of the PUREST MATERIALS.
WILL NOT INJURE THE FABRIC.
WILL CLEANSE WITHOUT RUBBING.

You can do a large washing without any rubbing; use the boiling process instead. You can save Time, Labor, Fuel, Soap and Clothing.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.

Cut up fine and dissolve one half bar in half gallon of hot water. Pour half this dissolved soap into a tub with just sufficient hot water to cover a boiler full of clothes. Then put the clothes in to soak, rubbing plenty of soap in the most soiled parts. Be sure that the soaking water is hot; soak the clothes half an hour; stir them occasionally so that they may get the full benefit of the hot suds; pour the remainder of the dissolved soap into the boiler, adding sufficient water to cover the clothes; wring them lightly out of the suds. Soap the stained spots and place loosely in the boiler; boil 10 to 20 minutes, rinse well, blue and hang to dry. Do not crowd the boiler too full. The same boiling water may be used for further boiling by adding a little soap to each boiler-full of clothes. Flannels and prints should not be boiled, only a little rubbing required after soaking. This soap will cleanse clothing as thoroughly as any other without the use of the boiler. We prefer and recommend the boiling process as in itself a cleansing process, saving labor, the wear of the wash-board, and being the best disinfectant known, it is easier to boil the dirt out than to rub it out. You can cleanse perfectly the finest fabric without injury, the finest point lace and lace curtains. Soak point lace in hot water made with this soap, press water out with the hand; boil 5 to 5 minutes in clean suds made with this soap, rinse thoroughly, press carefully between the folds of a towel, roll in a dry towel, and iron between pieces of old flannel. Soak carpets 10 to 30 minutes and boil 5 to 10 minutes, rinse, stretch on frame, or pin every shaking to carpet over a sheet to dry; no ironing required.

Be sure and ask for ELECTRIC-LIGHT SOAP, and take no other.

WHAT WILL convince you of the wonderful curative properties combined in HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA, if the remarkable cures that have been effected by its use fail to impress upon your mind this repeatedly proven fact? Thousands are using it and all declare that it is a medicine possessing WILL like all and we claim for it even more than we claim for it. My friend, if you are sick or in that condition that you cannot call yourself either sick or well, go and get a bottle of HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA, and realize yourself how this medicine hits the right spot and puts CONVINCE all the machinery of your body into working order.

From the Registrar of Deeds for Middlesex County, Northern District.

LOWELL, MASS.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gentlemen—It affords me much pleasure to recommend HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA. My health has been such that for some years past I have been obliged to take a tonic of some kind in the spring and have never found anything that hit my wants as your Sarsaparilla. It tones up my system, purifies my blood, sharpens my appetite, and seems to make me over. Respectfully yours,

J. P. THOMPSON.

One of our prominent business men said to us the other day: "In the spring my wife got all run down and could not eat anything; passing your store I saw a piece of HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA in the window and I got a bottle. After she had been taking it a week she had a rousing appetite, and it did her everything. She took three bottles, and it was the best three dollars I ever invested."

GREAT INDIGNATION

Among the Friends of Sergeant Brainerd and Comrades at the Action of Ordering Them to Duty.

Assistant Secretary French Arrives from Europe and Takes Charge of the Treasury Department—Sixth Auditor Appointed.

INDIGNATION EXPRESSED.

WASHINGTON, September 9.—The peremptory manner in which Sergeants Brainerd and Long and Private Connell were ordered back to duty at Portsmouth, N. H., because they proposed to exhibit themselves and lecture to obtain a little extra cash, has aroused some feeling among their friends, and they have a good many among the rank and file who express surprise that Lieutenant Dapenhower, when he returned from the wreck of the Jeannette, should have been allowed to do this very thing without any interference from his superiors. Secretary Hunt considered Dapenhower unfit to join in the search for Delong and he was ordered home and other officers sent from this country to assist Engineer Melville in his work of searching for the ill-fated commander and his companions. Dapenhower went about the country delivering lectures and putting money in his purse, while these survivors of the Greely expedition, who suffered infinitely more and deserves fully as much license as was granted the unfortunate Dapenhower, are at the outset of an effort to make a little money by the lecturing and exhibition business deprived of further leave of absence, and ordered back to duty. The whole business may be degrading upon the dignity that should characterize a public servant, but invidious discrimination is likely to create some comments whichever it occurs.

CAPITAL NOTES.

The President yesterday appointed Robert F. Crowell, of Minnesota, Sixth Auditor of the Treasury vice Ela, deceased, and Elwin A. Clifford, who is now Chief of the Examining Division of the Postoffice Department, Deputy Sixth Auditor.

The acting Comptroller of the Currency has directed Examiner Shelly to take charge of the National Bank of New Jersey, at New Brunswick, and report upon the advisability of appointing a receiver.

Assistant Secretary of the Treasury French arrived from Europe yesterday and assumed the duties of Secretary of the Treasury. Assistant Secretary Coon left in the afternoon for Geneva, N. Y., to attend the funeral of the late Secretary Folger.

Secretary Lincoln returned to Washington Saturday evening and was at the department yesterday. He will leave at ten o'clock tonight for Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, accompanying the remains of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Lincoln.

THREE SUICIDES.

The President, Cashier and a Depositor of the National Bank of New Brunswick, N. J., Commit Suicide.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., September 9.—Marion Runyon, President of the National Bank of New Brunswick, cut his throat from ear to ear in a closet of the bank yesterday morning. It is supposed that he was connected with the defalcation of Cashier Hill who committed suicide the other day. The greatest excitement prevails and the front of the bank is crowded with men and women clamoring for their money. The bank did not open yesterday and long before ten o'clock there was a prospect of a big run as it had been whispered that startling revelations would be made as soon as the Bank Examiner began his work. The officials refused all information, but the rumor that the defalcation would reach $500,000, if not more, was generally believed. It is reported that Runyon said before he died: "There is about one million gone." The Bank Examiners were about to arrest him. Runyon has been President of the bank for five years. He was about sixty years of age, and had been a farmer for many years and resided on the homestead about a mile from here. Runyon was not generally regarded as much of a financier, the late Cashier Hill being considered as running the institution pretty much his own way and Runyon not appearing as of much consequence. Runyon leaves a wife and four children. His suicide strengthens the belief of great frauds in the management of the bank. The National bank is in chaos. Over $1,000,000 was stolen by Hill. The city is wild with excitement. Crowds blockade Church street, where the bank stands. Acting Cashier Campbell is expected to be arrested for complicity in the conspiracy.

Walter Carroll, a depositor, also cut his throat. The mob threaten to burst open the doors and is only subdued by a large force of police.

The "Corn Exchange Regiment" Unveils a Monument.

GETTYSBURG, Pa., September 9.—About two hundred survivors of the One Hundred and Eighteenth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, known as the "Corn Exchange Regiment," and a large number of citizens, gathered here yesterday to attend the unveiling of the Corn Exchange Monument designed to mark the spot where the regiment stood on this famous battle ground twenty-one years ago during the memorable three days' fight. The ceremonies were opened by prayer by the Rev. R. F. McInnes, of St. Mary's Church, West Philadelphia, followed by music, songs and the unveiling exercises.

The National Prison Association.

SARATOGA, September 9.—The National Prison Association was called to order by ex-President Hayes. Prayer was offered by Rev. George W. Hiscock, Chaplain of the Michigan State Prison. A paper on "Inter-State Extradition" was read by Goodwin Brown, of Albany. A committee was appointed to take steps to bring about uniform practice between the States, regulating the extradition of fugitives from justice. Professor Francis Wayland, of Connecticut, read a paper on the "Pardoning Power." He advocated Pardoning Boards instead of having the pardoning power vested in the Executive.

Illinois State Fair.

CHICAGO, September 9.—The thirty-second annual Illinois State Fair opened yesterday morning at the Chicago Driving Park under the most favorable auspices. The entries in all departments are unprecedently large, and the quality of the stock and articles are in keeping with the number of the entries. The exhibit of live stock represent the best specimens of farm animals, and not only have all the States engaged in stock breeding contributed, but the breeders of England, France, Scotland and the Canadies have also exhibits. There will be races each day, and the entries show that some fine sport may be anticipated.

TERRIBLE FIRE.

The Most Destructive Conflagration in Cleveland's History—Fifty Acres of Lumber, Planing Mills and Iron Works Swept Out of Existence—Loss Over $2,000,000.

CLEVELAND, September 9.—The most destructive conflagration which ever visited Cleveland occurred Sunday night, and a large district of the Flats, fifty acres in extent, lying between Scranton Avenue and the Bee Line railway tracks, is laid waste. Great heaps of ashes, ruined walls and shapeless, charred remains are all that is left to mark where stood hundreds of piles of valuable lumber, planing mills, machine shops and iron works.

When the conflagration was at its height it presented a scene of awful grandeur. Dozens of acres of lumber piles ablaze at once, with here and there a large building wrapped in flames beyond the possibility of saving, is a spectacle to inspire awe. The fire got under strong headway in an incredibly short space of time. A spark from no one knows where lodged in a pile of shavings in Woods, Perry & Co.'s lumber yard, situated between Carter Street and the river. A watchman who saw the little blaze between two piles of lumber made all haste to turn in an alarm from the nearest box. The officials of the Fire Department always dread to hear an alarm come in from box 13. Not because they have a superstitious prejudice against the number "13," but because they have felt for years that the location is a very dangerous one on account of the highly inflammable nature of the property there, the difficulty of getting at it and the insufficient number of water pipes. So when box 13 sounded over the line the response of the district battalion was even more than usually prompt, and the Chief and his assistants were on the ground in the quickest possible time. Yet, speedily as the firemen reached the place, it was plain when they arrived that a monster conflagration would ensue, and immediately every available engine in the city was called out, and ere long telegrams were sent to Akron, Canton, Elyria, Sandusky, Painesville, Columbus, Delaware, Youngstown and even as far as Toledo and Erie asking for assistance in the way of fire engines and men to work them. The responses which came from those places straightway were of the most gratifying nature. Each city which had a fire company to spare made haste to start it, and the railway companies furnished special trains to hurry men and machines to the conflagration.

As the fire spread it was deemed a wise precaution to call out the militia for police duty in case their services should become necessary. Accordingly every engine house bell in the city was set ringing and the members of the First Battery, Cleveland Grays and of the Fifth Regiment responded they were ordered to the City Armory to hold themselves in readiness for duty for assisting the fireman and in guarding property from thieves.

The red glare which lighted the sky above the Flats and the wild clanging of fire bells caused the most intense excitement. The entire population of the city was out of doors and it looked as if pretty nearly all the inhabitants were crowded into the streets, on the bridges and along the river docks in the neighborhood of the fire or were occupying every eligible inch of ground on the bluffs which surround the Flats.

The weather had been very dry for several weeks and people were in trepidation for fear that the whole town was doomed to destruction. The fickle breeze first scattered the sparks over the down town district, Monumental Park and Seneca street receiving the heaviest baptism of fire. Then the wind carried the blazing cinders eastwardly and distributed them for two miles or more along Euclid Avenue, Prospect and parallel streets. Some of the lawns presented the appearance of having been dressed with charcoal. The cinders burned while carried about by the wind but on touching any object ceased to blaze. The wind shifted again and smoke and sparks were borne out over the lake. Presently another change came and almost a gale blew from the lake. Then the wind subsided and smoke and sparks ascended in almost a straight direction until the fickle current in the upper air caught those tawny, bright studded clouds and whirled them first one way and then another, tearing them into fantastic shapes and frequently dashing large patches back into the vortex over the Flats. By midnight the sparks were much less abundant, as the lumber to feed the flames became scarcer, and consequently danger was to that extent abated, but in another hour the rapacious flames had crossed the Bee Line embankment, which it was hoped would prove a barrier, and found fresh provender in the lumber yards there.

Although the conflagration was under control by two o'clock, the fire burned all night, and six of the home engines and all the foreign companies were playing on the smouldering ruins all next day. It was a terrible night for the firemen. The intensity of the heat can scarcely be described so that a person can realize it. Yet some notion may be gained from the fact that the Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati & Indianapolis Railway bridge over the river, which one would suppose was far enough away not to be affected, was swung early in the evening because the heat was perceptibly expanding the iron draw, and it had not been open long before it had lengthened too much to be shut without injury. To such blistering heat were the firemen exposed at short range.

It was necessary for them to wet each other freely and frequently from the streams playing on the fire. It is wonderful that no life was lost and no serious accident happened. Hundreds of citizens braved the danger to assist the heroic firemen.

The progress of the fire may be divided into four chapters. After starting, the flames extended west to the lumber yards of Potter, Birdsall & Co., and east to C. G. King & Co. extending from Scranton Avenue to the Bee Line, and from the river to Cutter Street, eating up thirty-five million feet of lumber, twenty-seven cars of the Bee Line loaded with merchandise and other incidentals, such as office buildings, shanties and stables.

Having swept away this square, the flames leaped across the river on the north and across the Bee Line embankment on the west, and eat their way into the rear of Sherwin, Williams & Co.'s works and G. A. Stanley's lard oil and candle factory on the north, while attacking Hubbell & Westoveris lumber yard on the west. Considerable damage was done here, but the flames were isolated after a desperate fight and their progress was checked in this direction.

Having destroyed everything north of Carter Street, the fire made its way across the street, going south and attacking the Variety Iron Works, Eynon & Co.'s machine shop, House & Davidson's box factory and planing mill and the Howells Coal Co.'s yards, wholly wiping out everything embraced between Carter, Bayford and Vaillard streets and Scranton Avenue. Step by step the flames were fought, but unsuccessfully. The fire burned itself out in a southerly direction and then stopped.

All weakness and ill health owes its origin to an impure state of blood and a weakness of the urinary and digestive organs. A medicine that will strengthen these organs, and at the same time purify the blood, will assist nature in curing nearly every disease that human flesh and blood is heir to. Such a remedy is Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla, and, although it possesses no cathartic or diuretic effect, its use will soon establish a regular habit of body as well as cure weakness of the kidneys, indicated by urinary sediments, nervousness, etc.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine.

This most interesting publication is conducted with liberality, enterprise and talent; in fact, the name of the editor, T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., is a voucher for its excellence. The October number is filled with contributions in prose and poetry by some of the most popular writers, and the illustrations are numerous and meritorious. Among the contents are articles by Rev. Geo. T. Rider, Mrs. Robbins, A. E. Alexander, Hervey, J. Alex. Patten, etc.; sermons by the editor and D. L. Moody; poems by Mrs. T. K. Hervey, Longfellow, Madeline S. Bridges, etc.; and serial and short stories, sketches and essays, replete with interest. "A Trip Through South Holland," "Historical Attractions of Inwood," "Titian's Religious Paintings," "Children of All Nations," etc., will well repay the reader; indeed, the pages teem with interest, entertainment and instruction. The Magazine should find its way into every family circle. A single copy is 25 cents, or $2.50 a year, postpaid. Mrs. FRANK LESLIE, Publisher, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, N. Y.

A remedy that has proven itself a never-failing cure for scrofula and all syphilitic disorders must quickly cure less terrible blood diseases. Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla is such a perfect blood purifier and strengthener of bodyily functions, that it cures the above diseases even when Hot Springs and all other treatment has failed. Remember, it is absolutely free from mineral poisons, and will not injure the most delicate constitution. Its use will make you feel buoyant, strong and well, and will rid your system of all blood impurities and every internal and external indication of disease.

The Secret of Wealth.

Broken down invalids do you wish to gain flesh, to acquire an appetite, to enjoy a regular habit of body, to obtain refreshing sleep, to feel and know that every liver and tissue of your system is being braced up and renovated. If so commence at once a course of Golden Seal Bitters. In one week you will be convalescent. In a month you will be well. Don't despair because you have a weak constitution. Fortify the body against disease by purifying all the fluids with Golden Seal Bitters. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus forearmed. The liver, the stomach, the bowels, the kidneys, are rendered disease proof by this great invigorant. Roindin bitter medical attendance may be avoided by counteracting the first symptoms of sickness with these Bitters. They are recommended from friend to friend, and the sale increases daily. We warrant a cure. They are a positive cure also for all female complaints. In these diseases they have no equal. Take no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

ESTATE OF HENRY D. C. TUTTLE.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee, ss.

At a session of the Probate Court for the County of Lenawee, holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, on Monday, the 11th day of August, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four.

Present, Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Henry D. C. Tuttle, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Edwin R. Wood, administrator of said estate, alleging that he has paid all the expenses of administration thus far incurred, that the Commissioners on claims have filed their report in this court, and that the amount of claims against said estate exceed the assets of said estate that have come to his hands as such administrator, that he is ready to render final account, and asks that the time of allowing and that said court order the payment of the residue of said assets as a dividend among the creditors who are entitled thereto.

Thereupon it is ordered, That Monday, the 8th day of September next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing on said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, and show cause if any there be, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered That said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County of Lenawee, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

Timothy E. Tarsney is the Democratic and National candidate for Congress in the eighth district. R. G. Horr is the Republican candidate.—Tarsney and Horr will paint that district red sure.

Tammany Hall is swinging into line and has declared for Cleveland. This sets at rest all uncertainty in regard to New York. That state can now be put in the Democratic column, and put there to stay.

Gen. Butler addressed an immense crowd in Detroit last week and also had large meetings in Grand Rapids and Muskegon. He is stirring up his followers all along the line. He expects to visit Michigan again before the campaign closes.

The Chicago News says Mr. St. John denies the story that he will withdraw. It is indeed a terrible state of affairs when men become so discourteous that they won't get out of the way and give the whole sidewalk and road to their enemies.

Both parties seem to be satisfied with the Vermont election. The Republicans have carried the state by nearly 22,000, and they are pleased.—The Democrats claim the majority should have been 26,000 and so they are pleased. It is a happy election indeed which pleases both sides.

Democratic aspirants for office are popping up all over the county since the Republican county convention.—The Democrats have it in their power to select a ticket to-morrow which will win. Let none but the strongest and best men be placed in nomination, and after the ticket is made let every man pull off his coat and go in to elect it.

The HERALD published several weeks ago that the political prophets who failed to take the Union party into account this fall, would have to revise their figures before election day. Our prediction is already proving true. The Unionists are well organized, have a strong set of tickets, and intend to make themselves numerous between now and election day.

The Greenback congressional convention met in Adrian last week and endorsed Col. Eldredge. He will thus secure the benefit of the Greenback vote which was cast for a third candidate two years ago. His chances are certainly as good at present as those of either of the two other candidates in the field. The fight will be a stubborn one, every inch of ground will be hotly contested, but Col. Eldredge's friends have it in their power by harmonious and earnest work to elect him.

Is it true that a certain methodist clergyman in this district has been employed to canvass the district and attempt to persuade Unionists to cut Chas. Mosher and vote for Capt. Allen for Congress? Methodist ministers, and all other ministers too, should vote as their conviction of duty dictates. That is all right. But when a Methodist minister, or any other minister, hires himself out for pay to travel about among the members of his church, and use his personal influence to wheedle honest voters into voting against their convictions, he puts himself without the pale of honorable men, and illustrates the degraded condition into which politics have fallen.

The Maine election last Monday resulted as was anticipated. The Republican state ticket was chosen. The Republicans claim 16,000 majority; the Democrats concede 12,000. The majority will settle down at about 15,000, which can fairly be called a stand-off. Hayes carried the state in 1876 by 16,577; Garfield in 1880 by 8,858 when the fusion movement was strong. This year the Greenbackers had returned to the old parties, and the entire prohibition vote was in the Republican ranks. In Maine the Republicans stand with both feet on a prohibitory platform. Hence the Prohibitionists of that state can support their own principles and still vote the Republican ticket. Taken all in all the result of the election is about what both parties expected. State pride also contributed largely in giving Blaine a good send-off in his own state.

TEMPERANCE DEPARTMENT.

EDITED BY A COMMITTEE OF THE UNION PROHIBITION PARTY.

Motto: No license for the Liquor Traffic in any form or for any price.

UNION PROHIBITION TICKET.

For President—John P. St. John, of Kansas.
For Vice President—William Daniel, of Maryland.

The publication of the Union Light for the past few months in the interest of prohibition, has impressed the friends of the cause of the importance of having a local medium through which candid and searching people could become informed upon the greatest question of the day.

Through the courtesy of the proprietor and editor of the HERALD, a committee of the Union Party has assumed the management of one or two columns on this page, which will be known as a Temperance Department, and conducted in the interest of the above ticket which represents the principle of political prohibition.

It is not our intention to misrepresent, exaggerate, or do any mud slinging, as is common in politics, but instead, to discuss fairly and impartially the issue of the Union party. This department will be open to any of its readers for brief articles, pro and con; also for notices for public meetings in the interest of the cause of temperance. All communications must be received Monday of each week, if inserted the same week, but notices of meetings can be used if received as late as Wednesday. Address Temperance Department of Tecumseh HERALD.

For Commissioner of Land Office—W. W. Barnhart, of Muskegon.
For Attorney General—J. H. Tatem, of Kent.
For Superintendent of Public Instruction—J. B. Steere, of Washtenaw.
For Member of state Board of Education—I. W. McKeever, of Allegan.
For Representative in Congress, 2d. district—Charles Mosher, of Hillsdale.

COUNTY TICKET.

For State Senator—Zachariah Cook, of Raisin.
For Judge of Probate—Prof. E. G. Walker, of Palmyra.
For County Sheriff—James K. Johnson, of Adrian.
For County Clerk—W. H. Moore, of Palmyra.
For Register of Deeds—Aaron J. Kempton, of Woodstock.
For County Treasurer—C. D. West, of Madison.
For Prosecuting Attorney—
For Circuit Court Commissioners—
For County Surveyor—C. E. Mitchell, of Madison.
For Coroners—Ira Ladd, Wyron Sweet, Adrian.

FOR LEGISLATURE.

For 1st. District—Geo. Humphrey, Lenawee Junction.
For 2nd. District—William K. Green, of Adrian.
For 3d. dist.—Porter Bean, of Hollis.

Candidates for Prosecuting Attorney and Circuit Court Commissioners were left to be selected by the County committee.

For platform adopted at the State convention see first page of last week's HERALD.

"The Prohibition of the liquor traffic is the demand of the People, and the politicians and statesmen who fail to heed it are only treasuring up for themselves wrath against the day of wrath, political politics, enthusiastic campaigns, notwithstanding. The day has come when men cannot and will not give their suffrage to the party that licenses and protects the liquor crime."—N. Y. Tribune.

Arrangements have been completed for Prof. Dickie to address Prohibition meetings in the county, as follows.

Palmyra—Friday, Sept. 12th, at 2 P. M.
Blissfield—Friday evening, Sept 12.
Tecumseh—Saturday Sept. 13th at 3 P. M.
Clinton—Saturday evening, Sept. 13th.

This will be the only opportunity for the people of Tecumseh and vicinity to hear Prof. Dickie. The surrounding townships should avail themselves of hearing perhaps the best advocate of the Union party movement that Michigan has.

The work of the Prohibition County and Congressional convention held Aug. 30th, was admirably well done. The county ticket is an exceptionably strong one, and will receive special notice hereafter. The congressional candidate, Hon. Charles Mosher of Hillsdale county, needs no special commendation at this time, being known as one of the best friends of prohibition in the State. He was the father of the so-called Mosher bill, which would have given us a prohibitory law six years ago, had it not been for the stubborn opposition made by the old parties, especially the Republican party, in order to save the whisky vote to their respective parties.

Many temperance republicans claim to be much grieved because their nominee for congress, Mr. Allen, was not endorsed by the Prohibitionists. If the prohibitionists were advocating men rather than principles, Mr. Allen might have suited them as he is an advocate of prohibition. But to endorse Mr. Allen as a candidate of the Republican party, the principles endorsed would be those of that party, because he said when accepting the nomination that he "expected to die a Republican." The prominent principle of the Prohibitionist is the prohibition of the liquor traffic. The Republican party opposes this and has instituted and remains committed to a system of regulation which means the permission and perpetuation of this traffic.

To endorse Mr. Allen as a candidate it must follow that the permission and perpetuation of the liquor traffic is endorsed as a principle.

To have done this would have satisfied every member of the Union party in this district, who having followed their honest conviction of right principle, have landed outside of the political party to which Mr. Allen adheres and expects to die in its ranks.

The way for Mr. Allen to get to congress is for the political friends not his enemies.

With a firm reliance upon Almighty God, and full confidence in the justice of our course, we once more pledge fidelity to the principles of constitutional and legal prohibition, believing, as we do, that this is the only right and successful way of dealing with this greatest curse of Christian civilization.

And in order the better to further this cause we oppose all coalition with parties which either oppose or ignore these principles, and cannot support men who stand upon the platform of, and owe allegiance to, any of these parties, having learned from past experience that such men will act in every trying hour with the party to whom they owe allegiance. In taking this position we do not forget that there are many men acting with the old parties who are with us in heart, but we feel that while they stand where they now are, they are at the mercy of politicians who will not cease to bid for the liquor vote.

Resolved, That it is not in any spirit of revenge that we wage war on all the old parties, not yet with greed for the spoils of office, but with the one grand object of maintaining principles dear to us, even though we should suffer defeat after defeat in their support.

Resolved, That we thankfully accept the action of the state convention in selecting David Preston to be our standard bearer, recognizing in him a strong candidate, and a worthy noble Christian man, to whom we can point with pride.

Resolved, That we recognize in the other nominees of the convention, worthy leaders of the people in the state campaign.

Resolved That we indorse the platform adopted by the convention, and appeal to the prohibitionists of our county to rally to the support of both platform and candidates.

Resolved, That we regard the fusion of the democratic and greenback parties in our state as a sacrifice of their boasted principles for the spoils of office, and invite all honest, upright men in those parties to join us in the support of a party which places principles above spoils.

Resolved, That prohibitionists cannot support the republican party in Michigan, which only votes to submit prohibition to the people, with the reserved right to muster the worst elements of society for its defeat at the ballot box.

Resolved, That we call upon all honest prohibitionists to consider whether they can further the cause of prohibition by supporting a party whose standard-bearer is for prohibition in Maine, but in favor of taxation in the other states in the Union, and ask them to join us in supporting the party whose standard-bearer is for prohibition from Maine to California.

Resolved, That all other issues as between the great parties are secondary to the question of suppressing the liquor traffic, and that in this traffic we recognize the greatest foe of rich and poor, laborers and capitalists, alike.

Resolved, That we appeal to all classes of our people, whether laborers, capitalists or public servants, to join us in this holy crusade against the rum power, the great foe of our common interests, and help us fight until it is taken out of politics and driven from our beloved country.

One of the most curious incidents in the history of African slavery in America is the life of Charles Stewart, a slave owned by the Johnsons of Virginia, and afterwards by the Porters of Louisiana, both of them noted as possessors of remarkable racing horses. He was a born trainer and rider of horses, and during his long lifetime has ridden the winning horse at many of the great races down South. He could not write, and knew nothing about figures, but was nevertheless trusted by his owners with the care and transportation of their stock, and the custody of bets and stakes, and he seems always to have come out right. One of the ladies of the Porter family recently took down the story of his life as told by himself, and it will be given, in his own negro dialect, in the October Harper's, with a portrait of the old hero of the turf.

Morenci Observer. And now a prominent Medina farmer comes to the front as a victim of the busted Adrian bank, to the music of $1,500. A widow also of the same township laments the loss of her "little all."

The next number of the North American Review is to contain an elaborate defense of the tariff system, prepared by leading advocates of protection.

A NARROW ESCAPE

Sleep after fatigue, and health after disease, are two of the sweetest experiences known to man. Fourteen years is a long time in which to suffer, yet Mr. Peter Lawler of Dalton, Mass., had led a miserable life for that period through the presence of stone in the bladder. That he sought in all directions for a cure is an almost superfluous statement. He did obtain temporary relief, but nothing more. Last January he called on Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who said after examination: "Mr. Lawler, you have stone in the bladder. We will first try Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy before risking an operation." A few days later the following letter passed through the Rondout postoffice:

DALTON, MASS., February 6.
Dear Dr. Kennedy:—The day after I came home I passed two gravel stones, and am doing nicely now. PETER LAWLER.

Dr. Kennedy now has the stones at his office, and they are sufficiently formidable to justify the claim that Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is the leading specific for stone in the bladder. In this letter Mr. Lawler mentions that Favorite Remedy also cured him of rheumatism. The subjoined certificate tells its own story.

OLD BERKSHIRE MILLS,
DALTON, Mass. April 27, 1882.
Mr. Peter Lawler has been a resident of this town for the past seventeen years, and in our employ for fifteen years, and in all these years he has been a good and respected citizen of this town and community. He has had some chronic disease to our knowledge for most of the time, but now claims to be, and is, in apparent good health. CHAS. O. BROWN, President.

DALTON, Mass., June 9, 1884.
Dr. Kennedy—Dear Friend:—Thinking you might like to hear again from an old patient, I am going to write you. It is now three and a half years since first I went to see you. As I told you then I was troubled with kidney disease for about fifteen years, and had seven of the best doctors to be found; but I received only temporary relief until I visited you and commenced taking your "Favorite Remedy." I continue taking the Remedy according to your directions, and now consider myself a well man. Very gratefully yours, PETER LAWLER.

Our letter of April 27, 1882, holds good as far as Mr. Lawler's testimony is concerned, regarding his health. CHAS. O. BROWN.

An Enterprise which Bids Fair to Grow into a Large and Lucrative Business.

All the old residents in this part of Lenawee County have heard of the "Easlick" saw mill, located on the Ridge road in Macon, about two miles northeast of Ridgeway village. Alex. Easlick, the proprietor of the mill, has lived on the old farm for thirty-two years and has run the saw mill for the past twenty-four years. The farm has engaged his attention in summer and the saw mill in winter. Last fall he bought a Tiffany machine of A. Brewer & Co. of this village and began the manufacture of brick. When spring opened in 1884 he erected the necessary buildings and began the manufacture of tile on an extensive scale. The old saw mill serves as a building for the engine and boiler brick machine etc. and will be used for the purpose of a saw mill in the winter season. The engine is a good twenty horse power; the boiler is a new thirty horse power bought this last spring at the Eagle Iron Works in Detroit. The drying shed is 118 feet long by 20 feet wide and two stories. The upper story of the saw mill is also used for drying. There are two kilns for burning, each of which holds about 70,000 brick and 50,000 tile, and one kiln is burned every fortnight. The tile is piled in the middle of the kiln and the outer courses are of brick. At first his clay was taken from a bank near the mill on high ground. It made a good quality of light colored tile. About the 1st of July last Mr. Easlick conceived the idea of digging a hole on the "flats" and trying a layer of clay in that. To his surprise the clay was much heavier and finer than the up land clay. It contains about one part of iron, two parts of fine sand and seven parts of solid blue clay. It burns beautifully and makes a very smooth hard dark red tile which Mr. Easlick claims to be much superior to the old light colored tile. They do not crack or shell at all and make a very handsome, serviceable tile. A track is built from the mill to the clay pit and a car run thereon which is hauled to the mill by a chain and windlass. The clay is dumped from this car into a box, from which it is shoveled into the machine. Alex. McPherson, the burner, has had 18 years experience in the business, and he superintends the kilns, while Mr. Easlick himself superintends the inside work. A full set of hands consists of ten men. The works are situated 2½ miles from Britton station on the Wabash and about the same distance from Ridgeway station on the M. & O. They are located on the "ridge road", which is one of the best highways in this section of the state. Mr. Easlick himself is the postmaster at Lake Ridge, and that of course is his postoffice address. Nearly every farm east of the ridge road and to the lake will be laid with tile within the next ten years, and he expects a ready market for all he can make. He makes and keeps in stock all the standard sizes of tile. He has had ready sale thus far for all the brick he could make, and expects to increase his facilities for brick making next season.

Special meeting of Tecumseh lodge, No. 69, F. & A. M., on Friday evening, Sept. 19. Work in the second degree.

Tom Kyle and Chet Haynes have formed a partnership and will shoe horses and iron wagons in company hereafter.

Lavern Wheeler has a sample case of landscape views in the post-office. He is taking large numbers of these views this season.

F. S. Dewey, merchant of Alpena, Mich., has been visiting at his father's, F. A. Dewey's, in Cambridge also with Tecumseh friends.

Miss Emma Conklin, who has been living at Peoria, Ill., with her sister, Mrs. J. C. Barney, for the past two years, returned to her home in this village on Friday last.

The happiest man in Franklin is Dell Cairns, and the cause is an eight pound baby who made its appearance last Friday night. Grandpa Ben Reynolds. How queer it sounds.

O. P. Bills came home from Petoskey last Thursday, filed his acceptance as trustee of the school board and returned on Friday. He will remain there until the hay fever season is over.

The latest in dress for gentlemen is the "Father Hubbard." Simply drop the suspenders and wear the shirt loose over the top of your pants, instead of tucking it in, and you have the "Father Hubbard."

We would not strike a woman under any circumstances, but we must acknowledge that when we see a girl wearing one of those horrible garments known as "Mother Hubbards," we feel inclined to give her a belt.

The McGibeny family which are to appear at the Opera House next Tuesday evening need no commendation from us. They are a wonderful musical family and we trust our citizens will greet them with a full attendance.

On next Tuesday afternoon at 3:30 there will be a game of base ball between a band of Pottawatamie Indians and the Tecumseh club, at Bills' Park, Tecumseh. Admission to the grounds, 25 cents. This will be a very exciting game.

The Baptist pastors of this county met at Devil's Lake last week to talk over the project of establishing a Baptist resort there after the plan of the Chautauqua resort. Mr. Beardsell agreed to give them a free lease for twenty years of enough land for their purposes, and take stock in the enterprise also to the amount of $5,000. It is proposed to raise $50,000 in stock, that amount being considered necessary to erect buildings and put the company on a sound basis.—Rev. C. E. Conley, of Tecumseh, is one of the leading spirits in the enterprise and feels sanguine that the proposed amount will be raised.

Gen. Butler has made one sad mistake. He failed to stop at Tecumseh on his western trip.

Mr. and Mrs. P. C. Mills celebrated their golden wedding yesterday afternoon at their residence in Adrian.

W. B. Keyser, of Clinton, is one of the jurymen in the murder case of Vreeland-Rickard now on trial at Adrian.

Shavings! If you can't rest at Temple's planing mill. These shavings will be given away in any quantity from a half pint to a car load.

The exhibition given at the skating rink by the celebrated boy skater last Thursday evening, was well worth going to see. It was just immense.

Mrs. H. E. Stout has sold out her stock of millinery to Mrs. H. Jennie Brown, of Plymouth. We hear Mrs. Brown intends to reopen the rooms on Monday next.

George Heesen steps to the front with a column ad. descriptive of the bargains to be found at the Union Hall Clothing store. When you buy your new clothes give Mr. Heesen a call.

The firm of Drs. House & Jones has been dissolved. Dr. Jones will remain at the old office over Lilley, Bidwell & Co's bank until further notice. The Doctor will fit up an office on Chicago street within a few days.

Miss Ede Woodward, daughter of D. C. M. Woodward, celebrated her birth day yesterday evening by a party to her youthful friends who were present very nicely entertained.

There was a large attendance at the South Macon church last Tuesday evening to witness the installation of the new pastor, Rev. Chas. S. Dutton. Rev. D. Van Pelt of Long Island, Prof. Dutton, of Hope College, and Rev. Williamson, of South Bend, assisted in the services.

The wearing of the Mother Hubbard dress, unbelted, has been prohibited at Mattoon, Ill., because they scare horses, cause dogs to go mad, turn the heads of worthy citizens, and cause the wooden Indians in front of cigar stores to tumble and throw dust in their fiery eyes.

A large party of young people from Franklin and Tecumseh met at Abner Wilson's last evening and passed a most enjoyable time. A good company, excellent refreshments and plenty of music made up an evening's entertainment for which the guests extend their hearty thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Wilson.

Prof. Samuel Dickie, who was Chairman of the National Prohibition Convention, will address the people at the Opera House in Tecumseh on Saturday next at 3 o'clock P. M. Prof. Dickie is an eloquent speaker, and is justly entitled to rank among the best political orators of Michigan. Turn out and hear the issues of the day discussed.

At the Democratic caucus held last Tuesday evening the following delegates were chosen to the County Convention to be held to-morrow. Alfred James, Geo. A. Kies, H. H. Keyser, James Boyd, Frank Davidson, J. F. N. Bowen. To the Representative Convention: A. P. Coddington, D. McNair, Harry Root, J. W. Benedict, J. Aten, Horatio Keyser.

We have set apart a column or two of the HERALD for the use of the Union party in this vicinity. Since the removal of the Union Light they have no organ in this county. While the HERALD is not a prohibition paper, it believes in free speech and fair play and hence it grants this favor. The temperance department will be edited by a committee of Unionists who will be responsible for what it contains.

The new grounds of the Lenawee County Fair Society, near the Wabash depot, Adrian, are being put in good shape for the coming exhibition. The buildings and fences are completed; water from the city works is to be brought to the grounds; the fine half-mile track is being put in good rig and all other details perfected for an interesting and profitable show of the productions and manufactures of old Lenawee. Remember the dates—Sept. 23 to 26, inclusive.

The Republicans had their first meeting of the campaign at the Opera House last Thursday evening. The Adrian City band furnished music, and speeches were delivered by Capt. Allen and Gen. Jasper Packard, of Indiana. The weather was fearfully hot, which interfered somewhat with the attendance, but there was a good crowd out notwithstanding, and the meeting was a success. We noticed several Adrian Republicans in attendance, also the Hon. J. K. Boies, of Hudson.

Mrs. St. John's Musical Convention at Macon will give a grand concert Saturday evening at Macon Corners. The convention has been largely attended and the large chorus has been in constant drill the past two weeks. Some of the very best local talent will appear in the solo, duett and quartette singing and assistance in instrumental music has been secured from abroad. It is intended to make the concert the event of the season at Macon.

SWINGING AROUND THE CIRCLE.

Week before last we spent two days among our friends in the country and last week two days more. By a slight confusion of dates and a slight draft upon the imagination we can consolidate the two trips into one, and make a respectable chapter of our wanderings.

Starting out one fine morning with the thermometer in the eighties and the determination of making at least fifteen calls that day, we, first, but it was at Isaac C. Hendershot's on the old Saline road, who now owns and lives upon the old Stones farm. Mr. Hendershot lets the boys run the farm while he devotes his time, as of yore, to building barns. He is now at work upon a large barn for John Clarkson in Macon.

Geo. W. Hendershot was found at home and feeling happy. He works a farm of one hundred acres and is getting a good start in life. With his good health and habits of industry he is destined to become one of the best farmers in that section.

Mike Hendershot was not at home so we lost a chat with him. We know he is prospering however—he always has, if we except his investment in the People's bank.

John Clarkson has one of the model farms of Macon, of about one hundred acres. He has a fine residence and builds a new barn nearly every summer. Isaac Hendershot is building the last one at the present time. Mr. Clarkson has good dinners at his house also, as we found out after a personal trial.

Frank DePuy is well fixed and has as fine a farm as any man need ask for. He has a quarter section in the southwest corner of Macon, and although his farm is off the main thorough-fare between Ridgeway and Tecumseh it is a beautiful farm and a most pleasant home. Mr. DePuy's business operations are quite extensive and he takes considerable interest in politics as a pastime.

Frank Davidson's "Brook Farm" makes him a most pleasant home. He has the John Whitenack homestead together with a good slice of "Uncle Sims" old farm. An evening at Frank's with your girl is most agreeably spent. His ambition is to farm it well, enjoy life and bring up his family in the way they should go, and we have every reason to believe that his ambition is fully realized.

Wm. R. Wilson still abides on the old homestead. The children have all left home and started in life for themselves, while Mr. Wilson still runs the old farm of 175 acres and takes an especial pride in raising big wheat crops.

We halted at Sam Rappleye's, hitched the horse under the maples and went to the house. No one was in, but we found two large baskets of pears in the kitchen. We sampled a few of them and filled our pockets, and just then the family dog appeared on the scene. Carlo showed his teeth, elevated his caudal appendage and proceeded to say in the most emphatic dog language that he considered us an intruder, and we'd better light out. So we lit out.

Hastening on we arrived at Mike Martin's at high noon, and accepted an invitation to dine with him. Mr. Martin is managing his new place and also twenty acres on the old farm, having one hundred acres in all to take care of. He also assists Milan Sage every fall in his sorgum business. He has boiled sap for many years and understands all the details of making good molasses. Our visit at Mr. Martin's was a very pleasant one.

Our next stop was at Alex. Easlick's on the Ridge, where we spent an hour in looking over his brick & tile works. The result of our observations is recorded in another column.

We passed a couple of hours to good advantage, circulating around the village of Ridgeway. At the last school meeting, a vote was passed to raise $3000 for the erection of a new schoolhouse, something which the village has needed for many years. The project of a new grist mill is assuming shape, and work upon it will be commenced at an early day. G. W. Clark & Son still hold forth at the old corner store. Peter Sharp, the veteran postmaster of these parts is still at work for "Uncle Sam" and retailing drugs, groceries and notions to a regular line of customers. S. P. Smith has a good trade in the grocery line and seems to be satisfied with the general outlook. Coryell, Lawton & Co., are working up a good trade in hardware, while S. Helm's harness shop has become a fixture in his fine new building.

Warren Jones manages the old Hall farm south of the village. He cultivates 200 acres of land, harvested 34 acres of wheat this year which yielded abundantly. He is very handsomely situated. As our call here was after dark, we had to forego the pleasure of looking over the farm.

G. P. Waring is fully engrossed with business and politics. His new residence is a model of beauty and convenience, and he is now grading down the lawn and putting a fountain in front of the house. He still conducts the undertaking business and owns an interest in the saw mill at Britton. He is an enthusiastic Unionist, being one of the electors on the St. John & Daniel ticket, and is frequently called upon to make speeches in behalf of the prohibition candidates, and they say he makes a first rate speech too.

Wm. H. Arner is still making wagons and dispensing justice as of yore, although business is rather dull now in both lines. Justice court business is not what it was in an early day, when horse trades were of almost daily occurrence and about half of them ended in a law suit. But his Honor holds the scales of justice evenly when litigants give him a chance.

Jay A. Santus is the same good natured mortal he always was and is still town clerk. His friends claim that he has a life lease on that office.

Rev. W. M. Campbell is well pleased with his Ridgeway settlement. He has one of the best M. E. Churches in this district, and the church has never been more prosperous than under his charge. We hope he will be returned to Ridgeway another year.

Samuel Barlow now lives on the old Freer farm, containing about 80 acres, and in addition he owns 60 acres on the old place south of Britton station. Mr. Barlow has not got his present home all paid for, but is getting on finely, and will soon be "out of the woods."

G. Pocklington owns 53 acres of as good land as lays out doors, and has a most pleasant home. He had a fine crop of wheat this season. As he is pretty well along in years he is thinking of selling out and taking a rest. Any one wanting a good home and a small farm would do well to give him a call.

John Larkin, although 77 years of age, is still hale and hearty, and spends most of his time selling the Humbolt washing machine, of which he has worked up a good sale.

Leaving Ridgeway behind we traveled on to Britton, and arrived at John Britton's exactly at noon, where we rested for refreshments. Mr. Britton has a large force of men at work now on his new store, and hence has quite a large family. The store is all completed except some inside finishing. It is a fine two story building, which will be used for a dry goods and general store and post office below, and a public hall above. The hall is 26 by 60 feet in size with an ante-room eight feet wide. It will be used for a G. A. R. hall and for other general purposes. Mr. Britton and J. C. Winnie will open a large stock of goods therein at an early day.

Jos. Exelby is also building a two story "brick veneer" building on the south side of the street. It will contain two large stores, one of which (and perhaps both) will be occupied by Mr. Rauch, who will move his stock from his present building into the new one when completed. The second story of the new building Mr. Exelby will rent for miscellaneous purposes.

J. C. Winnie is the manager of the postoffice, and judging from what people say, he is the right man in the right place.

Will J. Clark runs the depot and express office and has become a fixture at Britton, having taken up his permanent residence there with his family.

Dr. Kallock is becoming acquainted and is getting a good ride. He occupies a neat cottage in the eastern part of the village.

Rev. Borden has a pleasant home about half a mile north of Britton. We stopped there and got a drink of cool water and had a short chat with him. He has charge of the Reformed Church which is located about two miles east of his residence. Both pastor and people are well suited with each other.

C. A. Kniffin has a fine farm of 120 acres with good buildings. He is planting the foundation for a good property. Has five children, three of whom are boys, and he is training them up in the way they should go. He keeps no hired man. He runs the farm with the help of the boys.

Wm. P. Emons has 62 acres of land which furnish him a good living, as he is not ambitious to get rich or to run for the legislature. It is rather singular that some pretty woman does not get an eye on that farm and capture the owner of it. She would gain a prize worth working for.

DELIGHTED WITH FLORIDA

ITS FRUITS AND ITS CLIMATE UNSURPASSED ANYWHERE IN THE WORLD.

Dr. C. S. Hurlbut, of Springfield Mass. writes to "The Homestead," from Welaka, Fla., under date of March 25th, 1884, as follows:

All who go to Florida feel that they have a right to express an opinion of the land and the people, if they have only seen the St. Johns River which gives the traveler about as correct an impression as he would have of Springfield by going through the city at midnight on a Pulman sleeper; and whenever two return laden with choice clusters which they have gathered, ten bring back an evil report. I notice that no lukewarm expressions ever come back from the sunny land—the like and dislike is strong. This is the third successive year that I have traveled over the State, and I have noticed that most of the "dislikers" or grumblers are those who remain on the low swampy lands and live at the "best hotels," such as you find at Jacksonville, Palatka, Sanford, on the St. Johns river. Even at St. Augustine, on the seacoast, the same result is noticed. They came from the land of ice and snow and mud; they have reached a land of perpetual summer, for even the winter months are like May and June in New England.

The future of Florida is great, for the early and semi-tropical products will always command a good price in northern markets. I wish to mention a few cases of many that have fallen under my own observation, showing the results of patience, energy and capital. I can point out to you an orange tree which a lady planted nineteen years ago. Last year she sold the fruit on the tree for a cent apiece. It had 1500 oranges and the packer paid her $15. Fifty such trees would require only one acre of good land. In Eaton grove is one tree, now 50 years old the fruit of one year's crop of which has been sold for $250. If one has money, a grove can be bought that is already bearing, and considered as sure and safe investment as bank stock—perhaps safer. A lady from Chicago purchased a grove on the St. John's river, a few years ago, for less than $6000. Last year she sold the fruit for $5000. It cost only $800 to care for the grove. A gentleman from New York bought a twelve-year-bearing grove of 22 acres for $20,000. He remarked to me, "I had the money in government bonds and I thought that grove would pay better than 4 per cent." The first year he sold his fruit for $2200; the second year for $3700 net; and this year his crop brot him $9000. This grove will continue to produce more and more each year for 20 years with proper care.

Oranges are not all that Florida will produce, but fortunes will be made in other products, as two other cases I will mention will prove. Mr. R., in Volusia county, finished setting 1¼ acres of strawberries Oct. 12, 1882. January 12th, 1883, just three months after setting the plants, he commenced picking his fruit. Up to March 12th he had picked and sold over 3,500 qts, which had averaged $1.25 a quart. Strawberries continue to ripen on the same plants from December to June. A man near Gainesville, six years ago, ran into debt for his land, and, after repeated failures, last year sold 16,000 crates of tomatoes, from which he cleared over $1 per crate.

I cannot close without adding that with all its agricultural wealth and the faith that I have in the future of this great state, the emphasis is to be placed on the climate. To enjoy that one must go there and live there. It is a paradise for children. The pure light and air, the outdoor life, give health and joy even to the sickly ones who are brought here, while those who are born healthy seldom die under twenty years of age. The old and feeble come here, and years are added to life, and life made comfortable. Last year sixty thousand excursion tickets were sold to Jacksonville, and every year the number increases. It will always be the great sanitarium of the United States and the world, for even Italy, with all that has been sung and said of its delightful climate, yields the palm to Florida.

The Gospel temperance meetings began Monday evening at the Opera House under the management of James M. Dunn, of Sidney Ohio. Mr. Dunn is a fine speaker and good temperance worker. The three meetings already held have been well attended, the interest increasing each evening. Over 60 pledges were taken the first evening and nearly as many more Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. The revival will continue during the remainder of the week.

Right to the point

The Rev. J. E. Searles, of New York, is one of the most widely-known and highly esteemed of Methodist ministers.

Mr. Searles says: "I am impressed that it is a duty I owe to those afflicted with Rheumatism of Neuralgia, to say that a remedy has been discovered that is indeed a marvelous success. My son was greatly afflicted with Rheumatism, and suffered so severely that, at times, he was obliged to take morphine to relieve the pain to get relief. While in this condition he discovered a remedy which effected immediate relief, and a permanent cure. He has since furnished it to many others with the same result. I have also furnished it to a number of persons suffering with Rheumatism, and the result has been immediate relief, and a permanent cure. Among others, I gave it to Rev. Wm. P. Corbit, pastor of the George St. M. E. Church, New Haven, Conn., who was suffering greatly with this terrible disease. I will give you his own words as written to my son, wishing him to publish the fact for the benefit of others suffering with the same disease."

What Mr. Corbit Says:

"New Haven, July [illegible]

"Mr. Searles—Dear Sir:—I wish to say for the benefit of all who are suffering with Inflammatory Rheumatism, that your medicine is infallible. I suffered for two months the most excruciating torture; lost 15 pounds of flesh, and was not out of my house for a month. I heard of your remedy, and was almost instantly relieved by it. If there is a specific for disease of any kind, yours most certainly is for Inflammatory Rheumatism in its severest form.

"Yours most respectfully, WM. P. CORBIT,

"Pastor George St. M. E. Church, New Haven, Conn."

Such is ATHLOPHOROS—a thorough and efficient cure for the worst cases of Rheumatism and Neuralgia.

If you cannot get ATHLOPHOROS of your druggist, we will send it express paid, on receipt of regular price—one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it from your druggist, but if he hasn't it, do not be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us as directed.

AYER'S PILLS.

A large proportion of the diseases which cause human suffering result from derangement of the stomach, bowels, and liver. AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS act directly upon these organs, and are especially designed to cure the diseases caused by their derangement, including Constipation, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Headache, Dysentery, and a host of other ailments, for all of which they are a safe, sure, prompt and pleasant remedy. The extensive use of these Pills by eminent physicians in regular practice, shows unmistakably the estimate in which they are held by the medical profession.

These Pills are compounded of vegetable substances only, and are absolutely free from calomel or any other injurious ingredient.

A Sufferer from Headache writes:

"AYER'S PILLS are invaluable to me, for I am my constant companion. I have been a severe sufferer from Headache, and your Pills are the only thing I can look to for relief. One dose will quickly remove my troubles and free my head from pain. They are the most effective and the easiest physic I have ever found. It is a pleasure to me to speak in their praise, and I always do so when occasion offers."

W. L. PAGE, of W. L. Page & Bro., Franklin St., Richmond, Va., June 5, 1882.

"I have used AYER'S PILLS in numberless instances as recommended by you, and have never known them to fail to give the desired result. We constantly keep them on hand at our home, and prize them as a pleasant, safe, and reliable family medicine. FOR DYSPEPSIA they are invaluable."

J. T. HAYES.

Mexia, Texas, June 17, 1882.

The Rev. FRANCIS B. HARROWER, writing from Atlanta, Ga., says: "For some years past I have been subject to constipation, from which, in spite of the use of medicines of various kinds, I suffered increasing inconvenience, until some months ago I began taking AYER'S PILLS. They have entirely corrected the costive habit, and have vastly improved my general health."

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS correct irregularities of the bowels, stimulate the appetite and digestion, and by their prompt and thorough action give tone and vigor to the whole physical economy.

Modern Samaria.

The modern village is very insignificant. Josephus says that it received its name of Sebastia from Herod, in honor of Augustus. The city has been sacked and plundered times without number. Upon its extreme summit Ahab had its famous ivory palace, and this acropolis constituted the capital of the ten tribes, until they were carried captive into Assyria. The modern remains, which are the finest I have seen in the Holy Land outside of Jerusalem, only date back nominally to the time of Herod, of course, but it is doubtless true that Herod employed much of the material of former ages in creating his splendid structures, in which event the debris represents a pre-Herodian antiquity. Against the city for its idolatry, Micah and Hosea launched forth the invectives of prophecy: "I will make Samaria as a heap of the field, and as plantings of a vineyard, and I will pour down the stones thereof into the valley, and I will discover the foundations thereof." "Samaria shall become desolate; for she hath rebelled against her God; they shall fall by the sword, their infants shall be dashed to pieces," etc. There have been numerous literal fulfilments of these predictions. Looking down into the valleys as we rode around the hill, we frequently discovered broken columns and building rubbish.

We rode completely around the hill, a circuit of about two miles, tracing the remains of Herod's magnificent colonnade.

There were evidently four rows of columns clear around the hill supporting a porch above. The porch has vanished, but a great many of the massive columns are still standing. Other pillars are broken in two, lie prostrate, or are utilized in the construction of stone walls. We counted nearly 100, and Mr. Floyd says that the great majority have either been destroyed by the natives or carted away to Europe to occupy niches in museums. The level place at the extreme top of the hill was adorned by sixteen very large columns. It was doubtless in the general inclosure that the great temple of Baal stood, which was utterly destroyed by Jehu, after he had received the heads of Ahab's seventy sons in baskets at the gate of Jezreel, and mercilessly slaughtered all the priests of Baal, as recorded in the tenth chapter of the Second Kings.

It was very near Samaria that Elisha dwelt when the horses and chariot of Naaman, the Damascene leper, halted before the door of his humble home. Now, as then, leprosy holds carnival in Damascus, and is regarded as incurable as it was by the King of Israel when he rent his clothes under the impression that the audacious Naaman was a tool of Benhadad's to pick a quarrel with him. Grasping, penurious Gehazi was made to inherit the leprosy of the Syrian captain, which "should cleave unto his seed forever." Perhaps some of the modern Nabious lepers are the inheritors of this fearful legacy of Gehazi. My impression is that it was dreadfully stupid of Naaman to put confidence in the word of a native like Gehazi.

What terrible agony there must have been in Samaria during that memorable siege of the indefatigable Benhadad. After having traveled through the Orient it does not seem at all incredible to me that the people resorted to doves' dung for food, until it actually became a costly luxury (II Kings vi., 25).

Not only did Elijah and Elisha work wonders in Samaria, but even the Apostles wrought miracles and preached there. The revival which was started by Philip, who far eclipsed the witcheries exercised by Simon the Sorcerer, induced the Apostles who had remained behind in Jerusalem to re-enforce him by sending Peter and John thither. Then was the Holy Ghost given, which Simon sought to buy with money (the first impulse of an Oriental when he thinks there is no chance of getting a thing as a free gift). We were shown the ruins of an interesting cathedral, known as the Church of St. John, in which, it is claimed, the beloved disciple met his death. These ruins are architecturally interesting.—Jerusalem Cor. N. O. Times-Democrat.

Itch.

This is a well-known disease of the skin, inflamed and irritated, appearing in small watery pustules or vesicles, in which a small insect, a species of acarus, is found. It is contracted only by contact, though it may be developed by uncleanly habits, by filth of the body, as the first case must have been. It is seen between the fingers especially, and in places exposed to unusual heat or friction. It is believed by standard authors that most of such diseases result from grossness of living, or, as one says, "the absence of water, soap, flesh-brushes and coarse towels, and by the use of fried pork, salt ham, sausages, old cheese, fried cakes, cooked burnt fats of all kinds, stimulating drinks, as hard cider, acid wines, and ardent spirits."

Of course, while prevention is best, something may be done for the removal, though much has been done in the past to drive the disease in, and actually poison the system, such as the application of lead, mercury, arsenic, turpentine, corrosive sublimate, gunpowder and whisky, gin and salts, white and red precipitate ointments, etc., etc., applied with the intention of killing something, while the escape of the patient is a marvel.

Now, it is quite certain that cleanliness will do more good and less harm than these violent poisons, such as application as soap suds, thorough washings, and correct habits. If one can not wait and work for three or four days, and must do something fashionable or "scientific," sulphur applied externally—it need not be combined with lard, but with glycerine, or even water—will effect as much good as the poisonous irritants, and be far safer. A little a fourth of a table-spoonful morning and night, in water—may be taken at the same time, using the soap-suds with great freedom. "Cleanliness is next to godliness." And here I may add, never drive any eruption in; never attempt to make the skin smooth by any doubtful applications.—Dr. J. H. Hanford, in Golden Rule.

The Torpedo Bell-Knob.

The Man with the Cold Tea Scheme looked morose and uncomfortable as he masticated a toothpick and corrugated his brow. His looks were so unanimously unsocial that the Thin Man Without a Shirt Collar hesitated to address him. But at last sympathetic fellowship, tinged with curiosity, overcame his hesitancy, and the Thin Man politely inquired:

"Anything wrong, Mr. Gosborn?"

"Nothing special," somewhat snappingly responded the Cold Tea Man.

"Ain't got over your Fourth yet?"

"Ain't been on no Fourth."

"Couldn't you get a patriot's pass to Chicago?"

"Didn't want none."

"Tell us your excitement, Mr. Gosborn," said the Thin Man, persuasively.

"Why, darnfy," said the Cold Tea Man, "I am simply disgusted. The best and most disinterested actions of a man's life are liable to be misconstrued, and oftimes the purest of motives are distorted by circumstances into deliberated wrongs, while our very kindnesses bring us enemies."

"Gosh!" said the Thin Man.

"It's a fact. Yes, sir, a solid fact."

"Look at me. I've got one of the best mothers-in-laws in the world. She's great on putting up preserves and pickles and jams and things, and besides that she makes the finest butter I have ever eaten. She's liberal, too, and keeps Sarah and me well supplied. But like all old people she is whimsical and takes affront easy, and when she ascends to the pinnacle of her ear it's a month of Sundays before she comes down."

"But what has all that to do with unrequited affections?" asked the Thin Man.

"Just this. I'm living in a neighborhood where there are a great many mischievous boys. In fact, the locality is full of them. I don't see what people want with so many boys. Common sense ought to tell them that the market is overstocked, and ——"

"A producers' shut-down movement ought to be inaugurated, you think," suggested the Thin Man.

"Well, yes, somethin' of that sort. You see these little rascals have got in the habit of pulling my door bell just for the fun of hearing me come to the door and swear. It's got to be a terrible nuisance, and Sarah and I put our heads together to find some way to stop it. We just wanted to scare them—not hurt them, you know. At last I invented a great scheme. I bored three gimblet holes just back of the bell knob and put powder in them. Then I fixed a percussion cap on behind, so that when the door knob was pulled it would explode the powder and give the little rascals a good fright."

"That was a great scheme."

"O, yes, it was a great scheme, but it kicked. I fixed it all up to work like a clock, and yesterday afternoon Sarah and I sat quiet in the front hall awaiting for the boys to come and take a pull. Presently we heard a step on the front stoop, and Sarah says, 'There they come!' 'Keep quiet,' says I, 'now there'll be fun.' And just then the door bell was jerked and the powder went off with a fizz and a bang, and there was the greatest clawing, screaming and tumbling down steps that I ever heard in my life. I jumped up and threw the door open, and there lay Sarah's mother in a fit on the sidewalk. She'd just come to town to give us a surprise visit, and had got caught on that infernal door-knob. All the explanation in the world would not satisfy her. As soon as she could stand up she went off vowing we were savages and had made an attempt on her life to get her property, and this year we will have to do without preserves and country butter."—Philadelphia Chronicle.

C. O. D.

A man who had not been long in this country was employed as a domestic in a family, and upon one occasion he was sent to the express office to obtain a package. He was about to leave with it when the clerk called his attention to the three letters C. O. D.

Pat had no idea what the letters meant, but he cleverly guessed at them.

"It's all right," he said; "the owld man's good for the money."

"But you know what these letters say, Pat?"

"Indade I do. Call On Dad. It's as plane as the nose on your face."

There is almost a pathetic truth in the understanding conveyed in this old story. Many a man is hounded to death by the unreasonable calls made upon him by members of his family who are educated up to this very end by himself, at first in that fond, slavish spirit of indulgence which the American father displays toward his offspring, as if it were some kind of an unthinking mechanical pet, and afterwards on the unfailing principle that they who sow the wind will reap the whirlwind.

Call on dad.

Business is dull, notes must be met, but appearances must be kept up. Mrs. Shoddy is going to the sea shore. "Our girls" must go, the money is to come out of "Dad."

At first he refuses firmly, but as one reason after another is brought to bear on him, like a battering-ram of persuasion, he gives way. New bonnets and dresses are bought, a railway journey's expenses defrayed, and that is only the beginning. Incidental expenses are always the straws that break the patient camel's back. They accumulate in heaps, stacks, and at last rise to the dignity of a monument, under which lies a pale, peaceful man, no longer pursued by the legend: "Call on Dad."—Detroit Free Press.

Where the Best is Made.

They were talking about ice cream. She led the conversation, while George sustained his part in a monosyllabic sort of way.

"No," she continued, brightly, "poor ice cream is worse than none at all."

"Very true," assented George.

"I wouldn't eat ice cream unless I could get the best."

"Nor I."

"Yes, I must have the best or none at all. Do you know, George, where the best ice cream is made?"

"O, yes," he said.

"Where?"

"Europe."—N. Y. Sun.

Thousands Hastened to their Graves

By relying on testimonials written in vivid glowing language of some miraculous cures made by some largely puffed up doctor or patent medicine has hastene thousands to their graves; the readers having almost in same faith that the same miracle will be performed on them, that these testimonials mention, while the so called medicine is all the time hastening them to their graves. Although we have of testimonials of the most wonderful cures, voluntarily sent us, we do not publish them, as they do not make the cures. It is our medicine, Hop Bitters, that make the cures. It has never failed and never can. We will give reference to any one for any disease similar to their own if desired, or will refer to any neighbor, as there is not a neighborhood in the known world but can show its cures by Hop Bitters.

A Losing Joke.

A prominent physician of Pittsburg said to a lady patient who was complaining of her continued ill health, and of his inability to cure her, jokingly said: "Try Hop Bitters!" The lady took it in earnest and used the Bitters, from which she obtained permanent health. She now laughed at the doctor for his joke, but he is not so well pleased with it, as it cost him a good patient.

Fees of Doctors.

The fee of doctors at $3.00 a visit would tax a man for a year, and in need of a daily visit, over $1,000 a year for medical attendance alone. And one single bottle of Hop Bitters taken in time would save the $1,000 and all the year's sickness.

Given up by the Doctors'

"Is it possible that Mr. Godfrey is up and at work, and cured by so simple a remedy?"

"I assure you it is true that he is entirely cured, and with nothing but Hop Bitters, and only ten days ago his doctors gave him up and said he must die, from Kidney and Liver trouble."

IGNORING THE LAW.—The use of ammonia, starch, &c., should be prohibited by the law in the manufacture of Baking Powder. Such a law has been passed in New York state and seems to be ignored by all but three manufacturers, the most prominent of which is DeLand's Chemical Baking Powder, of Fairport, N. Y. This was found to contain nothing but Cream Tartar and Soda, both of excellent quality and was their standard formula before the law was passed, and we notice that our grocers are passing it over their counter to an appreciative public.

DR. A. HRASKY'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest healing compound of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Sore Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Scrofulous, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame, every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it cures [illegible] with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years,

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its greatness is such that we do not have to resort to insert any of the numerous testimonials of cures which we know from all parts of the country. We simply ask those readers of this advertisement who have ever used this Ointment, to kindly state their experience with it to their friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we would be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet wrapper of each bottle.

Prices, 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

AYER'S Ague Cure

contains an antidote for all malarial disorders which, so far as known, is used in no other remedy. It contains no Quinine, nor any mineral nor deleterious substance whatever, and consequently produces no injurious effect upon the constitution, but leaves the system as healthy as it was before the attack.

WE WARRANT AYER'S AGUE CURE

to cure every case of Fever and Ague, Intermittent or Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Bilious Fever, and Liver Complaint caused by malaria. In case of failure, after due trial, dealers are authorized, by our circular dated July 1st, 1882, to refund the money.

TECUMSEH, MICH., SEPT. 11, 1884.

GIVE THE BOYS TIME.

The old man sat in the summer sun,
The air was sweet with the clover scent;
More than eighty years old was he,
Full of honor and calm content.
And pleasant yet was the windy wheat,
And the workers, busy among the hay,
And the children's voices, strong and sweet,
In and out of his house all day.

Some of his children were turning gray,
Some had gathered them good and fame;
But, in their lives, a question rose,
All of them still to father came.
It was: "Father, what do you think of this?"
"Do you think it wise for me buy?"
"Will it be prudent now to sell?"

One afternoon a neighbor called.
"Friend," he said, "you've a wonderful way;
Your children all treasure your fathers word;
My boys scarce notice a thing I say."
The old man turned, with a smiling face:
"Give your boys time, and they will do;
I hadn't a son but at twenty years
Knew more than his father ever knew.

"At twenty-five they began to think
Father was not very far behind;
At thirty, in every doubtful case
They were ready to go by father's mind.
Give your boys time; they'll grow to your thought,
Turn to your methods, and follow your way;
Ten years hence they will likely smile
When they think of the boys they are today."

TAMMANY HALL.

History of a Famous New York Organization, and the Purposes for Which it Was Founded—Interesting Reminiscences of Its Early Days.

Tammany Hall just at present engages considerable attention, and a history of that institution may not prove uninteresting. It has always possessed a bearing on the political history and has passed through many brilliant victories and overwhelming defeats. The predecessor of Tammany was the old organization known as the Liberty Boys, which, previous to the American revolution, flourished extensively in New York. It was the custom of these Liberty Boys to erect liberty poles, as they were called, with appropriate ceremonies, and these proceedings were extremely obnoxious to the British troops. The latter often vented their spleen by leveling these poles to the earth. At first the Liberty Boys were content to remain passive spectators, but as the spirit of opposition to tyranny began to strengthen, they became bolder and conflicts often ensued. These were the first blows struck in a contest that ended with the entire freedom of the colonies from British rule.

The Liberty Boys had many original ballads which they sang around their liberty poles. The most popular song, however, was the "Liberty Tree," composed by Thomas Paine, the author of "The Age of Reason," and published in the Pennsylvania Magazine, July, 1775, while Paine was editor of that periodical. The refrain was:

"From the east to the west, blow the trumpet to arms,
Thro' the land let the sound of it flee;
Let the far and the near all unite with a cheer,
In defense of our Liberty Tree."

At the close of the great struggle there were many conflicting views in regard to the form of Government to be adopted. The rich Tories, who still clung fondly to the forms of the mother country, wished a second edition of England's Government. The Whigs, who were allied to the Tories in spirit, differed in their views and wished a consolidated form of Government, with a dictator at its head and a Senate whose members should hold office for life. Both parties desired to return to all the aristocratic features of England. The Democrats desired a constitutional form as the object for which the fathers of the revolution had pledged "their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor." Thus, until the adoption of the Constitution in 1789, there were two parties—the Tories, allied with the Whigs, and the Democrats. After the adoption of the present Constitution the Tories and the Whigs united and were thenceforth known as Federalists. The most prominent leader was General Schuyler, while George Clinton was the acknowledged head of the Democratic party. In May, 1789, was founded the Tammany Society, or Columbian Order. Its character at first was not entirely political, but partook of a benevolent nature. One of the aims was to bring the Indians of the surrounding country to a more thorough knowledge of the advantages of trade. It may be remarked that the number of votes polled in the city of New York the year previous to the formation of the society was only 3,000, while Albany polled 5,000. On July 22, 1790, Alexander McGillvany, a half-breed Cherokee Indian, educated in Europe, arrived in New York, accompanied by a delegation of thirty kings and chiefs. The latter were brought to the city by Colonel Marinus Willet, who had been delegated by General Washington to perform that duty, the object being to make a treaty with the Indians in regard to the purchase of a large tract of land. On this occasion we find the first public appearance of the Tammany Society. The members assembled at the wigwam and marched to the Battery, dressed in Indian costume, and there received the visitors, who were escorted to the wigwam. Among the notable persons present were Governor George Clinton, Chief-Justice Day, Mr. Duane, the Mayor, Mr. Jefferson, Secretary of State, and Mr. Knox, Secretary of War. On October 13, 1794, the society, in commemoration of the discovery of the American Continent three hundred years previously by Christopher Columbus, erected a transparent monument to the discoverer in the Tammany museum. The museum was in the second story of the brick building at the foot of Broad street, which stood in the middle of the roadway and extended from Pearl to Water street. The building was the property of the city, but the authorities had granted the use of the second story to the Tammany Society for the purpose of a museum. The collection consisted of presents made to the society, such as clubs, battle-axes, tomahawks, pipes, etc. It was jealously guarded by the Wiskinskie, or door-keeper. The first person who held this office was Gardiner Baker, who received a small salary and was allowed to exact a fee from every visitor. Everything worked smoothly for a while, but Baker soon began to claim as his right all donations made to the society. Three years of intense excitement followed, until finally a compromise was effected, whereby Baker was allowed to keep the museum during his life on condition of admitting the members of the society without charge. The collection, on the death of Baker, was sold, in a very dilapidated condition, and formed the nucleus of Scudder's Museum, which later expanded into Barnum's Museum. In 1790 the wigwam was situated on the southeast corner of Nassau and Spruce streets. The building was originally erected by an English settler, by the name of Thomas Hale, on the elevated ground in that vicinity. It was a long low frame building, two stories high. In 1670 William Beekman purchased the property of Hale's widow, and used a portion of the building for a brewery. At this period the road to Boston crossed the fields in front of the house. This is now Park Row. The fields were the scene of frequent conflicts between the "Liberty Boys" and the troops. In 1783 the eminence surrounding the spot on which the building stood was cut down, thus leaving the dwelling high and dry. A basement of brick was built and a high porch conducted the visitor to the hall door. It was now a public house and a favorite resort of the "Sons of Liberty." It the bar-room, seated before the ample fireplace, the veterans of the revolution loved to gather and fight their battles over again, doubtless with many ingenious additions.

In 1794 the sign over the main entrance read:

ABRAHAM MARTLING'S TAVERN.

Abraham or "Brom" Martling was a prominent character. He had been a soldier of the revolution, and could tell the most astounding stories of the scenes and battles of this great struggle. He was a large, portly man, and an excellent representative of the old Knickerbocker. His son-in-law, William B. Cozzens, afterward became his partner, and was one of the lessees of old Tammany Hall during its half century of greatness. In 1797 the long room at the rear was built, and also a room on Little George street. The former had an entrance on Nassau street. This long room was fitted up at one time for a theater, and a play called "Bourville Castle" was announced for production. The enterprise failed, and the drama was afterward enacted at the John Street Theater. In 1799 the building on Broad street was demolished, and the Tammany Society secured rooms at Martlings, which then became the first Tammany Hall. For some years the society met in the long room, which was seventy feet in length, with an arch ceiling of blue, with golden stars. In 1802 a tontine was started, the purpose being to build a wigwam. Subscriptions were plentiful, but, as the subscribers failed to advance hard cash, the matter fell through. On April 6, 1808, the Tammany Society proceeded in procession to Wallabout, Long Island, to assist in the ceremony of laying the corner-stone of a vault, in which were to be placed the bones of the martyrs of the prison-ship Jersey. On the completion of the vault, the society again marched to the place and assisted at the solemn services of dedication. May 25, 1808. Old residents of Brooklyn remember the occasion and also the wooden tombstone on Hudson avenue in that city. About this time the subject of a new hall began to be agitated. It was foreseen that a war with England must ensue, and Tammany was thoroughly imbued with patriotic sentiments. A joint-stock subscription was started, and through the exertions of Colonel Rutgers and others the sum of $28,000 was raised. A site was purchased at the southeast corner of Nassau and Frankfort streets and a building erected. The inscription on the corner-stone read as follows:

This stone is laid by
TAMMANY SOCIETY OR COLUMBIAN ORDER, NUMBER ONE,
on the twelfth day of May,
One Thousand Eight Hundred and Eleven,
the twenty-first year of its institution and the thirty-fifth of AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE, being the first stone of the Building erected for Preserving and strengthening that Patriotic chain which unites its members, and for accommodating their REPUBLICAN BRETHREN.

At this time Clarkson Crolius was Grand Sachem. The new building was seventy feet high, with a front of sixty feet on Nassau street and eighty-two feet on Frankfort street. The large hall-room, the handsomest in the city at that time, was sixteen feet seven inches high. The general committee room was 25x56, the reading room 25x25. During the war of 1812 Tammany Hall was the headquarters for aiding, assisting and consulting with the friends of American independence. The general committee was composed of the ablest and soundest men of the Democratic party, who were all in favor of the war. The Federalists, on the other side, opposed the war. Mr. Clay and other Commissioners were entertained in Tammany Hall with a grand banquet. After peace was declared the Federalist party was reinforced by the Clintonian party, and in 1817 the Democratic party found itself in a minority in both Houses. The General Committee of Tammany Hall organized a very active campaign, in which Van Buren and Tompkins took part, and in 1820 the Democracy carried the State. Previous to this, in 1812, Hugh Maxwell, who was afterward District Attorney, Jacob Radcliffe, Richard Hatfield and others left the Federalists and united with Tammany Hall. On the final triumph of the Democratic party, Charles King, Johnson Verplanck, James A. Hamilton and others, with their paper, came into Tammany Hall, as did General Wickham, of Orange County. These men wanted power, and soon began to "kick in the traces," and by a powerful effort obtained possession of Tammany and ousted the Democrats. Undismayed by this, the regular Democracy held a meeting in the coal hole of the hall and nominated a ticket. They were successful and carried the Assembly by 2,500 votes. At this Adams and others of the old Democrats withdrew, and left Tammany in a bad condition, but the election of Jackson renewed the power of the Democrats and brought them again to the front. The party remained in power for many years. The necessity for removing up town became apparent to the members of the society in later years, and in March, 1867, the property on Nassau street was sold and a new Tammany Hall was built in Fourteenth street. The site was on the ground formerly occupied by the Medical College, which was burned on May 21, 1865, at the time of the conflagration of the Academy of Music. Of the present strength it is needless to speak, or of the present struggle of Tammany Society.—Boston Republic.

Boston Light.

The Boston light is at the very entrance to the channel and the white shaft towers up from its foundations in the reddish-brown rock of the little island like a saint in the desert. Its rays are visible sixteen miles away—one flash every thirty seconds—and with the twin lights of Thatcher's Island in the northeast and Minot's Ledge to the southward—an American Eddystone, pillared in the sea—it defines the position of the harbor to the approaching mariner.

There has been a light here since 1715, for the "general benefit to Trade," but the present tower was built in 1783, after the destruction of the original building by the British as they passed out of the harbor. It has been frequently strengthened and altered, and is now in excellent condition. The walls are six feet thick at the base and four feet at the top. The lantern is nearly one hundred feet above the ground, and is nearly ten feet in diameter. In this glass house a man can stand upright, and in the center of it the illuminating apparatus revolves, emitting its penetrating flashes at intervals of thirty seconds. Under the tower there is a steam fog-horn, which splits the the air with stentorian warnings when the weather is thick, and between the harsh trumpetings of this instrument the ear catches the moaning of the whistling buoy anchored off the Graves, and the tolling of the bell-buoy which floats over the perilous Hardings Ledge.

But the custodians of the light have their Lares and Penates enshrined in the comfortable house which is connected with the tower by a covered passage, and when the curtains are drawn over the windows it is cheerful in there, even though the channel is choked with ice, and the winds blow as if they would rock the pillar with its six-foot walls off its foundations. Music exerts its soothing spell through the medium of an accordeon, played by Assistant-keeper Gorham: and sometimes, when the family join voices in "Hold the Fort" or "The Sweet By-and-By," Keeper Bates, carried away with rapture, urgently cries: "Bear down thar, Edward; bear down on that instrument," as if the accordeon were the pump of a sinking ship, and salvation depended on the vigor of the performer.

The keepers occasionally have more exciting work to do than trimming their lamps and rubbing the moisture off the panes of glass in the lantern. Bates is possessor of the Humane Society's medal. He does not wear it on his breast, as bicycle-riders and roller-skaters wear their trophies; it is stowed away somewhere in a drawer, and he does not care to talk about it. It is, however, a memento of the time when the Fanny Pike, of Calais, was wrecked on the Shag Rocks, the ledge which extends seaward from the point of the Little Brewster. She struck and went to pieces during a very heavy northeasterly snow-storm, and reckless of the tremendous sea, Bates put off in a small boat to rescue her crew, all of whom he saved, with the aid of Assistant-keeper Bailey and Charles Pochaska, a young fisherman belonging to the Middle Brewster.—W. H. Kideing, in Harper's Magazine.

Too True to Be Sad.

He was a busy man, and she was a society woman. One evening he suddenly looked up from his paper and said:

"By the way, didn't we have a baby in this house about the time Midland Broad-Gauge went up to ninety-eight?"

"Yes," she said, "Oscar was born the night of the Everingham reception."

"Boy, was it?" he said, with a show of interest. "I had forgotten: must be about seven months old by this time. Where is he?"

She touched a bell, a servant appeared, and she ordered Oscar to be brought into the presence of his sire. Instead of whom the weeping nurse appeared alone, and with many tears confessed that the infant Oscar had been kidnapped in the park six weeks before, and that the most careful search, aided by advertisements in the daily papers, had thus far failed to reveal his whereabouts. Thus we see that wealth is no barrier to sorrow, and even into the homes of the rich and the great trouble creeps with its stealthy tread, and sometimes breaks up a whole evening of enjoyment.—Burdette, in Burlington Hawkeye.

Demolition of an Old Structure.

The ancient adobe structure that for two hundred years has served as the principal house of worship in Santa Fe is being razed to the ground by a large force of workmen. Orders have been issued to push the new stone edifice to completion this fall, and to this end the contractors are working with all their might. The walls of the old cathedral constitute an interesting architectural study. They are six feet in thickness, and the timbers used as keys in the wall are as firm to-day as when first placed two centuries ago. Many relic hunters are preserving sections of the adobes that form this aged edifice. The debris is being removed to the Rio Santa Fe, and will be scattered along the bank in order to give the street a better elevation. The stained glass windows representing the twelve apostles, which are to be placed in the new Cathedral, will be shipped from France this summer.—Santa Fe (N. M.) Review.

D. A. Starkweather, foreman of the Slaight mill, two miles north of Stanton, was killed by the mill machinery. He leaves a wife and two children.

The prevailing opinion regarding the girl of the period is unjust. A few decades back she spun, wove, knit, &c. These things have given way to modern machinery. She has higher planes, is more of an ornament; when in health is beautiful. She takes Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic, which clears the complection, drives away pimples and cures all diseases of the stomach, liver, and kidneys. Fifty cents of Baker & Hall.

The St. Clair council is still considering the question of waterworks. The plan of drawing from the Oakland hotel tanks does not seem likely to be adopted.

WHY IS IT

That the sale of Hood's Sarsaparilla continues at such a rapidly increasing rate? It is,— 1st: Because of the postive curative value of Hood's Sarsaparilla itself.

2d: Because of the conclusive evidence of remarkable cures effected by it, unsurpassed and seldom equalled by any other medicine. Send to C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass., for book containing many statements of cures.

Adjourned to meet at Parkersburgh, O.

A GREAT cave-in occurred in the mining of the Sun at the Enterprise colliery at Wilkesbarre, Pa., caused by the giving way of pillars in the mine. The earth sank twenty-seven inches for twenty acres around, with a noise resembling an earthquake. The caving continued to spread during the day, until it included two hundred and fifty acres, extending from the Susquehanna River to within forty feet of the house of the mine, a distance of half a mile. The mines were not in operation, so the loss of life would have been heavy. The Lehigh Valley Railroad tracks run over the part caved in, and they were knocked out of shape, preventing the running of trains. It will be at least a year before the road can be put in working order again. The loss will reach at least $[illegible].

FOREIGN.

A FIRE occurred at a sulphur mine in Nicosa, Sicily, on the 4th resulting in the death of twenty persons.

A ROME dispatch of the 5th says a cholera panic prevails throughout Italy. Each town is taking measures of protection regardless of the Government. Sole post guards prevent travelers from entering their precincts until after a quarantine of twenty days. Many have closed their gates. Every one of the villages have established armed cordons. The result is that in many parts of the peninsula anarchy practically prevails, and travel and traffic are greatly interrupted. During the twenty-four hours ended at nine p. m. of the 5th there were 185 fresh cases and eighty-five deaths.

A DISPATCH of the 5th from St. Johns, N. F., reports a destructive southeast gale on the west coast of Newfoundland. At St. Shotts an unknown vessel was lost with all hands. Seven bodies have been washed ashore.

ADVICES from New Zealand state that the large emigrant ship Lastingham, from London to Wellington, New Zealand, was wrecked in Cook Strait on which Wellington is situated. All on board except fourteen of the crew were drowned.

A COPENHAGEN dispatch says that Commodore Hovgaard and the owner of the steamer Dymphna are preparing for another Danish expedition to the Arctic via Franz Josefland. They expect to start next summer.

A FRESH crop of disasters during the late storm is reported from Labrador. The schooners Valeria, Challenge, Isabella, and Jessie with cargoes are total wrecks at Nawtook Bay and Rama. One vessel was lost at Mariners' Island and three of the crew perished.

THE stairs and a portion of the gallery at a circus at Rostoff, Russia, collapsed on the 6th. A panic ensued, and many persons were killed and wounded.

LATER.

RETURNS from the Maine election on the 8th indicate the election of the Republican State ticket by a majority of about 12,000. All the four Republican candidates for Congress are elected and the Legislature is overwhelmingly Republican. The Prohibitory Constitutional Amendment was adopted by a majority estimated at 50,000. A heavy vote was polled.

MAHLON RUNYON, President of the New Brunswick (N. J.) National Bank, cut his throat in the water closet of the bank on the 8th. He is implicated in the thievery of Cashier Hill, who recently suicided, and expected to be arrested when he took his life. He had been President of the bank five years, was sixty years old, and leaves a wife and four children. Runyon's suicide strengthens the belief of great frauds in the management of the bank. It is reported he said before he died, "There is about a million gone." Walter Carroll, a depositor, also cut his throat upon hearing the news. Intense excitement prevailed in the city.

THE doors of the Lincoln Savings Bank at Nashville, Tenn., closed on the 8th. Assets $200,000; deposits $100,000. It is said the depositors will be paid in full, and the stockholders will perhaps get fifty per cent.

JOHN H. WEBSTER, of the well known Detroit firm of Doolittle & Webster, dropped dead of heart disease in that city on the 8th.

AT a convention of the river miners of the Pittsburgh district on the 8th it was decided to continue the strike and to urge the railroad miners to join.

GEORGE OLIVER, colored, was arrested at Savannah, Ga., on the 8th for beating his stepdaughter to death.

THE situation at Naples is very serious. For the twenty-four hours ending at noon on the 8th three hundred new cases of cholera were reported.

SENATOR ANTHONY'S will disposes of about $200,000 worth of property. Most of it goes to relatives, but large bequests are made to Brown University and to city institutions. His employes and some personal friends receive small legacies.

JAMES PATRICK, of the firm of Patrick & Carter, electricians, Philadelphia, died at Sea Bright Station, N. J., on the 7th. Patrick's firm supplies all Government stations with electrical apparatus.

THE boat race between Hanlon, of Toronto, and William Beach, of Sidney, Australia, for the championship and $5,000, rowed on the Parametta River, Australia, August 16, was won by Beach by five or six lengths. An immense crowd witnessed the race.

A LONDON dispatch of the 8th says the crew of the wrecked yacht Mignonette who were adrift for twenty-four days, killed a boy named Parker that the others might live off him. When rescued the men looked like skeletons. They have been arrested and held for trial for murder.

A CARD.

Having been applied to for the use of our Town Hall, to be used for the next six or eight months for a skating rink, of which application very many of our good citizens are aware, and notwithstanding I have told all such that the hall would not be let for such purpose against the wishes of the people who own it and who should have a say in the control of the Hall, and after all these assurances by myself, and also the Council, a good many have warned me of the awful consequences that would follow such renting, all of which I do know. I will only say that the entreaty of my friends reminds me of an old maid who was sitting on the fence where she stood a house now burned down, crying most piteously, when a passer by asked her what was the cause of her grief. She replied that she was thinking that if she should get married and I have a chance and I should have a baby, and it should while at play in this yard fall into that well and get drowned. Oh what an awful thing it would be. So with our friends.

President of Clinton Village Council.

A prominent business firm in one of our leading cities, who have grown rich by liberally patronizing the printer, give to their fellow merchants the following concerning advertising:

"We have for many years studied the art of advertising, and still it remains a marvel to us that there is not a hundred times more of it. We never yet knew a man to advertise his wares liberally and steadily that it did not pay. Yet there are thousands of manufactures and tens of thousands of men, having articles which they declare sought to be "in every household in the country," who advertise as gingerly and closely as though they had at heart no faith in it at all. How can they expect to get their goods anywhere unless some knowledge of the article first gets into the family newspaper? If we waited till people learned from their neighbors we might wait for years before the most wonderful and useful invention became known."—Ex.

In many localities Hood's Sarsaparilla is in such general demand that it is recognized family medicine. People write that "the whole neighborhood is taking it," etc. Particularly is this true of Lowell, Mass., where it is made, and where more of Hood's Sarsaparilla is sold than of any other sarsaparilla or blood purifier. It is the great remedy for debility, scrofula, dyspepsia, biliousness, or any disease caused by impure state or low condition of the blood. Give it a trial.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Teachout's hotel is nearly finished and furnished. It is 98 feet long, and few small villages have a larger or nicer transient home.

Continued drouth has interfered with fall sowing, and farmers who leave dusty fallows for an hour's chat with the minister, look discouraged and wonder plaintively if they have not erred in calculating so much plow acreage. They are positively fused—comparatively confused, and their affairs superlatively muddled by overproduction of grain. It requires credulity to accept this story of too much bread material on hand; when so many complain of the need of it. Its cheapness is an excuse for children to go hungry. The error in calculation must extend backward a few years, for when bread was made of wheat at twenty shillings per bushel, there was more of it on the laborer's table. The high price tempted farmers to sow every available acre; but wages corresponded and they schemed to save money. Every machine that would enable them to dispense with human assistance was sought for, and now many large farms are managed by the farmer's own hands, and those in his house Heaven set apart to make pies with. Unless he enlarges his base of operations, so as to give some kind of employment to those supplanted, he divides a legacy of enforced idleness, want and discontent among several of his neighbors, and destroys an unfailing home market for grain, costing him nothing for transportation. This makes him slightly dependent on buyers, his own method places one round above himself on the business ladder, and prices becomes a phantom that soon fades from his jurisdiction. No premeditated plan to compass another's downfall is half as sure of producing the result as a one-sided thoughtlessness concerning their safety. This last is what they have built their trap with. Only think how many more mouths there are now than 20 years ago; consequently more grain is required and more labor to produce it would seem a rational theory. But the laborer dodges between mings and miraculous ways of subsistence. He demands wages higher than they can afford to pay, while environed by difficulties that enclose them hourly in a smaller circle. The machinery was designed to prevent men from becoming drudges, and not to transform them to idlers. The small farmer lets his reapers, drills and threshers rust three-fourths of the year, the same as the rich, and ties up as much money as would buy a small home. Lands lie idle rather than submit them to rent and hand tillage.

Farmers have in this way thoughtlessly arrayed capital against a large branch of labor, and the unment blow proves the unkindest cut of all, because it is coupled with no device for employing people in newer fields. And this is the penalty. Consumption of home produce is narrowed and surety exchanged for chance. Boards of trade regulate prices. If high, he sells and puts his moey where it swells banks to bursting. If low, he s tempted to hire money and wait for a rise. Then if prices sink and keep sinking, foreclosure makes the moneylender richer by one farm, and they name it Overproduction. PEARLIE.

SPRINGVILLE SNUFF.

Meeting is suspended for a few Sundays at the M. E. Church.

There is to be a Cleveland and Hendricks pole raised here, one week from next Saturday. Good and able speakers will address the meeting, to which everybody is invited.

Some time ago, in a quarrel, John Kandal drew a pistol on Lark Cole. He is answering for the same offence at Adrian this week.

The proprietors of the Cider Mill are making preparations for a brisk trade this fall. Expect to be ready for business the latter part of next week.

Mrs. T. H. Mosher and Mary Booher are visiting friends and relatives in Hudson this week.

C. D. Smith expects to attend the wedding of his cousin, Miss Dell Hutchins, at Clayton this week.

Our correspondent of the Exponent, says: "There are dangerous symptoms of another attack of a brass band here soon." Why! Has our correspondent been purchasing himself another E flat Cornet or Alto? If so, we think it would be proper to exclaim in the words of the prayer book. "Good Lord, deliver us."

MACON MUSIC.

Mr. Parker, our popular shoemaker, has moved his family to our hamlet. We welcome them.

Hamilton Niblack now occupies the rooms over W. P. Cotton's store. "Ham" is to stand behind the counter for Cotton & Co.

Samuel Hatch and family, of Detroit, are visiting relatives in Macon.

The S. S. concert given at the M. E. church Sunday evening was well attended. The exercises were usually good.

Mrs. St. John gave another concert at the Baptist church Saturday evening. It was a success in every respect, and reflected much credit on Mrs. St John's ability as a musical conductor.

The great ordeal is past. Our school board has finally secured teachers, and school commenced the 15th inst. Miss Wadsworth, of Adrian, is superintendent, and Miss Hattie Smith, of Macon, assistant. We look for a number one school.

Geo. Collins, thinking that he had traveled this mundane path alone long enough, took unto himself recently a wife, in the person of Emma Miller. We congratulate them.

Rev. Mr. Kerridge finished his labors for the last conference year Sunday. Mr. Kerridge has become very popular with Macon people, and we shall gladly welcome him back for another year.

RIDGEWAY RACKET.

Corn cutting has begun.

Mr. W. P. Cadinus—Bohemian—oats turned 37½ to the acre.

Mr. J. Suydam is one of the sick.

41 tickets were sold for Toledo last Thursday for the fair.

The friends of God, Home, and Native land went to Tecumseh last Saturday to hear Prof. Samuel Dickey talk on the Prohibition issue.

The workingmans concert, a traveling troupe gave an entertainment on Rappleye's square last Monday night.

Mr. John F. Temple is at work improving his house with a new addition.

Mrs. Romyne Miller, of Constantine is visiting her mother. That baby is the boss.

Mr. Robert Houseman was leading a horse behind his buggy when the horse became frightened and jumped in the wheels and threw it over and hurt Mrs. Houseman but not seriously. But broke the buggy badly.

Mr. A. R. Arner got home Tuesday night from a visit with friends at Masillon Ohio.

Mr. Eugene Clarkson, of Detroit, made Miss Belle Barlow a call Sunday.

Rev. Wm. Campbell has gone to attend conference at East Saginaw, this week.

The church social having enjoyed a vacation of a few months, will give a fruit and watermelon entertainment at the church next Friday night. A cordial invitation to all.

Quite a good many attended the McGibeny family entertainment at Tecumseh Tuesday night and were well pleased.

The Ladies Church Social will be held in the lecture room of the M. E. church at Ridgeway on Friday evening, Sept. 19. All are cordially invited. Fruit and melons are to be served.

In the absence of the pastor to attend the annual conference at East Saginaw, the pulpit of the M. E. church, at Ridgeway, will be filled, morning and evening on Sunday Sept. 21st by Rev. Peter Sharp. Theme in the evening, Intemperance—Its remedy. All are cordially invited to attend, and hear the veteran of 74 for the last time.

HOLLOWAY HICKUPS.

Who says Holloway is a dead place when we have a political meeting every week? Last Thursday evening Mr. Graves of Adrian, and Mr. Pratt of Blissfield, addressed the people of this place on the issues of the day. The Northern Lights were out in full uniform with torches and banners while the Raisin and Wellsville bands discoursed sweet music to quiet the terrible beating of our hearts, caused by the remarks of the last named speaker. He told us all about the war which was very interesting as we had nearly forgotten it. And the worst of all he prophesied that those terrible scenes would be enacted over again if in the coming campaign the grand old Republican party should be defeated. No wonder that we feel solemn. Cannot some one come and comfort us?

Vern Horsie is sick with typhoid fever.

Al. Horsie writes home from Dakota that he is having good success threshing; twelve to sixteen hundred per day is not very bad, especially where they pay five dollars per hundred.

Alva White is having a bad time with his ear. The Doctor says it is a pretty serious affair.

Lots of people sick with Dysentery in consequence of which the Doctor rejoices.

The chief business on hand in these parts is lowering wells on account of the dry weather. James Lane is having lots of fun with his well.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

The Episcopal sociable was held last week at the house of Bro. Andrew McDermott, and was well attended and a very pleasant time was had.

The Episcopal church edifice is now being repaired, and will be repainted on the inside, and newly papered, and I understand that there is to be an addition built on the south end of the church, all under the supervision of Bro. Ed. VanDemark, which is sufficient guarantee that the church when completed, will be well done and tastefully arranged internally. Success to the enterprise. I would here suggest that I have noticed that nicely cushioned and comfortable seats have a tendency to draw a congregation, and we do know from experience that it will hold the congregation as well as anything else, so Bro. Ed. let your supervision extend to making the seats comfortable—a hint to the wise is sufficient. Long live Bro. VanDemark.

The Baptist Parsonage heretofore spoken of by your correspondent has now assumed a very comely appearance, having been raised a full story in heighth, with a square roof and otherwise improved, until one would hardly know the place, all of which indicates the pluck and perseverance of the society, and may their efforts be appreciated by the community.

Pulverizing the rum power in Clinton was commenced on Saturday night last. He was here and though late when he arrived, he spoke nearly two hours, and only stopped when he thought it was train time, as he wanted to go home that night. Altogether he made a very creditable speech to the two or three hundred people who had expected that both of the old political parties would be broken up, and the rum power completely dissolved, but it still remains to be seen how much good was done by his, (Dickey's talk, or how many votes he made for St. John and Daniels time will tell.

The nomination of our fellow citizen Danforth Keyes, for Register, by the democrats, gives good satisfaction to his party and is considered a good nomination by the republicans and prohibitionists. Mr. Keyes will make a good run—may he be elected, a worthy man to be elevated.

MORELAND BROS. & CRANE.

Sole owners of the Best Plug Tobacco in the world, "Hero."

The title "Babyland" was brought into use by D. Lothrop & Co. for their charming magazine BABYLAND, the bound volume of which is each year a delight in many thousands of homes. Its great reputation has been won by intrinsic merit of exquisite adaptation by the purity and delicate humor of the text, and the charm of its beautiful and amusing pictures. It has been edited during the eight years of its publication by the editors of WIDE AWAKE. Its great and well earned reputation has induced certain publishers to attempt imitations. It becomes necessary, therefore, to warn the public against these inferior books issued under similar titles, and to state that there is but one genuine BABYLAND, and this always has the imprint of D. Lothrop & Co., Boston.

The frontispiece of the October number of the Magazine of Art will be "The Farmer's Daughter," from W. Q. Orchardson, which attracted so much attention in the recent exhibition at the Grosvenor Gallery.

DEMOCRATIC COUNTY CONVENTION.

The democratic county convention, though called for the court house, was compelled for the reason that court was in session to meet, temorarily at the city council room, and gathered after the adjournment of the second district representative convention. It was called to order by D. A. Bixby chairman of the county committee, who called upon Dr. H. S. Wyman of Morenci to preside over the temporary deliberations of the body.

The announcement was made that the court house would be at the disposal of the convention after 1 P. M.

Dr. Wyman briefly returned thanks and A. Chappelle was chosen as temporary secretary.

A committee on permanent organization and order of business was appointed, consisting of Horace Hoxbridge, Raisin; J. B. Clement, Blissfield; Seth Bean, city.

A committee on credentials was appointed, consisting of Ed. Hauf, Medina; W. H. Shearson, Seneca; W. T. B. Scherneerhorn, Hudson.

It was moved by F. T. Clark that a committee of five be appointed to confer with the greenback party, which was understood to be in session somewhere in the city. The motion was carried and a committee appointed as follows: F. T. Clark, city; Dr. Jenkins, Franklin; David Pontius, Dover; J. W. Helme, Jr., city; Homer E. Decker, Rome.

A committee on resolutions was appointed, consisting of, Judge Stacy, Benj. Hicks, Ogden; A. M. Sickley, Woodstock.

The convention then adjourned, to meet at the court house at 1:30 o'clock.

The chairman called the convention to order promptly after the adjournment of the representative convention.

The report of the committee on permanent organization was called for. The report favored Judge Stacy for permanent president, and A. D. Ellis for permanent secretary. It also recommended an order of business for the nomination of candidates for county offices, which left the naming of state senator to the last. The room was crowded, and there was much confusion, so much so that the adoption of the report was omitted.

Judge Stacy on taking the chair proceeded to address the convention, paying it a compliment on its numbers and enthusiasm, and claiming to see in their bright faces auguries for the success of the party.

The committee on credentials reported full delegations and no contests. The detailed reading of the report was dispensed with.

The committee appointed to confer with the greenbackers reported the g. b.'s wanted state senator, register of deeds and county surveyor, and for this price proposed to support a mixed ticket. It seemed to be thot that the demands of the greenback wing were rather exorbitant, but C. Hayes moved that the demands be acceded to. Seth Bean thought it best to give them treasurer instead of register, and give them coroner and one circuit court commissioner. The conference committee was instructed to take Mr. Bean's proposition to the greenbackers, and hold another conference.

The convention then proceeded to nominate a judge of probate. Judge Stacy called Ald. Humphrey to the chair, and proceeded to nominate Edwin B. Wood, of Tecumseh, highly eulogizing his ability and worth. On motion Mr. Wood was nominated by acclamation.

The convention then proceeded to select the remainder of the ticket.

There were several candidates and a lively contest over sheriff, clerk and register. The conference committee reported that the greenbackers would accept senator, treasurer and surveyor, and the report was adopted giving the greenbackers those positions.

The greenback convention met at the Council room at one o'clock P. M. and organized with a good lot of delegates present. After electing C. H. Dewey chairman, and E. H. Baker of Clayton, secretary.

The following committee of five was appointed to confer with the democrats, with a view to fusion: A Wilson, J. Hemingway, Jr., Wm. Queal, Edward Lennox, Josiah Metcalf.

The conference committees from the two conventions met and finally agreed on the terms of fusion which was to give the greenbackers the positions of treasurer, senator and surveyor. The convention then nominated for the three positions

Charles H. Dewey—Senator.
Edward Learnard—Treasurer.
Philip H. Dowling—Surveyor.

The Democrats completed their ticket as follows:

Sheriff—A. K. Whitmore.
Clerk—D. A. Bixby.
Register—Danforth Keyes.
Prosecutor—L. H. Salsbury.
Circuit Court Commissioners—J. W. Helm, Jr; L. R. Pierson.
Coroners—Dr. H. S. Wyman, W. G. Smith.

The Greenbackers then came into the Democratic convention and the combined ticket was unanimously ratified by both bodies by a rising vote.

An adjourned meeting of the Farmer's Social Club will be held at the residence of Mr. John Benedict, Sept. 26th, inst., at 2 o'clock P. M. All are respectfully invited to attend. Music by Mr. and Miss Benedict.

YARNS BY A HIGHWAYMAN.

A Forty-Niner Who Did Not Go to California to Dig Gold—Robbing the Overland Coach—Neatly Captured by a Woman—Surrendering to an Empty Pistol.

It is the proud boast of Jim Smith that he has passed thirty-three Christmasses in California behind the iron bars of San Quentin. He is not, perhaps, the only former State Prisoner, but he is probably the only one who has been in State Prison for a fraction of every year since '50. He came West with the Argonauts, and never for a moment, notwithstanding his long period of servitude, considers himself unworthy to rank with the rest of them. He thinks they were the most remarkable men of the century, and his modesty does not prevent him from declaring that he was with them. Jim Smith is the patriarch of the prison. He is the guide, philosopher and friend of the younger convicts. He is a model prisoner. So far as anybody has been able to discover, he has but one fault. He can not leave stage coaches alone. Once put him in a place where no stages are to be found and he is an exemplary man.

Smith has not been a prisoner at San Quentin steadily for thirty-three years. He has been out many times, but has returned again so speedily, convicted on the same old charge, that he has not in all that time missed a Christmas dinner behind the bars. They gave him a sentence the last time which will keep him in retirement considerably longer than usual, but no one entertains the thought that he can ever be broken of his habit while a stage coach runs. His failing is so well known that jokers are sometimes cracked with him on the subject, and when he is permitted to converse he will refer to some of his exploits in a way which shows that no amount of punishment can ever convince him that the stopping of a coach and the robbery of the passengers is anything to be ashamed of.

Having a little extra liberty on the Fourth of July, Smith found time and his captors gave him the occasion to talk freely of his past life. He had heard of some recent exploits of highwaymen which filled him with disgust. In the course of a long conversation he said:

"It is enough to make a starter's blood boil to hear about the operations of these sneak thieves who are now working these little country roads. There ain't one in fifty of them that has the sand in him to hold up a thoroughbred. I've plundered members of Congress, judges of the Supreme Court, ex-governors, argonauts, and big men generally more'n once, but these fellows don't know anything about men of that quality—only to dodge them. Staging ain't what it used to be anyway. When the overland stages were running it took a good man to stop them. In the first place they were driven by the most reckless men you ever see, and the men inside of them were true Americans. If they gave up it was because they had to—that was all. The fellows who travel nowadays ain't got the spirit of it, of these fellows who were in the business now never'd get a color.

"I remember once early in the sixties I went out in Calaveras County with two partners to see about a stage that was due just about then. We all had good guns, pistols and knives, and we got them ready to use, for in those days things of that kind were not carried for ornaments. The overland didn't show up as soon as was expected—some accident had happened to it in the mountains—and when it did come it took us a little sudden. We'd been fooling around for several days, and got a little careless, I must admit. One day it was warm and sunny, and we all got scattered, though we had an understanding that, wherever we were, we were to keep an eye on the road all the time, and if any of us discovered the stage, the one doing so was to fire a shot or two as an alarm signal. Along about the middle of the afternoon I heard a gun, and a minute later there came another report that sounded like a volley of musketry. It puzzled me a little, but I grabbed my shooting irons and made for the road. I had just got a good position when I heard another shot a little nearer, and then another volley a good deal louder than the other. Then came the clatter of horses and the roll of wheels—it was the stage. I could see her a-coming. You don't see driving like that these days. She was on two wheels half the time, and when she got near enough to me and the dust lifted a little I could see the gun barrels sticking out of her like quills on a hedge hog. The driver—a hard man that I knew mighty well—had the lines for his leaders in his teeth and those for the wheelers tied to his brake, and he had a pistol in each hand. I never saw a grander sight in all my life. I wanted to stop that outfit single handed, just for the sake of seeing who was in it, but she had got up a tremendous momentum by the time she came abreast of me, and as she fairly shook the earth when she zipped past where I was hiding, I just ducked my head and let her go. I knew by the way she acted that there had been trouble on the road, and I didn't care to make matters any worse just then. She was full of men, and they all had guns. When the dust had settled a little and the noise died out, I crept to the roadway and walked along slowly for a mile and a half, where I found one of my partners with about a pound of lead in him. A little farther on I came on the other one. He wasn't hurt, but he was scared within an inch of his life. He had never been on that road before, and as he said if that was what I called stopping an overland he didn't want to be in one.

"He said there was no stop to them. He had a pistol in each hand, a mark of war with a heavy gun back and he wanted one to intimidate it. Well he came pretty near getting into trouble with his pistols, particularly when he came along so where the other fellow was, but I pacified him afterward by telling him it was all our fault. We hadn't thought to have separated. In those days there were just as tough men inside of the coaches as any you could recruit for the outside, and anybody who got away with them had to be a good one.

"Just after the war I got information to the effect that a number of the boys were going back to the States, and as I knew they had a good deal of dust, I made up my mind that I would have to look upon them. The night before they started they drank heavily, and when they came to get aboard they were all in a helpless condition. I was the first man to discover this peculiarity of homeward bound passengers, and it stood me in a good many hundreds of dollars. You could always get away with a stage a good deal easier during the first twelve or twelve hours of its trip than at any other time. I made no mistake as to the coach I am speaking of, finding out when it would start, took a couple of friends and went out on the road as far as we could get comfortably. Toward evening we heard her a-coming, and we laid low. When she got near enough we jumped into the road and covered the driver. He was a little fat, heavy, like the rest of them, but he was smarter than they were. When he saw us he reined right up, and sat there perfectly still, while one of my men kept watch of him and the other one and myself interviewed the passengers. They were thoroughly surprised, and those who were not too drowsy to resist were too sick. We got half a dozen bags of dust, some watches and a few traps, and then left them. There was a treasure box aboard, which we pried off and undertook to carry away with us. It was mighty heavy, and we didn't make much progress with it before nightfall. Feeling rather tired, we went to sleep, never dreaming of harm; but at daylight when we awoke we heard a racket in the road, and looking out from behind the shrubbery we saw the passengers whom we had robbed the evening before. They were evidently on the war-path for us. I was just motioning to my men to keep still, when one of them, a clumsy cuss, lost his balance, and in trying to recover himself made a noise which attracted the attention of the passengers. They were after us in a minute. We had to abandon the treasure box, and after awhile they got so hot on our trail that we had to drop the bags of dust, too. They fired about a dozen shots after us but when they found the plunder they seemed to conclude that it wasn't worth while following us any further. This little episode taught me another important lesson in my business—that when you get anything from a drunken man that you want to keep you must get out of his reach before he sobers up. That was the case in the overland days, anyhow.

"I came upon a stage once that had a woman in it—a big-boned, red-faced woman. The other inmates showed fight, and it took a shot or two from my party to keep them quiet. We had got just about all there was to be had, and had ordered the driver to go ahead, when the woman threw herself out of the vehicle, yelling: 'I'm one of you.' 'No you don't,' says I. 'I don't know you, and maybe you ain't what you seem.' She then went on to tell me all about herself, and in half an hour she made me believe she was a born robber, who had been wishing all her life to go into the highway business. I rather liked her style, and in a day or two I had come to the conclusion that she might be made useful in overhauling stages. She and I were alone on the road one day, my two partners having fallen behind us a little, when she got to chatting me about shooting at a mark. She said she could shoot better than I could. Just for fun I pinned a piece of paper on a tree and let her take one of my pistols. She fired at the mark, but didn't hit it. Then I loaded her pistol again, and handed it to her, and was just going to load mine, when she says, 'Look here.' She was pointing the weapon at me. Says I: 'Don't do that; it might go off.' 'I know it,' says she, 'and maybe I will want it to go off. Stop loading that pistol, or this one will go off, and I know it.' I thought she was fooling for awhile, but when she gave me the order to march I knew I'd been nabbed. That there woman ran me into Frisco, and I did three years' time on her account.

"I've been caught a good many times, but I never was really ashamed of myself except the last time. I got into bad company, and I ought to have been lynched right on the spot. I had just got out, and had heard a good deal about the fellows who are stopping coaches now without any guns or anything of that kind. I found one of them, and told him he was a chump. Then he said it was cowardly to use firearms when moral suasion would do just as well. He claimed that he could put on a look that would frighten the passengers more than a dozen rifle shots. I had never thought of it in that light before, and, not wishing him to think me a coward, I accepted his challenge to go up in the mountains near the Oregon line for an experiment. We had pistols, but we agreed that we were not to load them. I was a little nervous; but he seemed so confident that I began to feel that perhaps stage robbing had been improved along with many other things. We stopped a coach, and driver smiled and kept still, just as my friend said they always did. I was to keep him covered with my empty pistol while the other fellow ordered the passengers out and stood them up in a row, preparatory to going through them. My friend had got pretty well down the line, and I was admiring to myself that the science had certainly made some progress since my day, when one of the victims hauled off quick and knocked my partner down, jumped on him, took his empty revolver away from him, and began snapping it at his ears. It didn't go, of course, but in a minute the others were on him holding him fast, and the man with the revolver levelled it at me with the order, 'Hold up you hands.' I has always been used to loaded pistols in my stage, and, while I was painfully conscious that mine was empty, I forgot for a moment that the other was so, and up went my hands. Just then the idea of the thing popped into my head, but it was too late. They were on top of me in a minute, and they soon had us both tied up with hitching straps and ropes. Now, that was a nice pickle for a starter to be in, wasn't it—hunting coaches with empty guns and then being captured with one of them? I wouldn't have blamed the Judge much if he'd made it forty years instead of twenty."—San Francisco Cor. N. Y. Sun.

"Jist Afore."

"Black-skinned, ignorant, uncouth—what was it to the world if he lay dying? They passed his humble door with careless thought as the dampness of death gathered on his brow, and the children on the corner never once ceased their noisy play as the shadow of death flitted around the open door.

"Chloe?"

Yes, she was there. Old and wrinkled and black, her heart aching, her eyes full of tears, she sat by his bedside alone.

"Chloe, how long ago was it?"

"Nigh on to fifty y'ars, Moses," she whispered. "De same master owned us boaf, we worked togeder in de same cotton fields; we prayed de same prayers an' sung de same hymns togeder in de long ago."

"An' de chill'en?"

"Dead—all dead. It has bin twenty y'ars since de voice of de last one made our hearts beat faster."

"An' we has bin alone?"

"All alone, Moses. Our ole hearts has pained and ached fur de dead an' gone, an' we has sometimes cried out 'come home, chill'en—come back to us!' but de dead can not return."

"An' de time has been long?"

"Yes, honey. We has bin pinin' an' longin'. We has bin on a journey an' hopin' fur de end of de road."

"An' we has bin poo' an' lowly?"

"De same. Hunger an' cold have scered our home fur y'ars an' y'ars, an' de world hardly knows dat we am upon airth."

"An' now, Chloe, I'ze gwine 'way to leave you?"

"Yes, Mose."

"An' de nights will seem darker an' de days longer when I am gone. You'll have another mem'ry to make de h'art ache—another sorrow to dim de poo' ole eyes wid tears. I wish de Lawd had called you fust."

"No, no, Moses. What He doeth am for de best. Men has told you dar' was no God."

"But dar' am, Chloe! I'ze got de feelin' heah in my heart. I'ze got sich peace an' contentment dat I'm sinkin' away like a chile gwine to sleep."

"An' men have scoded at a hereafter fur de soul."

"I'ze driftin' to it," he whispered, as his face lighted up. "I kin see across de dark valley into de glorious sunshine of de speerit world!"

"An' dar' am happiness an' rest for eben sich as us."

"Come cluser, Chloe! Lay your face on mine. I'ze driftin'—driftin'. I'ze partin' wid dis poo' ole body and dis black skin. I'ze leabin' old age—sorrow—hunger an' pain all b'hind. De sunlight from across de valley falls upon your face, an' it am whiter dan snow. It am de sunlight of de hereafter—of Heaven. Cluser, Chloe, I'ze driftin'—driftin'——"

And as she held the hand of the dead and rocked to and fro her face wore a smile of happiness.

"Jist a few days afore me!" she whispered. "Jist long 'nuff to tell 'em dat I'ze ole an' poo an lonely an' want to come up dar so bad. An' de chill'en will be dar, and we'll all be young again, an' Moses will meet me on de bank of de ribber an' tell 'em dat my faith has never wandered nor weakened from all de trials of a lifetime!"—Detroit Free Press.

A Burlington Idyl.

As the shades of evening enveloped the huge tree tops in silence and hushed the melodious song of the fresh summer leaves, a young couple entered the park on Fourth street, and reclined upon one of the comfortable and elegant benches prepared for the accommodation of youth. The sweet tunes of the early spring birds and the frolicsome pranks of the frogs in the adjoining fountain made the occasion one of extraordinary interest. "Ah, my beloved Cecilia," began the young swain, "how happy will we be when the church has pronounced its blessing upon our union. Verily, I love to think of the scenes of our future home, where you, my dear, shall be the queen and I the faithful vassal. When, oh when my dearest love, wilt thou be wholly mine?" An enchanting blush passed over the freckled features of the adorable Cecilia. She hesitated, she stammered, but utterance failed her. The faithful lover slowly passed his arm around her waist to support her at this trying moment. Timidly she moved away, but Walter, thinking only of his future happiness, pursued her. A close embrace—a piercing cry and he vanished. Cecilia looked at the disappearing form of her Adonis, and murmured sweetly: "I hast him, it was only a pin! Does the fool think I can hold my red sash together with my hands!" The results of this accident are sad. Walter will nevermore call upon the fair freckled-faced Cecilia; and the loving maiden will never forget the hasty departure and Walter's cry of anguish. AYER'S Hair Vigor restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray hair to a natural, rich brown color, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use light or red hair may be darkened, thin hair thickened, and baldness often, though not always, cured.

It checks falling of the hair, and stimulates a weak and sickly growth to vigor. It prevents and cures scurf and dandruff, and heals nearly every disease peculiar to the scalp. As a Ladies' Hair Dressing, the VIGOR is unequalled; it contains neither oil nor dye, renders the hair soft, glossy, and silken in appearance, and imparts a delicate, agreeable, and lasting perfume.

MR. C. P. BRICKER writes from Kirby, O., July 3, 1882: "Last fall my hair commenced falling out, and in a short time I became nearly bald. I used part of a bottle of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, which stopped the falling of the hair, and started a new growth. I have now a full head of hair growing vigorously, and am convinced that but for the use of your preparation I should have been entirely bald."

J. W. BOWEN, proprietor of the McArthur (Ohio) Enquirer, says: "AYER'S HAIR VIGOR is a most excellent preparation for the hair. I speak of it from my own experience. Its use promotes the growth of new hair, and makes it glossy and soft. The VIGOR is also a sure cure for dandruff. Not within my knowledge has the preparation ever failed to give entire satisfaction."

MR. ANGUS FAIRBAIRN, leader of the celebrated "Fairbairn Family" of Scottish Vocalists, writes from Boston, Mass., Feb. 6, 1880: "Ever since my hair began to give silver evidence of the change which fleeting time procureth, I have used AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, and so have been able to maintain an appearance of youthfulness—a matter of considerable consequence to ministers, orators, actors, and in fact every one who lives in the eyes of the public."

MRS. O. A. PRESCOTT, writing from 18 Elm St., Charlestown, Mass., April 14, 1882, says: "Two years ago about two-thirds of my hair came off. It thinned very rapidly, and I was fast growing bald. On using AYER'S HAIR VIGOR the falling stopped and a new growth commenced, and in about a month my head was completely covered with short hair. It has continued to grow, and is now as good as before it fell. I regularly used but one bottle of the VIGOR, but now use it occasionally as a dressing."

We have hundreds of similar testimonials to the efficacy of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR. It needs but a trial to convince the most skeptical of its value.

ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP

FOUR POINTS

Prepared by an entirely NEW METHOD.
Composed of the PUREST MATERIALS.
WILL NOT INJURE THE FABRIC.
WILL CLEANSE WITHOUT RUBBING.

You can do a large washing without any rubbing; use the boiling process instead. You can save Time, Labor, Fuel, Soap and Clothing.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.

Cut up fine and dissolve one half bar in half gallon of hot water. Pour half this dissolved soap into a tub with just sufficient hot water to cover a boiler full of clothes. Then put the clothes in to soak, rubbing plenty of soap in the most soiled parts. Be sure that the soaking water is hot; soak the clothes half an hour; stir them occasionally so that they may get the full benefit of the hot suds; pour the remainder of the dissolved soap into the boiler, adding sufficient water to cover the clothes; wring them lightly out of the suds. Soap the stained spots and place loosely in the boiler; boil 10 to 20 minutes, rinse well, blue and hang to dry. Do not crowd the boiler too full. The same boiling water may be used for further boiling by adding a little soap to each boiler-full of clothes. Fannels and prints should not be boiled, only, a little rubbing required after soaking. This soap will cleanse clothing as thoroughly as any other without the use of the boiler. We prefer and recommend the boiling process as in itself a cleansing process, saving labor, the wear of the wash-board, and being the best disinfectant known, it is easier to boil the dirt out than to rub it out. You can cleanse perfectly the finest fabric without injury: the finest point lace and lace curtains. Soak point lace in hot suds made with this soap, press water out with the hand; boil ten minutes in clean suds made with this soap, rinse thoroughly, press carefully between the folds of a towel, roll in a dry towel, and iron between pieces of old flannel. Soak curtains in to to 30 minutes and boil ten minutes, rinse, stretch on frame, or pin every scallop to carpet over a sheet to dry; no ironing required.

Be sure and ask for ELECTRIC-LIGHT SOAP, and take no other.

Sold by leading wholesale and retail grocers everywhere. Dealers may obtain our goods upon application. ELECTRIC SOAP MANUFACTURING CO., Indianapolis, Ind., and 26-28 South Water St., Chicago, Ill.

THE WONDER

Is becoming universal as to how such an immense sale could be created in Lowell for HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA. But, my friend, if you could stand behind our counter a week and hear what those say who are using it, the reason would appear as clear as the noon-day sun. The real curative power of HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA demonstrates itself in every case where our directions are faithfully regarded. We would that we might get before the people a fractional part of the confidence that is expressed to us every day in this medicine by those who have carefully noted (without prejudice) its effects upon the blood and through that upon the whole system, stimulating all the functions of the body to perform the duties nature requires of them. Try a bottle and satisfy yourself.

Cold Hands and Feet.

LOWELL, Feb. 3, 1879.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gentlemen—About one year ago my daughter commenced taking your Sarsaparilla. At that time she had very little appetite; could take no long walks, and her face was badly broken out with a humor. She was low-spirited; troubled with cold hands and feet; her blood seemed to be poor, and she was in a condition which caused us great anxiety. After taking one bottle of your Sarsaparilla she began to improve; and she now has a good appetite and can take much longer walks. Her humor is nothing compared with what it was one year ago. She is in better spirits, is not troubled with cold hands and feet as previously. And I attribute this improvement in her condition largely to your Sarsaparilla. She has taken six bottles, and intends to continue its use. I was inclined to oppose the trial of it at first. I now have great faith in it as a blood purifier. Very truly yours,

A. L. HINCKLEY,

ANOTHER BANK FAILURE.

The N. C. Thompson Banking Company Goes Under for $750,000.

ROCKFORD, ILL., September 16.—This community was startled yesterday morning by the announcement that N. C. Thompson's bank was closed, and that it had suspended payment. A reporter, on visiting the institution, found the following notice posted on the door:

TO MY CREDITORS:—Owing to the stringency of the money market, I am unable to meet my obligations as they mature, and am compelled to suspend. My assets belong to my creditors until their demands are satisfied. Believing from common experience that an assignment would result in unnecessary loss to the creditors, I have determined to apply my assets directly to satisfy the debts if such a course shall meet the creditors' approval. As soon as an accurate list of property and liabilities can be made I shall be glad to meet my creditors in consultation as to how their interests can best be subserved. This suspension will in no way affect the assets of the corporation known as the N. C. Thompson Manufacturing Company.

It is the advice of some of the leading business men of the city, as well as my own judgment, that no assignment should be made. To the utmost of my ability I shall endeavor to save my creditors from loss, and in this endeavor I hope to receive their aid and assistance. My assets, at a fair valuation, I believe largely exceed my liabilities. Please call at the office of the N. C. Thompson Manufacturing Company, 642 South Main St., West Rockford.

N. C. THOMPSON.

It is impossible to ascertain the amount of the assets or liabilities, but it is stated on good authority that he has failed for $750,000.

The assets include stock in the M. C. Thompson Manufacturing Company, which was recently organized, and in which Mr. Thompson has $200,000 of the $250,000 capital stock and notes against farmers for agricultural implements. Mr. Thompson has been in business in this city since 1855, and has done much to build up the city, being largely interested in Rockford's welfare. The depositors in the bank are farmers and laboring people, on whom the loss falls heavily. The bank was his private institution, where he borrowed money to carry on his manufacturing business. By paying a larger rate of interest than the other banks he succeeded in securing quite large sums of money. A statement will be given to the public soon.

Heavy Frosts Throughout New England.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., September 16.—There was a slight frost here Sunday night, in the towns on the west side of the Connecticut River. Considerable damage was done to the late fruits and vegetables. From Greenfield, Mass., to Windsor, Conn., the crops are reported as more or less injured. In the hill districts the frosts did no damage.

PORTLAND, ME., September 16.—As crops are in frosts did no harm here, but in Kennebec County the damage will reach many thousands of dollars.

PITTSFIELD, MASS., September 16.—Heavy frosts Saturday and Sunday nights did much damage in Berkshire County, especially to corn-fodder, which, in view of the exceedingly poor hay crop, the farmers were all depending on for the winter, the price of hay has gone up two dollars since Saturday.

Remains Found in an Unused Well.

NEW YORK, September 15.—The citizens of New Brighton, L. I., are excited over the finding of human remains and a silver watch in an unused well on Jersey street. The premises were occupied years ago by a man named Cunliffe, who suddenly disappeared after a violent dispute with some of his neighbors. Cunliffe was employed in the brokerage business, and it is alleged the neighbors of the unfortunate man speculated under his directions and lost. The quarrel, after which he disappeared, was between himself and three of the losing speculators. It occurred on a stormy night and he was never seen afterward. The affair will be officially investigated. The watch found is said to resemble one worn by Cunliffe.

Steamer Purchased.

PORTLAND, Me., September 16.—It is reported that the Maine Central Railroad has bought the Portland Steamer "Richmond" and "Lewiston." The Richmond will run between Portland and Annapolis, N. S. It is the intention of the Maine Central to build up a large freight and passenger trade between the Provinces and points westward in this way. The Lewiston will probably be fitted up for the accommodation of travel hither from the westward. The Portland line of boats to Mount Desert being withdrawn, the Boston & Bangor remains the only line of boats to this resort.

An Editor Suicides.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., September 16.—George Latham, editor of the Statesville (N. C.) American, whose death was chronicled in these dispatches yesterday, committed suicide. Latham had been on a spree Friday; retiring to his room at night he wrote to a friend as follows: "Kindest regards to you. You are the only gentleman in Statesville. All the others may go to h—l." Then drinking his laudanum he went to bed and was found dead the next morning.

Three Fatal Accidents.

LOGANSPORT, Ind., September 16.—Three cases awaited the coroner at once at this place last night. Harry Chaffin, a brakeman on the Pan-Handle, was instantly killed in the yard at this place while coupling cars. James Flynn was struck by an engine and received injuries that caused death in a few hours, and the twelve-year-old son of Thomas Dean was tramped to death by a vicious horse.

She Accidentally Shot Her Mother.

ENGLISH, Ind., September 16.—Saturday evening this town was greatly excited by the announcement that Miss Mattie Sloan, residing north of here, had accidently shot and killed her mother. Miss Sloan was handling a revolver which she thought was empty when it was discharged, the contents striking her mother, passing through her right hand and lodging in her left breast, causing instant death.

Became Suddenly Mad.

NEW YORK, September 16.—Foster Douglass, aged nineteen years, son of John Douglass, cashier in Ruppert's brewery, became suddenly mad yesterday morning without assignable cause or provocation. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital. His case puzzled the physician in charge, who was unable to get at the root of his trouble. During the day he was repeatedly very violent.

Jail Delivery.

DANVILLE, Ind., September 16.—Saturday night three prisoners charged with burglary escaped from jail by sawing out their cells and digging through a brick wall. They are supposed to have gone to Indianapolis.

Sentenced to be Hanged.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., September 16.—Geo. H. Mills, the wife murderer, was to-day sentenced to be hanged November 7.

HENRY VILLARD.

An Address to the Stockholders of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

NEW YORK, September 16.—Henry Villard has addressed to the stockholders of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company a review of his labors in their behalf, with an explanation of the causes that led to the disappointment of his administration. Mr. Villard states that in the fall of 1880 Chief Engineer Anderson, of the company, submitted an estimate that $20,773,900 would complete the 825 miles of main line. This estimate seems absurdly low now, but it was at the time the only available basis for financial forecast. There was then in the treasury the equivalent of over $40,000,000, which would have completed the line as per estimate and left a large surplus. New estimates, submitted in January, 1882, showed a cost of $24,001,600 for the remaining 770 miles. The increase of twenty per cent. in the cost of 770 miles over that of 825 miles, was explained by higher prices for labor and materials. The resources of the company still seemed on a close calculation, equal to this estimate. Just at this time the company's trouble with the Government about the land grant began. For eleven months no road was accepted by the Government. The company had to dispose of its securities, and was unable to borrow money. Mr. Villard lent it $3,441,000 personally. After describing the struggles of the company, Mr. Villard shows that the main line was finally completed at a cost of $42,980,796, or over ninety per cent. in excess of the chief engineer's first calculation. Mr. Villard, after pointing to the efforts for economy, submits that the reverses befalling the Transcontinental Company and himself were due not to any fault of his, but to the mistakes of the engineering department. He claims that his labors in completing the line have put the company in shape to obtain what money they need, and that if, as he believes, they have $1,000,000 surplus on June 30 next, it will be due to his management.

POLITICAL NOTES.

The Chairman of the Massachusetts Republican State Committee Resigns—Congressional Nominations.

BOSTON, September 16.—At a meeting yesterday of the Republican State Committee, Henry Cabot Lodge tendered his resignation of its chairmanship. This was considered, and an unanimous declination to accept it was agreed upon. Thereupon Lodge said he should enter heartily upon the further work of the campaign and do all that in him lies to make it successful. Mr. Lodge's offer to withdraw was because of the fact that he is a Congressional candidate, and of the possibility that it might be felt that he could not do as much in both positions for the good of the party as he might do if he occupied but one.

AUGUSTA, Ga., September 16.—The Republican Convention of the Tenth Congressional District passed a resolution declaring that it was inexpedient to nominate a candidate for Congress.

CAPE MAY, N. J., September 16.—The Democrats of the First Congressional District renominated for Congress Hon. Thomas M. Ferrill by acclamation.

ST. LOUIS, September 16.—The Republicans of the Tenth District Saturday nominated Judge C. A. Newcomb for Congress.

SALT LAKE, Utah, September 16.—John Hailey was nominated by the Democrats of Idaho as Delegate to Congress. An anti-Mormon resolution was voted down.

Frightful Explosion.

PEORIA, Ill., September 16.—An explosion, rivaling in horror the one at the Pekin distillery a day or two ago, occurred at Morton, Ill., yesterday afternoon, causing the death of two and the mortal injury of three others. While the steam power of Volcell, Rossie & Ziediker's wagon manufactory was being used to run a cider press, the engineer permitted the water in the boilers to run too low and committed the error of filling them with cold water. A terrible explosion followed, killing Jacob Slagel, the engineer, and a boy named Briseler. Christian Ackerman, Henry Rossie and George Lowman also are suffering from broken bones and scalds. They will probably die. A number of bystanders were more or less injured. After the explosion the building took fire and burned. The loss is not known.

Annual Contest of Cricketers.

PHILADELPHIA, September 16.—For the thirtieth time the brawny criketers who enjoy citizenship in the Dominion and the States met yesterday morning to begin their annual contest to decide the relative superiority of the Canadians and Americans. The United States players have among their number four of the participants in the recent European tour—Howard McNutt, F. E. Brewster, W. C. Morgan and Rutherland Law. D. L. Newhall is the only member of the family drawn for the match. He captains the team. The other players representing the United States, are W. W. Noble, F. W. Ralston, Jr., Samuel Welsh and D. P. Stoever, all of this city; Ridgeway Moore, of the Staten Islands; C. L. Bixtery, of the Bostons; Longwoods and Hazen Brown, of Pittsburgh.

Prize Fight.

NEW YORK, September 16.—The Turn Halle was crowded last night to witness a six round glove fight, Marquis of Queensbury rules, for $250, between Professor William McClellan and Walter Watson. In the sixth round Watson slung in his right, sending McClellan down in a heap, and when he attempted to rise Watson again sent him down. Then the crowd got on the stage and this gave McClellan time to get up but Watson caught him a terrific crack on the jaw and he fell forward on his face and knees, remaining in that position for a minute, when he was picked up. The battle was given to Watson. McClellan was badly bruised.

Cholera in British Columbia.

OTTAWA, Ont., September 16.—Late advices from British Columbia state that two cases of Asiatic cholera are reported at Clinton, on the mainland. The announcement has caused great alarm among the Chinamen working along the line of the Canadian Pacific Road.

Forge Shuts Down.

BUFFALO, N. Y., September 16.—The Delaney Forge and Iron Works, located on Perry street, shut down yesterday, throwing 100 men out of employment. Lack of orders is the cause assigned.

All weakness and ill health owes its origin to an impure state of blood and a weakness of the urinary and digestive organs. A medicine that will strengthen these organs, and at the same time purify the blood, will assist nature in cuting nearly every disease that human flesh and blood is heir to. Such a remedy is Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla, and, although it possesses no cathartic or diuretic effect, its use will soon establish a regular habit of body as well as cure weakness of the kidneys, indicated by urinary sediments, nervousness, etc.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine.

This most interesting publication is conducted with liberality, enterprise and talent; in fact, the name of the editor, T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., is a voucher for its excellence. The October number is filled with contributions in prose and poetry by some of the most popular writers, and the illustrations are numerious and meritorious. Among the contents are articles by Rev. Geo. T. Rider, Mrs. Robbins, A. E. Alexander, Hervey, J. Alex, Patten, etc.; sermons by the editor and D. L. Moody; poems by Mrs. T. K. Hervey, Longfellow, Madeline S. Bridges, etc.; and serial and short stories, sketches and essays, replete with interest. "A Trip Through South Holland," "Historical Attractions of Inwood," "Titian's Religious Paintings," "Children of All Nations," etc., will well repay the reader; indeed, the pages teem with interest, entertainment and instruction. The Magazine should find its way into every family circle. A single copy is 25 cents, or $2.50 a year, postpaid. MRS. FRANK LESLIE, Publisher, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, N. Y.

A remedy that has proven itself a never-failing cure for scrofula and all syphilitic disorders must quickly cure less terrible blood diseases. Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla is such a perfect blood purifier and strengthener of bodyily functions, that it cures the above diseases even when Hot Springs and all other treatment has failed. Remember, it is absolutely free from mineral poisons, and will not injure the most delicate constitution. Its use will make you feel buoyant, strong and well, and will rid your system of all blood impurities and every internal and external indication of disease.

The Secret of Wealth.

Broken down invalids do you wish to gain flesh, to acquire an appetite to enjoy a regular habit of body, to obtain refreshing sleep, to feel and know that every fiber and tissue of your system is being braced up and renovated. If so commence at once a course of Golden Seal Bitters. In one week you will be convalescent. In a month you will be well. Don't despair because you have a weak constitution. Fortify the body against disease by purifying all the fluids with Golden Seal Bitters. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus forearmed. The liver, the stomach, the bowels, the kidneys, are rendered disease proof by this great invigorant. Ruinous bills for medical attendance may be avoided by counteracting the first symptoms of sickness with these Bitters. They are recommended from friend to friend, and the sale increases daily. We warrant a cure. They are a positive cure also for all female complaints. In these diseases they have no equal. Take no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT TECUMSEH, MICHIGAN, AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TECUMSEH, MICH., SEPT. 18, 1884.

The latest conundrum in connection with the Detroit Evening Journal newspaper war is this: "What has become of Hubbard's dog?"

The second edition of the Mulligan letters is decidedly interesting reading, although they are not calculated to promote the success of Mr. Blaine's canvass.

Mr. Blaine would have undoubtedly voted on the prohibition amendment at the Maine election, but he felt a sun-stroke approaching, and wisely abstained.

The Bloomington Bulletin states a political fact in this wise. The aggressive way in which Blaine charged the polling place in his home on Monday last and didn't vote for the prohibitory amendment was a caution.

The fusion county ticket will command every Democratic and Greenback vote in the county of Lenawee. There will be no laggards in the ranks this fall. The ticket is a splendid one, from Judge of Probate to Coroners, and it was made to win.

The Republicans and Greenbackers have formed a fusion electoral ticket in Arkansas. We await with anxiety the storm of indignation which will sweep down upon this last fusion movement from the Republican party newspapers of Michigan.

The Chicago News says: It cannot be denied that Mr. Blaine has a well balanced mind. Any man who can stand on the boundary line between the prohibitionists and the whiskyites and maintain his equilibrium was evidently intended by nature for a tight-rope walker or a champion bicyclist.

The county ticket placed in nomination by the Democrats and Greenbackers last Friday is the best and ablest ticket they have placed before the people in many years. There is no poor timber upon it whatever. And it is safe to say that it stands the best chance of success of any county ticket in the field.

The Boston Transcript has this interesting news from Maine: "It is a fine morning, Mr. Blaine," said a neighbor meeting the candidate the other day. "Sir," exclaimed the incorruptible patriot, the weather is an issue which does not enter into the national campaign. I prefer not to discuss it sir.—not to discuss it."

The Chicago News says: And now they say Ben Butler plays a good game of poker. Should think he might. With one eye wide open and looking up as if he had a straight flush and the other drooping and looking at the floor as if he had a kelter or a jally-cooler, how's a man going to know what to do about it?

The New York Independent says: "The present Presidential campaign is the auspicious time to put in practice the golden political principles we have announced. Let it be known and proclaimed north and south and from ocean to ocean that Grover Cleveland and James G. Blaine are not the kind of men now wanted to fill any public office."

And so the Independent stands, like the historical donkey between two stacks of hay, hesitating to choose between Butler and St. John.

The ways of the N. Y. Sun are past finding out. Only five or six years ago it denounced Ben Butler as the personification of all political evil; now it supports him. In 1882 it favored Grover Cleveland for Governor, and nominated him for President after his election to the Governorship; now it opposes him. As late as June last it strongly opposed Thurman's nomination at Chicago on the ground that no Ohio man was a safe candidate, now it claims that Thurman should have been the nominee.

The political arithmetician is now turning his attention to Ohio. That state has given a Republican majority in every presidential election since 1856. Here are the figures.

In 1856	Fremont	16,622.
" 1860	Lincoln	34,388.
" 1864	"	60,055.
" 1868	Grant	41,546.
" 1872	"	37,531.
" 1876	Hayes	7,516.
" 1880	Garfield	34,227.

If Blaine is as strong in Ohio as his friends claim, he should carry the state by as large a majority as Garfield had.

TEMPERANCE DEPARTMENT.

EDITED BY A COMMITTEE OF THE UNION PROHIBITION PARTY.

Motto—No License for the Liquor Traffic in any form, or for any price.

UNION PROHIBITION TICKET.

For President—John P. St. John, of Kansas.
For Vice Pres't—William Daniel, of Maryland.

A UNION RALLY.

Prof. Sam'l Dickie of Albion College gave an address at the opera house, last Saturday afternoon to an enthusiastic meeting in the interests of the Union Prohibition party. The attendance was good and Mr. Dickie's speech of an hour and a half was listened to with close attention. The following abstract contains but a partial report.

The old parties were not representing the people—especially the better element of our people—but were representing the politician and the machine manipulation, the result being the present political evils, therefore it becomes necessary to organize a new party. Democrats cannot give you good reasons why they vote that ticket. Republicans the same. They say we have but one idea. This seems true of the old parties. One has the single idea of getting into power, the other in keeping in power. All history confirms the position that new parties that succeed are organized with one prominent idea, and this charge made against us is an evidence of ultimate success. There is no doubt in a time of peace but the party in power will take care of the general interest of the government, even if it gains the ascendency by adhering to one great living issue. Is this question of Prohibition of the liquor traffic of sufficient importance to be the one great issue of a political party? There are three factors which make up the issues of parties; moral, social and financial. Parties have been organized on each of these separately, but in the question of prohibition these three factors all center, in an exceedingly important sense. What live issue have the old parties which promise better morals, better social life or improved financial conditions? —they have none.

The relation of our leading issue as bearing upon these questions is of the greatest magnitude. The expense of the open dram shop is 940 million annually. Three times the cost of our iron and steel; three times the cost of our lumber product; three times the value of our wool. As much as all of these combined. It is not only a useless financial expense, but what is worse, it brings the human family, a large portion of it, to corrupted morals, social wretchedness and disgraceful poverty.

But we are told that the farmer could not find a market for his grain if Prohibition prevailed. A large portion of our population now go half fed for they spend their money for drink. If it were not spent for drink they would buy enough more meal, flour, &c., made from the farmer's grain to maintain the market. It would be many times cheaper and better for the people of this country to buy up all the grain made into liquor, or the liquor itself and empty it into the ocean, and furnish a living for all the liquor dealers and manufacturers, keeping them in elegant idleness, than to have the poisoned drink strained through the stomachs of our fellow men, making criminals, idiots and paupers for which you farmers are continually taxed to provide for and support.

There are no doubt many good men who sincerely favor the tax system. They say "prohibition does not prohibit," neither does regulation regulate, neither does restriction restrict. I sometimes ask why it is that some ministers and many good men in the old parties talk about regulation, restriction and prohibition, just like the brewers, distillers, saloonkeepers and their patrons do.

The question of prohibition being constitutional has been settled for years. This was settled in the days of Webster and Choate. We are often told that we have no right to interfere with or outlaw the business of liquor selling. It has no right to be called a business. It is a fraud. It debases the drinker, amasses a fortune. It takes a man's money without giving an equivalent. In fact does him an injury.

It is said why not organize a party to stop burglary, arson, murder, and all other crimes of the land. We say whenever robbers, murderers, &c., become able to dictate the action of existing political parties, and have their demands complied with, a party will be organized for the purpose of destroying their criminal work. The dictum of the brewers has had too much to do with the legislation of Michigan, and the whole country for the past fifteen years. The Democrat and Republican parties have been in competition to see which could bow the more gracefully to the dictation of the beer brewers and distillers. We say we must have a new party. We say so because of this yielding to this body and soul destroying creature, both of these old parties must go. Would unite with either of the old parties if they would do anything for us. When the Republicans had their overwhelming majority in this state they could have submitted prohibition to the people but they would not. Now if they would do it they couldn't. Because not strong enough. Slander, mud and slime, characterize the fight between the old parties. Each party would give any amount of testimony to convict the other of nearly all the crimes ever heard charged against a political party. We know both of them are telling more falsehood than truth. There are many good men in both democrat and republican parties and they are coming to us. Some are here to-day ready to cut loose and join us. The democrat party at the Chicago convention said they were opposed to laws which vex the citizen; were opposed to all sumptuary laws, or prohibition.

Republicans say why don't you say more about the democrats opposing prohibition and not pitch into us all the time? Two boys are caught stealing watermelons, and brought into court. The plea of one is guilty. No evidence is taken or needed in his case, nothing remains to be done in his case but give the sentence. The other fellow pleads not guilty and it is the duty of the court to take evidence, etc., to prove his guilt. The democrat party pleads guilty as a whisky party. We have nothing to do with it only to get all the anti-whisky men out of that party. The republican party set up a plea of not guilty, as a whisky party, and says it is a temperance party. Our duty is to discharge it or proceed with the trial. We are proceeding. At the national case, in '72 the republican party in the 16th plank of the platform, called the Herman Raster plank, took a position against the so-called temperance and Sunday laws. Mr. Raster so explained it, soon after. It was done to save the beer vote to that party. The plank has been reaffirmed at each national convention since without any attempt to repeal it. Judging the party by the platform it is against prohibition.

The Chicago Tribune recently said: "more to be feared than Butlerism is the prohibitionists. Prohibition must be prohibited by the republican party."

Geo. Wm. Curtis of Harper's Weekly, before Mr. Blaine was nominated, said "the republican party is not a prohibition party."

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "The republican party must have nothing to do with this question pro or con."

The Detroit Post says: The republican party is composed of men who believe in high license, some low license, some prohibition, but all loyal to republicanism." With these elements in the party it cannot be a prohibition party.

Another way to judge a party is by its leading men. How is Mr. Blaine? He refused to vote for the prohibitory constitutional amendment on last Monday in his own State, when it was carried by at least 40,000 majority. Mr. Blaine though called the plumed knight, decided to show the white feather on the most important question of the day, and will ever after be known as a prohibition dodger.

The Chicago Tribune reports Buffalo Miller, the acknowledged leader of the Ohio beer brewers and liquor dealers, as saying that "Turner Hall at the 13th session of the liquor dealers congress, resounded with cheers for Blaine and Logan." During an interview recently this same Buffalo Miller remarked, "it is all nonsense to say that Mr. Blaine is not all right." Its platform, its leading organs and its greatest men all unite in proving that the republican party is against prohibition. Do not blame us because these things are so. Blame the party which is only responsible. We are charged with trying to defeat the republican party. It is no part of our business to do this as an end. It may be part of our means. We are told that we ought not to destroy the party which has done so much for the country. We will ask three questions: Have not any number of citizens a right to organize themselves into a political party if they so choose? Yes. Having founded a party have they not a right to support and work for its success? Yes. Can they ever succeed without defeating all the other existing parties? No. Then accord us these privileges is all we ask of the old parties.

Our aim is square at the whisky business, and we are bound to shoot. If your party is hit and gets hurt it cannot be a temperance or prohibition party. We should not support men who still adhere to old parties. They have good men, as good as the best of our men, some of them on their ticket. We set out to support principles before men. We are fully persuaded that the old parties cannot represent our principles, cannot do for us what we want. To help them to oppose what we want will not only stultify ourselves but help our own defeat. Prohibition will never triumph while we vote for a man whose party is committed to perpetuate what we want prohibited. Take the nation as a whole, there is an important sense in which the record of the republican party on the temperance question is worse than the democratic party if possible. While I believe there are more good men in the republican party than the democrat party, yet it is a fact that the democrat party has given the states more prohibitory laws than the republican party has. It is also true that the republican party has repealed more prohibitory laws than the democrat has. At this very hour there is more prohibition territory south of Mason and Dixon's line, where democracy reigns supreme than there is north of it where nearly every state is republican. These are facts of history and cannot be denied. If our republican friends dread to hear them stated, remember and blame the party not us. We do not want any one to think we are partial to the democrat party. We have no more love for one than the other old parties. But we do have a greater respect for the democrat party on the score of candor. It is honest and says it is a whisky party. The republican party says it is a temperance party and lies about it. That is where the difference comes in.

In regard to our state and temperance legislation. In '52 the democrat legislature passed a prohibitory law which was declared unconstitutional, because of being submitted to the people for ratification. In '54, the legislature consisted of democrats, republicans and whigs, no party having a majority; the prohibitory law was then enacted. In '57, the legislature being republican, the search and seizure clause was stricken out of the law. In '61 the republican legislature struck out the wine and beer clause, making those liquors free. In '74, in compliance with the liquor dealers demand what was left of the old law was entirely repealed, and the tax law enacted in its place as suggested by the beer brewers and liquor dealers. In '79 a copy of the Maine law called the Mosher bill, was introduced by Chas. Mosher, at present candidate for congress, and defeated to save the liquor vote to the republican party which then controled the state by an overwhelming majority. In '81 the legislature stood republicans, 117, democrats 16. The people asked by a large petition, to have the question of prohibition submitted for their decision. The people were refused again at the behest of the liquor interests. In '83 the republican state convention demanded submission by the next legislature, and, had all the republicans voted for it the amendment would have been submitted. In their last convention the republican party again demanded submission to catch the temperance vote, but said also "that our course in the past is a safe guide for the future" to hold the liquor vote which it is evident is of more consequence to them than the temperance vote. When the last republican national convention refused to favor the submission of a prohibitory amendment to the people, and by so doing insulted every temperance organization in the land, with its hundreds of thousands of members, St. John our candidate for president declared he would follow no longer the "grand old party" but would by his influence, voice and vote resent that insult and many of you will do the same. It is untrue that a vote is thrown away when cast for principle or in accordance with your convictions. A prohibitionist will throw away his vote if he votes the democrat or republican ticket. Yes worse than that, he will vote to continue a state of things which he does not want. Republicans say the old party will be needed as long as the sectional strife between north and south continued. I want to say, that strife would not exist to-day if it were not for the efforts of the republican party to keep it alive for campaign purposes. The existence of the party to a large extent depends upon the existence and continuance of that strife. Our movement will unite the best citizens of the south with the best citizens of the north, and present a solid phalanx against the rum fiend, and in a very short time the sectional strife of to-day will be among the things of the past. This very state of things demands a new party. The old parties must go.

ESTATE OF RUFUS R. HALL.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee, ss.

At a session of the Probate Court, for the County of Lenawee, holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, on Friday, the 12th day of September in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four.

Present Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Rufus R. Hall, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified of Mary J. Hall, widow of said deceased, praying for the probate of an instrument now on file in this court, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, and that administration of said estate may be granted to petitioner and Francis Rector, nominated executors in said instrument, or to some other suitable person.

Thereupon it is Ordered, That Monday, the 13th day of October next at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said Court then to be holden at the Probate office, in the City of Adrian, and show cause, if any there be why the prayer of said Petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said Petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County of Lenawee, for three successive weeks, previous to said day of hearing.

NORMAN GEDDES, Judge of Probate.

Mr. S. A. Clauharty, who sold the VanVleet farm a mile South of Tecumseh last year now lives on the "Whaley" farm about a mile west of Adrian. We paid him a short call last Monday and found him nicely situated. He has 160 acres of land, and claims to have the most productive farm in the township of Adrian. His wheat yielded 26 bu. this year and his oats 60 bu. to the acre. He showed us some magnificent specimens of White Elephant, Beauty of Hebron and Snowflake potatoes which he had just been digging.

Mr. Geo. Lewis has made arrangements with the M. & O. R. R. and the Wabash, to carry passengers over both roads to and from the fair from Addison and intermediate stations, via. Britton at excursion rates. Tickets good both ways, Sept. 24th and 25th and return 26th, being the 2d. 3d. and 4th fair days. The association has also made arrangements with the other roads to carry passengers at one and one-third rates during fair. A large excursion will be run from Detroit, also from Butler on the Wabash. The grounds are nearly completed and track will be in good order by opening of the fair. The Secretary will be at his office, with Geo. L. Bennett in the city, every day of the week preceeding the fair to take entries. No pains are being spared to make the fair a grand success.

RED VS. WHITE.

The announcement that the Tecumseh Base Ball club would play a game of ball with a nine composed of Pottawatamie Indians last Tuesday drew a good sized audience, who were curious to see if the "noble red man" could handle the bat and ball with as much dexterity as their forefathers could the tomahawk and scalping knife.

The Indians have a good nine and show they have had considerable practice. They got the lead in the game and held it until the ninth innings when by heavy batting the home club run in five tallies and won the game by a score of 13 to 9.

The Tecumseh club did not have their regular nine and did not play their usual game. McKinney pitched with Heidenrich behind the bat. They made 13 runs, 12 base hits with a total of 16, and 13 errors. The Indians made 9 runs 6 base hits with a total of 6, and 17 errors.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

The University opens Sept. 24.

Genuine Vienna Bread at Star Bakery Saturday next.

D. Heale, of Owosso, N. Y., is visiting B. F. DePuy for a few days.

Charlie Arnold, of Adrian, was in Tecumseh Tuesday visiting his brother Will.

The gentle voice of the chimney sweep was heard upon our streets last Tuesday.

Quite a number of our people are attending the state fair this week at Kalamazoo.

John J. Adam spent Sunday last with his daughter, Mrs. Chas. Blanchard, in Chicago.

Rev. Wellington DePuy has been visiting his friends in Tecumseh and vicinity the past few days.

Slayton & Son have received orders for over one hundred car loads of hard coal to be delivered to our citizens.

An excursion train of eight heavily loaded cars of German Lutherans from Adrian went over the Branch last Sunday to Jackson.

We have at our office four sample ears of corn raised by Frank Davidson this season. They are worthy of exhibition at the state fair.

The Raisin Valley Seminary has opened with 73 pupils in attendance, against 44 in attendance at the opening of the fall term last year.

U. R. Evans has begun the fall term of his Commercial College at Adrian with a good attendance of pupils. He has both day and evening classes.

Miss 'Hon' Heesen left Tecumseh yesterday morning for a trip to Beloit, Wis., where she will spend a few weeks as the guest of Mrs. W. H. Passmore, at the Goodwin House.

The skating rink is doing a good business. Thursday has been set apart as ladies' day, and no gentlemen will be admitted on that day or evening without lady escorts.

G. P. Waring attended a meeting of the Union State Committee held at Jackson last Monday. There was a full attendance and the report presented was very encouraging.

The people of Lenawee and vicinity will be favored with the presence of Ex-Gov. St. John at a meeting to be held at Adrian, Oct. 7. The meeting will be well advertised and the arrangements made known next week.

Frederick Fisher, who worked for Henry Smith in the paper mill about six years ago, is now engaged in Bowerfind's Bakery at Adrian. He is well satisfied with his position, and Mr. Bowerfind finds him a most faithful employee.

Beecher Howell, son of Judge Howell, of Adrian, who is a third year cadet at the U. S. Naval Academy, is at home during September spending his annual vacation. He has succeeded admirably in his course thus far and returns on the first of October to begin his fourth year.

Rev. R. S. Pardiugton, of Hartford, Conn., arrived in town last Friday and remained over the Sabbath. He occupied the pulpit on Sunday evening at the M. E. church and preached to a crowded house. His many Tecumseh friends were glad to welcome him and only regret that he could not make a longer stay.

Straws were taken on the M. & O. train last Thursday and Friday which were well loaded to take in the Tri-State Fair, the special attractions being the presence of Hendricks and Logan. The vote Thursday stood Blaine 62, St. John 45, Cleveland 25, Butler 15. Friday—Blaine 53, St. John 44, Cleveland 35, Butler 18.

Now is a good time for the farmer to prepare his ice house. We have shown year after year that he can make no investment more productive of health and comfort. Ten to fifty tons of ice may be put up at small cost, that will be paid in the handling of the milk alone. There will be more butter and better. Eggs can be kept fresh for weeks. Victuals left over may be kept over from day to day, and many other economies practiced. And in case of sickness nothing in the way of accessories to nursing and care is worth so much as ice. Let every farmer make up his mind to have it.

Mr. W. H. Passmore, proprietor of the Lilley House, has purchased the Goodwin House at Beloit, Wisconsin, and took possession last Saturday.—The Lilley House has been very much improved since Mr. Passmore took possession of it, and we have no doubt that he will furnish Beloit with a first class hotel. The Lilley House will hereafter be managed by Capt. Foster who has been connected with the house for several months past, and under his management the house will be kept to the front. Capt. Foster "knows how to keep a hotel," as people have found out since his residence in Tecumseh. We extend to him our best wishes for his success and feel confident that he will merit and achieve it.

Gen. Logan was greeted with a large crowd at the Lake Shore depot in Adrian Tuesday afternoon and responded with a few remarks.

Miss Miller, of Union Home, Mich., who has been visiting friends in this vicinity for the past few weeks, returned to her home yesterday.

We now know why Gus Slayton is building a large house. There is an increase in the family. Edith, a ten pound girl. Parents doing well, so is the baby.

The firm of Drs. House & Jones has been dissolved. Dr. Jones will remain at the old office over Lilley, Bidwell & Co's bank until further notice. The Doctor will fit up an office on Chicago street within a few days.

S. R. Terry returned Tuesday from a few day's visit with Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Welling at their home in Ohio. Mr. Welling is much improved in health and with a few months' rest and outdoor exercise he hopes to be fully restored.

The corn crop in this section is nearly beyond the power of frost to injure it. Although the crop has doubtless been shortened by the dry weather which has prevailed for the last three months, still the yield will be at least average.

Pile the green corn, stalks and all, into your young pigs. Collect all the faulty squashes, pumpkins and melons for the same purpose. This kind of diet is not very fattening, but it can not be equalled for producing growth of frame and muscle, upon which fat can be laid a little later.

The Lake Shore passenger employes are to be uniformed. The new suits of blue cloth and brass buttons are to be supplied about October 15, and a special train with the railway tailors passed through Hudson taking the measures of the men Saturday. The suits cost from $21 to $26, and Vanderbilt don't make a present of them to the men either.

The Chautauqua movement has been extended to include the young folks, who already have a "Reading Union." They are now to have an illustrated periodical of high character, which will be issued in July by the Publishers of the far-famed Wide Awake magazine, D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, who will send it free for one month to any of our readers who may request it.

Mrs. Albert Carpenter, residing about three miles west of Adrian, while drawing water from a well with a windlass, slipped her hold and was struck on the head by the handle of the windlass with such force as to completely stun her and for twenty-four hours she lay unconscious, and up to last accounts she has not been able to speak. It is feared the blow may terminate fatally.

When a home paper visits over twelve hundred families regularly, week by week, in the town and immediate vicinity of its publication, and is borrowed and read by four hundred families more, and a merchant says that it does not do him any good to advertise in its columns, the people must arrive at one of two conclusions, that this merchant has a very peculiar class of customers, or does a very poor business.

If you want to see good times, money plenty and every thing lively, let every man pay up what he owes, or at least pay a part of it [and begin with the printer first.] There is plenty of money in the country, and never a better wheat crop, as well as other kinds of crops, so shell out and distribute your money all around and it will seem and be as plenty as in war times. And people will feel more cheerful and happy if they can see such evidences of prosperity and plenty.

Capt. Foster, the new landlord of the Lilley House, inaugurated his administration with an elegant Sunday dinner last Sabbath. A special bill of fare was printed at the HERALD job rooms for the occasion, and the dinner itself was all that the most particular epicure could desire. We had the pleasure of partaking, with his other guests, and can only wonder how he can afford as good meals at the rates he charges. It is his intention to provide printed bills of fare for dinners regularly hereafter. The Captain will spare no pains to make the Lilley House a favorite both with the travelling public and with regular boarders at home.

Speaking of wheat this year, a friend from Dakota writes: I have been in Tower city a month. We are just upon the divide between the Red River valley and the James River valley, and right in the midst of the wheat raising section of North Dakota.—East of us is the Dalrymple farm, with its 40,000 acres under cultivation.—This year there are two fields of wheat—one of 16,000 and the other of 11,000 acres. When I passed through last week, they were in the midst of the harvest, using 200 harvesters to cut the entire crop. It is estimated that Cass county will harvest 5,000,000 bushels of wheat this year. The yield is enormus, and between Casselton and Fargo, a distance of 20 miles, nothing could be seen two weeks ago except fields of wheat reaching back on each side of the railway just as far as you could see, a distance of six or eight miles, perhaps.

Chas. T. Hewitt, of Toledo, was in Tecumseh yesterday.

Dept. Sheriff Smyth was at Toledo last week on duty at the Tri-State Fair.

R. Morrison has laid a new sidewalk in front of his property on Railroad street.

C. R. Mabley, of Detroit, proposes to subscribe $10,000 toward a permanent exposition in Detroit or he will give $1,000 toward securing the next state fair in that city.

You should never say, I swent. It betokens unpardonable verdancy. Say I am being deprived of my saline and oleaginous fluids through the excretories of my pellucid article with a condensation of moisture upon the superficial exterior.

The clothing dealer, who was a little given to sensational advertising, notified the world that the bottom had dropped out of pantaloons and then did'nt have a rush of trade, and he only made things worse by announcing that clothing had gone all to pieces.

A Butler & West club was organized in this village on the 10th inst., with fifty members. The following are the officers:

President—G. W. Frasier.
Vice Pres.—J. C. Eckles.
Secretary—J. M. Hibbard.
Treasurer—F. P. Deuel.
Cores Sec.—J. W. Cole.

Byron Carlton, who formerly lived in Tecumseh, has recently bought an interest in a blacksmith shop on North Winter street in the city of Adrian, nearly opposite the jail, where he is building up a fine business. He owns a nice little home about a mile north of Adrian near the old Horton corners. His old Tecumseh acquaintances will be glad to learn of his prosperity.

A goodly number of friends and neighbors assembled at the residence of Geo. Griswold to witness the opening of a night-blooming cereus blossom which occurred Wednesday evening, Sept. 10th. The bud commenced opening at 2 o'clock P. M., and at 10 P. M., the flower measured nine and one half inches in diameter. Some coming a distance of four miles declared themselves well paid for the trouble.

Bro. Field has no reason to regret his removal to Tecumseh. In adition to an increase of business, his wife presented him with a fine girl baby last Thursday. All the printers in Tecumseh, regardless of sex or previous condition, extend their hearty congratulations.—Tecumseh Herald.

Thanks, Brother Stacy, we hope we shall be able to extend similar congratulations to yourself some day.—Tecumseh News.

The News does'nt hope any thing of the kind. It knows that Bro. Stacy has taken an oath.—Adrian Record.

The new postal note is made of paper of a faded lilac color, and is printed black on the face and blue on the back. The number of dollars is indicated by the number of stubs attached to it after it is torn from the book.—The chief reason for making the change from the old one—made of bright yellow paper with a broad design in green on the back—was the poisonous character of the ink used on the backing.

S. W. Temple has got out some neat four page circulars containing price quotations of the different kinds of coal he sells. Mr. Temple now controls all the best kinds of anthracite and bituminous coals, and is prepared to make very low figures by the ton or car load. He has a large wholesale trade which is constantly increasing. Parties at home who buy their anthracite coal of him will be presented with enough charcoal to start their fires with.

"Why, sir," said a prosperous, wide-awake farmer, the other day, "if wheat is only 78c and other farm products equally as low, what's the use of grumbling. With the labor-saving facilities we have now I can market my grain at half the former cost. I can make money selling wheat at 75c and I never knew the time when one dollar would buy as much as it will to-day. But farming is like breathing—you have to keep at it, and that right steadily, or you can not live.

Lavern Wheeler has recently taken two large groups on plates fourteen by seventeen inches in size which are beauties. One represents the firm of H. Brewer & Co. with all their employees, numbering thirty six in all. The other represents the hands employed by the Tecumseh Lumber Co., numbering seventeen. Mr. Wheeler is making a specialty now of landscape views and large size groups, and it is needless to say that his pictures are fine ones.

The publishers of the "American Cyclopedia," D. Appleton & Co., are now delivering the annual for 1883. These annual volumes are published regularly each year and contribute a most valuable supplement to the original work. Matters of current interest can be treated much more elaborately in them, than in the original volumes, and hence they are of great value for reference. People who own the set can not afford to do without the annuals when the small expenditure of six dollars per annum will keep them up. If there is no local agent from whom they can be procured, write to O. J. Rowe, Western Agent, 200 Main street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

"The Patterson" is rapidly nearing completion.

Mrs. W. H. Passmore started yesterday for her new home at Beloit, Wis.

While at Adrian last Friday to attend the county convention we called at the Record office to get acquainted with Bro. Beakes. The Record has been much improved during his brief connection with it, and its columns bear witness that an experienced man has now got hold of the helm. Bro. Beakes has a good field for a live independent daily, and judging from present indications we believe he will cultivate it successfully.

The McGibeny Family gave one of their fascinating entertainments to a large and delighted audience last Tuesday evening. They are all musical prodigies. The father, the adult children, and the "little shavers" are all full of music and overflowing with fun, making up a first-class concert troupe in one family. One can pass a most enjoyable evening listening to one of their concerts.

C. W. Taylor will sell at auction on the premises of Andrew Taylor, two miles north and one mile west of Rome Center, on Saturday, Sept. 27th, 1884, at 1 o'clock, P. M., the following property: Horse, cow, heifer calf, single buggy, single harness, 8 or 10 tons of hay, 150 bushels of oats, 3 acres of corn in shock, 2 hogs, melodeon, Howe sewing machine, buffalo robe, household furniture, &c. Usual terms of sale. Ben. Reynolds, auctioneer.

There will be a meeting of the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle, at the residence of Dr. House on Friday evening, Sept. 26th, 1884 for the purpose of organization, election of officers and arranging details for the year's work. Those who have pursued this course of reading for two years past, are more than pleased with it; and all unite in a hearty endorsement and commend it to any who may desire to pursue a course of reading which will prove instructive as well as pleasing. Its object is to awaken an interest in history, travel, literature, science and art, and all who pursue the four year's course of reading will find that it has accomplished its mission faithfully, and they will not be easily pursuaded to abandon reading which is healthful to those who desire to gain knowledge. A cordial invitation is extended to every one who would like to take this course of instruction, or who would like to examine into its merits, to be present at this meeting.

FIFTY YEARS OF WEDDED LIFE

The golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Philo C. Mills was celebrated at the residence of their daughter, Mrs. H. M. Pomeroy, in Adrian, on Wednesday, Sept. 10th, and was a most enjoyable occasion. Few wedded lives are unitedly prolonged for fifty years, and especially rare are the instances where both are found blessed with such unimpaired vigor of body and mind. Children and children's children to the fourth generation were represented in the company, and all eagerly contributed to the joy of the occasion. Mr. and Mrs. Mills were generously remembered with beautiful and valuable gifts from their children and grand-children and many friends. After refreshments were served, a newspaper, yellow with age, bearing date Sept. 10, 1834, was produced, from which Dr. J. W. Keeney, of Franklin, read the marriage notice of Philo C. Mills, of Groveland, N. Y., and Miss Mary Keeney, of LeRoy, N. Y., also at the same time and place, Dr. John Cadman, of Medina, N. Y., and Miss Nancy B. Keeney, of LeRoy. Dr. Keeney and Mrs A. F. Bixby then rose as representatives of the wedding party fifty years ago. A letter of congratulation was read from James P. Cadman, of Chicago, son of Dr. John Cadman, in which he made touching allusion to his beloved parents, now reunited in the spirit land. A letter from D. B. Greene, Esq., of Ypsilanti, the husband of Mrs. Mills's youngest sister, reviewing tenderly the memories, both sad and glad, of a half century, was read by Mrs. Bixby and listened to with great interest, as also other letters from some who remembered the marriage bells of fifty years ago. A short poem inscribed to Mr. and Mrs. Mills, by Prof. A. E. Curtis, was greatly appreciated.

Mrs. Mary Blair, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mills, read an appropriate poem.

Rev. Mr. Little being called upon for remarks, said that his function at marriage festivities had usualy been to do the work, rather than offer congratulations upon the work of another, and thought he should experience less embarrassment and more inspiration under circumstances—probably referring to the inspiration of a fee—but his address was very acceptable. Judge Geddes being referred to as a friend of the "olden time," that gentleman hastened to repudiate the idea that he was a patriarch; in view of future possibilities he preferred to be regarded a young man, but he confessed that his earliest remembrance was of the pleasant relations existing between his own and Major Mills' family in western New York, and during all these intervening years the acquaintance had been to him one of the most valued and intimate of his life. His congratulations were hearty and will long be remembered. A. L. Millard, Esq. and Dr. G. W. Greene, of Ann Arbor, made brief, pleasant addresses, after which "Auld Lang Syne" was sung. Remarks were made by different members of the family, to which the father feelingly responded. An invitation was extended to all to be present at the diamond wedding. A prayer of sweet benediction offered by Mr. Little, and we bade Mr. and Mrs. Mills good night, with the earnest wish that the years of their future might be blessed with truest happiness, and many more wedding anniversaries.

THE VREELAND-RIKARD CASE

On the assembling of the circuit court Monday morning Vreeland was brought in for sentence. He was quite composed when arraigned and asked by the judge if he had anything to say why sentence should not be passed on him. He became agitated however, when he attempted to speak. He said: "I have not, your honor, denied or tried to cover up anything in this case. I was compelled to do what I did to defend my own life. In the way I took his, God knows I did not intend to kill him, Rikard." All I can say as to that, I ask the mercy of the court to rest on my wife and child."

The court in passing said he had a due consideration for all the circumstances in the case; the prisoner was a young man with a wife and child and not much means. The evidence, however, showed that he went back to engage in the contest with Rikard. The jury had recommended that mercy be extended and the court felt inclined to be as lenient as possible, although the jury were well warranted in bringing in the verdict they did. He then sentenced Vreeland to four years at hard labor at Jackson.

OTHER SENTENCES

John Lewis, William Parker (commonly called "skinny") and Charles Humphrey, for burglary, were arraigned for sentence. The first two received sentence of six years each at hard labor in the state prison.—Humphrey, however, being adjudged the ring-leader of the gang of crooks that for months has invaded people's houses at all hours of the day and night, had a lean-to of four years added to his term and goes up for ten years. Humphrey had served a three year sentence in the penitentiary and had been at large something over a year.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Prudence Snedicor, wife of Philetus and mother of Wm. N. Snedicor died at her residence in Tecumseh at 7 o'clock Sept. 11th 1884, aged 68 years 1 month and 20 days.

Mrs. Snedicor was born in Orange Co. N. Y. where she lived until after she was married when she moved to Michigan where she has since resided. Her health has been poorly for a number of years but through all of her sufferings she always had great sympathy for those who were afflicted. She will be greatly missed by her husband and children, whom she dearly loved.

DIED.

BOYCE.—At Tecumseh, Michigan, on the morning of Sept. 10th 1884, Minnie C. Boyce, sole remaining child of Mr. Isaac Boyce, deceased and Mrs. Clara Boyce, aged 19.

After months of illness patiently borne this dear child was taken gently to her rest. She had planned to engage in her favorite occupation of teaching and to be a companion and helper of her mother. But God ordered otherwise and in his different plans she came to acquiesce. "What we know not, now we shall know hereafter."

THE SUBSTITUTE.

"Should you find yourself at leisure,
You will give us so much pleasure"
(Why do people write in measure?)
"If you'll dine with us at eight.
We have asked Pauline Clancarty
And the poet, James Cromarty,
But it's only a small party,
And you mustn't, please, be late."

Thus ran Mrs. Jones' letter;
And, as I'm the lady's debtor,
On the whole, I thought it better
To accept than to decline;
And, besides, the invitation
Seemed to mean appreciation
Of my latest publication
In the literary line.

She, of course, had read my story,
"The O'Tooles of Castle Rory,"
And she coveted the glory
Of exhibiting my phiz.
She was, doubtless, full of rapture
At the prospect of my capture—
'Tis so easy to adapt your
Hopes to anything that is.

Mrs. Jones arose serenely,
And, with manner calm and queenly,
Welcomed me, but whispered, meanly:
"Thank you so much, Mr. Brown.
You have saved us worlds of worry;
We expect Lord McCurry,
And we asked you in a hurry,
As our friend was out of town."

A HUGE CHARNEL HOUSE.

A Prehistoric Cemetery Discovered in the Ohio Bottoms—Thousands of Bodies Side by Side—Relics of an Extinct Race.

It was a hot day, a very hot day, that your correspondent lay on the broad of his back upon the bank of the Ohio, about a mile and a half below the little hamlet of Rome, or about eight miles below Vanceburg, Ky., on the opposite side of the river. The dense shade of a friendly tree protected me from the fierce rays of the sun, and rendered it possible to cogitate upon the mutability of all things earthly, without confining my reflections exclusively to the apparently melting condition of my too "solid flesh."

Folded carefully up in a piece of paper by my side I had some souvenirs of the past (but of how remote a past I had no more of an idea than an intelligent gorilla) which served to confine my thoughts within the gloomy precincts of those clay tenements the sexton builds, and to the final scene in the serio-comic drama of human life. These souvenirs, however, were very mutable things themselves. That one of them had once been a portion of a human jaw, within whose limits a tongue had once wagged and voiced the war-cries, the rejoicings and lamentations of his people, and that another had once been the part of a human arm, that perchance had wielded a warlike weapon in their defense, there could be no question. But they had no more cohesion than so many lumps of sand and with every touch crumbled into dust. It was to approve some wonderful statements of my casual acquaintance, Mr. James Hiner, of Vanceburg, Ky., that I had trespassed upon the territory of Mr. Robert E. Lockhart, and having found these relics of a departed and forgotten race everywhere about me, mingled with the earth, I had certainly food enough for "reflection melancholic." Bryant's Thanatopsis served to garnish my thoughts with better phrases than I could muster. The opinion had always prevailed with me that when the author describes the living as "but a handful to the tribes that slumber" on earth's bosom, and intimates that even if we should make our graves in the wilderness of Washington Territory "where flows the Oregon," we should lie down with the kings and princes of the earth, the statement should only be received as a sort of poetical guess. But with all these crumbling bones about me I felt inclined to believe that Mr. Bryant is literally correct. "Yes, it makes little difference where we're planted, we shall have plenty of company," I remarked to Mr. Hiner. "But it would undoubtedly make a difference," replied my companion; "a big difference. If you should happen to be planted for your long sleep just beneath where you lie, you would be wofully astonished when Gabriel blows his trumpet at the size and character of the crowd that will pop up in spirit or form out of this ground. I know to a dead certainty that they will be counted by thousands."

"Of course I am prepared to accept your opinion without comment, but the facts on which it is based would render it more satisfactory."

"My statement," replied my companion, "is easily demonstrated, if you are inclined to leave the shade long enough to investigate; or, which is perhaps, better, for I find it rather uncomfortably warm in the sun. I will sit here first and describe, as they say, the lay of the land. To begin, then, this is the Ohio bottom, and therefore a sandy formation made in ages past by the river. From beyond the line of that fence yonder you can see that it gradually slopes toward the water. Had the land been quite level, and had the river not been eating its way during many years into this bottom, gradually shelving off the bank, I should not be able to make the statement, which is beyond the shadow of doubt, that we now stand over a portion of a vast charnel-house, where lie the remains of thousand of human beings. It is the custom among farmers in plowing such sloping light land to throw the furrows to the lower side to prevent washing. This portion has been kept in cultivation a great many years in that manner. Year by year, however, it has washed off all the same. It was several years ago that Mr. Lockhart noticed that on every occasion when he plowed the ground the plowshare turned up what looked like fragments of bones. A closer examination of various specimens rendered it certain that they were human remains. When exposed to the air, however, they soon crumbled into fragments, and are seen no more until the next season's plowing turns up another installment, so that now you can follow the plow and gather basketfuls of these fragments. But those remains are not confined to this sloping bit of land. It is true that the plow doesn't turn up fragments on the higher ground there; but Mr. Lockhart built that fence which incloses it, and, on digging the post-holes, he informs me that his spade turned out these fragments from all of them. Now measure the inclosed space and the slope down to the river. There are not less than eight acres, and from my own personal observation I am satisfied that the bottom has lost off its front into the river not less than four acres, so that it may safely be said that this charnel house over which we stand covered not less than ten or twelve acres. But you will say that although the fragments are over the whole space and numerous, still it may not be an absolute certainty; first, that they are human relics, and second, that they may be numbered by thousands. Fortunately the shelving of the bank settles both these questions at once. Satisfactorily for them they lie in full form and figure in the beds made for them by those who buried them. I don't mean that you can see there well-preserved skeletons. They have lain too long for that but there they are in form and contour, lying side by side, and head to heel, packed in mussel shells, just as they are seen lying closely packed in the shelving bank. I have no doubt they have been laid all over the ground you see, for that alone will account for their being turned up everywhere by the plow, or wherever a spade is thrust in. Now consider, sir, ten acres paved with human bodies, and if you are orthodox enough in your belief regarding a future resurrection, judge whether I exaggerated when I said that the awakening trumpet would marshal you forth in company with thousands of strange companions. No, sir! If I were altogether orthodox and lived in that house, I should not provide such a source of astonishment for any of my race by burying them on the ground."

Your correspondent found Mr. Hiner to be a very truthful and conservative man, and could not avoid being impressed with the conviction that this plot of ground must prove interesting to antiquarians.

"Well, Mr. Hiner, you have apparently given considerable thought to these evidences of a prehistoric race. Have you any theories in regard to it?"

"Why, yes. I have given some thought to it. I have one of its rings with its center mound on my place opposite Vanceburg. Of course we can have nothing but guesses with which to answer the questions when this race came into the valleys of our great rivers, how long it remained, and when it became extinct. However, the more I have seen of these ancient mementoes and relics of the race the more thoroughly have I become confirmed in the opinion that these valleys were once quite densely populated by it. With all their differences, there is a sameness in the histories of all primitive peoples. Among all of them has not the circle been associated with friendly rivalries, feats of daring or agility, or religious ceremonies, or all combined? If they were devoted to religious ceremonies, it was upon the mounds that all could observe them; if of contests of strength or agility, or other exercises, it was from the mounds that those in authority must judge them. The testimony of history is that these circles indicate at least a semi-civilized social state, that had established periodical festivities and ceremonies, religious or otherwise. The universality of these mounds and circles indicate the same observances everywhere, and the unity of the race, while their dimensions would imply that they were designed for the accommodation of large crowds of people. I know of but one of them, that below Portsmouth, O., on the higher ground, built of stone. It looks more like a defensive work than any other, but I do not consider that their prime object. The magnitude of these works—some of them, at least—raises the farther presumption that they were not a nomadic race, and that if they built these they also constructed habitations for themselves in some analogous manner—that is, of earth. Villages, towns and even pretentious cities, such as now exist even in civilized countries, may have been scattered all over these valleys, constructed of materials of which not a vestige could be expected to remain. If these valleys were peopled by such numbers as I believe, of course, neither river nor forest would supply them with food, and a cultivation of the soil must be presumed. I know of but one ear of corn taken from a mound. It was thoroughly carbonized, which accounts for its preservation. That one ear demonstrates agricultural pursuits as well as a thousand. The old Antiquarian Society, whose work I have, was so impressed with Biblical history that it was bound to make out this race to be the descendants of the lost tribes of Israel, and persisted in bringing them here by the way of Behring's Straits. I most potently believed that they came the other way, swarming up the Ohio and Mississippi from the Gulf, perhaps the result of some social revolution among the populations of Mexico. When they came, how long they remained, and how they became extinct, whether by famine, pestilence or war, or why they swarmed southward again, if such be the fact, there is nothing on which to hinge even a guess. What was this? Was it a burial ground for a very large community, or were these the victims of some terrible slaughter in battle? What ceremonial of burial demanded such vast numbers of mussel shells, or did the sharp edges and smooth, hard surface of these prevent wild beasts from unearthing them? These have evidently been laid upon a common level and covered with earth. I suspect they were only fragments of the race who were honored with burial in the mounds. Now, you have the substance of my reflections upon this prehistoric race," concluded Mr. Hiner.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

A Handsome Hint.

"You are not at all like Prince Bismarck," said a Brooklyn girl to her bashful sweetheart who timidly pressed her hand at parting, last evening.

With a puzzled look the young man replied:

"No; I—I should hope not. That is, I think so. I—I really don't know what you mean."

"Oh, I don't mean anything," said the maiden, with a pert toss of her head; "only I read the other day that the Prince always kisses a lady's hand when he buds her adieu."

Crossing Swine.

The subject is one that will bear a few thoughts upon general principles. Of course there can be no objection to any one experimenting in the crossing of swine, if he is so disposed and is willing to take results as they come. But, except as an experiment, without entertaining any very definite ideas as to what will result, we should not advise a swine breeder who has had no experience in this line, to indulge in it. There has been a great deal of care exercised in creating our present breeds of swine, and it is pretty doubtful if it is worth while to even attempt to get anything better. The admirer of either of the breeds would of course, be quick to say that his was the best breed. That is very natural. But the Rural does not think that there is sufficient difference between the most common breeds in aggregate merits to make it important to decide which is the best. Personally, we have always bred Poland-China, and are satisfied with them. But we do not say that they are any better than Berkshire. We have become accustomed to Poland-Chinas, and keeping them is sort of a habit. The Berkshire is a grand good hog, and no man will ever regret investing in the breed. And we are inclined to think that the Jersey Red had better be kept pure, if it is kept at all. We have never had any prejudice against Jersey Reds, except as to their color, and that is only a matter of taste, and ought not to weigh anything as against a really good hog. In fact, we have rather admired the build of the hog, as we have seen it at the fairs, and have been favorably impressed with its merits as they have been described by those who are familiar with them. We have never had the least sympathy with the tirades which have been launched against this breed from some quarters. It has been attempted to be proved that they are no breed at all, but facts have not warranted anybody in taking that position. They transmit their characteristics, so far as we are informed, with as much certainty as either the Berkshire, Poland-China or any other breed does; and that constitutes them a breed. It makes no difference what their origin was, and discussion upon that point is time thrown away. There is the hog, with certain characteristics, which it transmits, and its origin is not of the slightest moment, if we like the hog or do not like it.

It has been said by those who are too enthusiastic in their admiration of other breeds that the Jersey Red is in the direction of primitive swine-breeding and means that those who breed them are going backward instead of forward. The hog itself answers that assertion. Its fine appearance, large size and generally commendable characteristics—as described by its breeders and not generally denied—are all against such a position. In New Jersey, where they have been bred for years, they are satisfactory, and if those who breed them are to be believed, a very profitable hog. Last winter, it will be remembered, we published the weights of individual animals in large herds, and they ranged from about seven hundred to one thousand pounds, if we remember rightly. The herd was a very large one, too. We ourselves, have seen a pen of ten Jersey Reds that weighed about ten thousand pounds in the aggregate. Now, here is the pork, and pork is what we are after. The only question is, what does it cost to produce it, and if it is of good quality? Of course a hog weighing one thousand pounds may not be as profitable as one that weighs, much less, and the pork may not be near as good. Neither of these questions applied to the Jersey Red are we capable of answering. But their breeders, who are reputable men as far as we know, do answer them favorable to the breed; and we know of no reason why their evidence should not be taken; unless it is contradicted by something better than mere theory. If we were breeding Jersey Reds, and they proved to be as satisfactory as they are represented as being, we should never think of crossing them; and if they were not satisfactory we sould not bother with crossing, while there are other good breeds so readily to be had. And we certainly should keep either the Poland-China or Berkshire pure. Still, as we have said before, if a swine-breeder desires to see what he can do, go ahead with the crossing. But we seriously doubt if any gain would be made. We have always opposed, as the reader knows, the crossing of pure bred sheep. We do not believe in it. In this case the object is usually to increase the size of the Merino. Our position is that when the Merino is brought to the largest possible size by careful selection all has been done that profitably can be done in that direction, for we cannot afford to increase the size at the cost of the fleece. It is different, of course, with swine, but still we believe it is best to keep the breeds pure.—Western Rural.

The Advantages of Intelligent Poverty.

A successful business man says that the children of home missionaries, and of poorly supported preachers, have better advantages than the children of wealth, and that observant employers know it. They have the advantage of the closest intimacy with a man of education and culture, their father, and with a mother who is his equal, for all practical purposes, in these accomplishments. They are led into the best society of the neighborhood where they live. In these advantages they are not second to the children of wealthy parents. With these they have the great advantage, which the others have not, of being trained in a family where the practice of economy and the cultivation of habits of industry are indispensable. They learn the value of industry by experience, and estimate money by what it costs. It is a fact, our informant tells us, that such young men and young women do find readier access into the avenues of promotion, and beat those who are apparently more favored, in the race in life. Every man or woman, who is a parent, soon ceases to toil for self and works for the children. But money will not give the benefits obtained by the children of educated and pious parents in very moderate circumstances. Such parents already have for their children that which money not only cannot purchase, but that which it pushes out of reach.—Chicago Interior.

The Hart Argus has changed hands. Edgar Palmiter, of Grand Rapids, takes the editorship, and the paper will be the organ of the prohibition party in the future.

Try Ayer's Pills, and be cured. Misery is a mild word to describe the misechief to body and mind caused by habitual constipation. The regular use of Ayer's Cathartic Pills, in mild doses will restore the torpid viscera to healthy action.

D. A. Starkweather, foreman of the Slaight mill, two miles north of Stanton, was killed by the mill machinery. He leaves a wife and two children.

Eward Crawford, of Ithica, is the latest roller skating rink victim. He broke an arm.

The prevailing opinion regarding the girl of the period is unjust. A few decades back she spun, wove, knit, &c. These things have given way to modern machinery. She has higher planes, is more of an ornament; when in health is beautiful. She takes Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic, which clears the complection, drives away pimples and cures all diseases of the stomach, liver, and kidneys. Fifty cents of Baker & Hall.

The St. Clair council is still considering the question of waterworks. The plan of drawing from the Oakland hotel tanks does not seem likely to be adopted.

The Terrible Drain

Which scrofula has upon the system must be arrested, and the blood must be purified, or serious consequences will ensue. For purifying and vitalizing effects, Hood's Sarsaparilla has been found superior to any other preparation. It expels every trace of impurity from the blood, and bestows new life and vigor upon every function of the body, enabling it to entirely overcome disease.

Beecher's Bad Head.

For two months in the year Henry Ward Beecher can't preach. In August and September he takes his vacation and endures the onset of the hay fever. A man with hay fever isn't accountable for his actions. He is frantic with sneezing and headache. Every nerve in his skull thrills with distress, and his head is a fountain of tears. He lives only to fly from seaside to mountain too in search of relief. This form of catarrh (hay fever) Ely's Cream Balm will cure. Placed in the nostrils it penetrates and soothes the affected parts at once, restores the impaired senses and creates healthy secretions. You cannot run away from hay fever, but you can drive it from you by using Ely's Cream Balm.

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS

The reputation of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as a preventive of epidemics, a stomachic, an invigorant, a general restorative and a specific for fever and ague, indigestion, bilious affections, rheumatism, nervous debility, constitutional weakness, is established upon the sound basis of more than twenty years' experience, and can no more be shaken by the clap trap nostrums of unscrupulous pretenders, than the everlasting hills by the winds that rustle through their deifies. For sale by druggists and dealers generally.

DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY

For the Cure of Kidney and Liver Complaints, Constipation, and all disorders arising from an impure state of the BLOOD.

To women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to their sex it is an unfailing friend. All Druggists. One Dollar a bottle, or address Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

A CURE FOR GRAVEL.

A Common and Painful Complaint—A Statement you may Confide in

It seems to have been reserved for Dr David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., to accomplish, through his preparation widely known as KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, what others have failed to compass. The subjoined letter will be found of vital interest to sufferers from gravel and to the general public:

ALBANY, March 20, 1884.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—Let me tell you frankly that I have never been partial to proprietary medicines, as I believe the majority of them to be, nothing better than obtaining money from people whom suffering makes ready to catch at any hope of relief. They are mean cheats and delusions. But your Favorite Remedy I know by happy experience to be a totally different thing. I had been a sufferer from gravel for years, and had resorted to many eminent physicians for relief, but no permanent good came of it. About three years ago your Favorite Remedy was recommended to me. I can give you the result in a sentence: I tried it and it cured me completely. I am confident it saved my life. You can use this letter if you think best. Yours, etc.,

NATHAN ACKLEY,

Captain Nathan Ackley was for a long time connected with the Canal Appraisers office in Albany. He is well known and writes for no purpose but to do good to others.

As a medicine for all diseases of the blood, liver, kidneys and digestive organs, Kennedy's Favorite Remedy has fairly won its high reputation. Write if desirable to Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

ESTATE OF JOHN F. SCHREDER.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee, ss

At a session of the Probate Court for the county of Lenawee, holden at the Probate Office in the city of Adrian, on Wednesday the 17th day of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four.

Present, Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of John F. Schreder, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Israel H Schreder and William H Arner, executors of the last will and testament of said deceased, alleging that they have paid the debts of said deceased, the expenses of administration of said estate and the specific legacies bequeathed in and by said will, and praying for the allowance of their final account, for an assignment of the residue of said estate to the persons entitled thereto and for their discharge.

Thereupon it is ordered, That Monday, the 13th day of October next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, and show cause if any there be, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County of Lenawee, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

NORMAN GEDDES, Judge of Probate.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

RIDGEWAY RACKET.

Miss Lena Smith was the guest of Miss Belle Barlow Sunday.

Mrs. Wm. Riggs is visiting at Saline this week.

Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Palmer of Hillsdale, made their relatives a visit Saturday and Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Burlingame of Tecumseh, called on friends Friday afternoon.

Mr. Geo. Exelby and Mrs. C. B. Sutton are very sick at present.

Mrs. R. T. Bush and Miss Ella Hall of Brooklyn, N. Y. arrived Saturday noon and will make their mother, Mrs. L Hall, a visit.

Choir school Saturday night.

The earthquake last Friday afternoon was felt very distinctly.

Dr. R. H. Nelson and family and Misses Mary and Kittie Clark, visited friends at Raisinville, Monroe Co., Friday and Saturday.

Quite a good attendance at the social Friday night, and all enjoyed themselves eating melons and snapping seeds. Receipts $6,00.

Mrs. Emeline Smith left last week Wednesday to visit friends in Clinton county.

Mr. Willie Allen spent the Sabbath at Jerome with his brother Frank.

Miss Lynda Ransom is home for a few days.

Mr. C. A. Sharp spent the Sabbath with his parents.

Mr. Wm. Pilbeam is getting the material on the ground for a new house. So groweth our city.

Rumor has it that Milan is to have a $10,000 Opera House and that they have a graded school with Eugene Gregory as Supt. and Miss Allie McNeill second primary teacher. They employ 4 teachers and have 160 students.

The M. & O. company have built a convenience for unloading grain and put in a set of scales, and enlarged the stock yards.

Prohibition meeting at Joseph Exelby's new store at Britton next Friday evening, addressed by Prof. E. G. Walker, candidate for Judge of Probate, and Geo Humphrey, candidate for legislature, and A. O. Crosier.

The junior scholars of Miss Belle Barlow's music class enjoyed a very pleasant afternoon at Miss Barlow's Saturday. After a few hours of amusement ice cream, candy and cake were served. She has a class of 11 scholars. She will resume her study in music with Prof. Rupp of Adrian, this week.

MACON MUSIC.

Mrs. Dr. Chambers of Ft. Wayne, Ind., is visiting relatives in Macon.

Judge Howell and his son Beecher, visited relatives in Macon last week.

Jo Sage and John Cary are making improvements on their lot by repairing buildings, etc. A good idea.

A few Maconites enjoyed the beautiful scenery of Sand Lake last Saturday. They reported everything pleasant except the dust.

We reported in our last items that Miss Hattie Smith had been engaged as assistant teacher in our school. It seems that she was employed only until another teacher could be secured. As the Board has hired an assistant, Miss Smith retired after having taught one week. If Miss Smith could have been persuaded to remain in the school she would have done excellent work.

The representative district convention, held in Tecumseh last Tuesday, renominated Hon. Geo. Howell, of Macon. He was one of the most efficient members of the last legislature, and consequently he justly deserved renomination.

HOLLOWAY HICKUPS.

Verne Hoxie is improving.

Farmers are getting their winter supply of coal; several car loads have arrived.

Mrs. Weeks and Mrs Ramsdell of Hanover, are visiting their sister Mrs. Dr. Begel.

W. J. Holdridge and wife are visiting friends at Williamston.

Conrad Atwell and wife have gone over to Rollin to see about things.

Picnic at Friends Church last Saturday and pleasant time reported.

Geo. Soper moved to Tecumseh last Tuesday. Good bye, George.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Friday was observed as family jar day, and most everybody thought their neighbors in a muss. There was a movement below, indicating removal of props, and some of the nervous ran out doors looking as if they expected every moment to be their next. Opinion is divided as to whether it was an earthquake, the republican party stumbling over Blaine's amendment vote, or that gentleman's tumble to his party's twenty year's temperance racket. If the first, a platform should be built wide enough to cover unexpected opening right away; and if the other, it bodes no good to those who have salamed to whisky, curtisied to prohibition, and winked at a system of make-shift expediency, that comes the pearest to remission of sins, of anything ever made into a dissolving view and fitted to the bottom of a bottle.

Its all on account of overproduction of schemes to enrich a few and send the rest to Texas that this great triumph of art has been framed in glass; yet, some very good men point proudly to their record of republican votes. They began voting for men and methods, representing justice to all, and on the principle of once right always right, have kept right on. If the HERALD was a prohibition paper one could ask what analogy exists between prohibiting a man from selling black men's children at auction and selling men the right to entice his own into slavish habits; but as its columns are only open to topics of general interest, I'll skip the query and ask instead, why all the boys and girls in their town are only valued at three hundred dollars for the lump, and one bright, active, colored boy sold for four times as much in those good old days of patriotism? It was republicanism pure and unsullied, that prohibited black slavery, and it is republicanism adulterated with everything but purity that impels men to sell others the right to demoralize their own children. They may plead mother's influence as a counter-actant of temptation, but the task of hedging her family from the crafts and assaults of the combination is disportionate to the much vaunted weakness of woman, especially if the father by vote and example, makes home sacredness depend on marketing grain at distilleries. They are liable to quakes.

Now that I think of it, why is wheat but seventy-two cents per bushel and hoarded in bins, and beer and whisky firm at five and ten cents a glass, with limited sale of the first, and unlimited demand and supply of the last without danger of overproduction? Perhaps farmers can solve the puzzle, for incompatibility of prices vex them as much as political creeds do editors, only the latter are less color blind. A few months ago leading journals spoke with authority against sumptuary laws that interfered with men's personal liberty, and one even advocated children's voting for beer or no beer, subject to the dictation of parents. Now it modulates personal liberty to drowning one's self, and discourages all attempts at leaving an open hole in the water. PEARLIE.

ONSTED ODDS.

C. E. Marshall has improved the looks of his blacksmith shop by covering it with new siding. He expects to have it painted in a few days.

Wilson Lee, of Eagle, Clinton county, has purchased a lot of J. E. Gibbs and will soon erect a building to be used for a boot and shoe store.

Onsted's base ball players will go to Springville next Saturday to play with the Springville boys. We wish them good success.

James Braynard is painting M. P. Wemple's house and the grain elevator. He also has the job of repainting the church.

Mrs. Vorhees, who was visiting at her daughter's, Mrs. E. Harris, fell downstairs, breaking a shoulder bone, last Sunday morning.

A. O. Crozier, of Ann Arbor, spoke at Springville last Monday afternoon on the subject of prohibition. After the speaking a Prohibition club was organized with fifteen voters and nine ladies.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

Our usual quiet town was thrown into a feverish excitement on Friday aftornoon last by an earthquake which for a few moments, frightened quite a considerable number of our quiet citizens. The shock was felt preceptably at several places in town, and especially at the school hall, where the building rocked too and fro, but no harm was done to the building and all was quiet in a short time, and next day all was forgotten. We noticed on the corner, the next day, some parties who seemed to be looking for a suitable place to erect a pole, and when asked what kind of a pole they were going to raise, they seemed to incline to secrecy on the subject, so we concluded that Belva Ann had a party here, but on Tuesday last we noticed they had changed the base of their operations and that they would raise the pole near the Town Hall, and when raised it would float the names of Blaine and Logan.

Frank Brown's tinner has arrived and has gone to work with a will that shows he understands his business and is willing to work. Frank says bring along your work and try him; would also be glad of any jobs of troughing and spouting that may be offered to him.

Mr. Freese has now commenced to demolish the inside of his store preparatory to modernizing the same. May he receive the patronage due so good a merchant as Mr. Freese.

Saxton & Swift have commenced buying apples and are now ready to receive and pay for all the marketable apples they can get. So bring along your apples and get your money.

Hause Bros. are now making cider and are prepared to make more and better cider than ever before. We notice that as Prohibition flourishes cider increases.

We noticed on our streets to-day the genial face of J. M. Kerridge, our Methodist minister, who has returned to Clinton to stay another year. A worthy man and may he be successful in his labors here.

Wednesday afternoon, the pole-raising. The pole itself is a nice, smooth Tamarack, and we understand it measures 135 feet in length. The rain began to fall about the time they got ready to raise, which cooled the enthusiasm of some of the political heros and hindered operations somewhat, but with commendable pluck of the people who had set about doing the business with a will, the pole was raised in good shape, without accident, and now floats a nice large flag bearing the inscription of Blaine and Logan. The pole up in the fore part of the evening, the band discoursed some good music, after which Capt. Allen proceeded to make his speech, and to eulogize the Republican party and the candidates for office, all of which was greedily devowered by the Republicans. Their energy and cheek deserves success.

The Clinton High School Literary Society held its first regular meeting last Friday evening. There was a good attendance and the following program was presented:

Inaugural address—Prof. I. B. Laflin.
Oration—Mr. Geo. McConnell.
Essay—Miss Sinclair.
Recitation—Miss Agnes Kirk.

The meetings of the Literary will be held on Friday evening of each week.

SPRINGVILLE SNUFF.

Cider mill is ready for business.

Brick yard will not be started as reported last week on account of inability to procure clay.

Dr. and C. L. Vaughn are entertaining their brother from York State this week.

We quite often hear the remark that our county fair should have been two or three weeks ago, and prevented the drought.

The St. John and Daniel meeting held at Ayres' hall last Monday at 2 P. M. was quite well attended and those that came felt well repaid for the trouble.

The next political speech will be delivered by L. H. Salsbury and Col. Eldridge at 2 P. M. next Saturday.

At about 10 A. M. Tuesday morning last, Mr. Robert Dowling, an aged and respected pioneer of this township died with old age. Deceased had outlived his alloted time by ten years, his 80th birthday being last March.

REPUBLICAN DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The Republican convention for the first district assembled at the Opera House in Tecumseh last Tuesday.

It was called to order by C. T. Crandall, on whose motion Hon. A. D. Gilmore was elected chairman. Willis Hood was chosen Secretary.

Committees on Credentials and permanent organization were appointed, and soon after reported. Their reports were accepted. The temporary officers were made permanent.

On motion of A. W. Mills the convention proceeded to the nomination of a candidate for representative. N. L. Pratt and W. W. Frasier were appointed tellers. An informal ballot was taken with the following result.

George Howell—38.
Thomas Macomb—18.

A formal ballot was then taken with this result.

George Howell—42.
Thomas Macomb—10.

The Chair then appointed a district committee of one from each township.

Clinton—J. W. Burchard.
Tecumseh—A. W. Mills.
Macon—M. S. Morden.
Ridgeway—J. F. Temple.
Raisin—Nathan Spencer.
Palmyra—E. Stafford.
Deerfield—Willis Hood.
Blissfield—Geo. R. Carpenter.
Ogden—H. F. Fuller.
Riga—T. G. Chandler.

The nominee, Dr. George Howell, was then introduced who made a few remarks thanking the delegates for the honor conferred upon him, after which the convention adjourned.

VIRTUE ITS OWN REWARD.

The King of Somewhere loved the Queen
Of Somewhereelse most dearly,
And in his courtier Gobetween
Confided he sincerely.

The courtier was a pleasant man,
Of readiest invention,
And always had some clever plan
To hold the king's attention.

The Queen was coy and hard to please,
As best beseemed her station;
The King upon his bended knees
Must kept in supplication.

No favoring answer would she give,
No smile of sad consenting;
And while the King was fain to live,
Yet life was all lamenting.

At last he prayed his Courtier wise
To aid in his proceeding;
The Courtier's ready wife devise
Plans worthy of his breeding.

He hastened to the haughty Queen,
And praised his Royal Highness;
So wily was this Gobetween,
He chuckled o'er his shyness.

The Queen was softened by his art,
And when her suitor tendered
His royal kingdom (and his heart),
She graciously surrendered.

The King and Queen lived happily,
In hand and heart were wedded;
As for the Courtier—let me see—
Oh, yes—he was beheaded.

MRS. TOM HARDING.

One of the Season's Nantucket Idyls.

The out-bound steamer from New Bedford, stopping at Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket, swept gayly out of the harbor. Two young women in simple traveling costume sat on the deck and looked down on the many-shaded green waters below—Miss Morgan and Miss Ford. The latter was tall, dignified and blonde, and three years the senior of the petite, dark-eyed friend at her side. It was she who spoke, with just a trifle of annoyance in her voice:

"It's too absurd, Amy. You can never carry out such a plan; you will get into all kinds of scrapes and tell so many fibs."

Miss Morgan, coolly—"What are fibs in a good cause, my dear? You will see it will be the simplest thing in the world, and I do so want to see life from a married stand-point."

Miss Ford—"Then why didn't you marry? I'm sure there was Harry Thorndyke—"

Miss Morgan, with fierceness—"Bel, if you ever allude to that again—"

"I won't, dear," said her friend, soothingly, "but since you didn't marry I can't see why—"

"That's just it," answered Miss Morgan, eagerly; "if I had married I should wish to appear single. Come, Bel, I'll chaperone you beautifully. Let me have my own way, won't you, dear?"

Miss Ford, with resignation—"When do you not have your own way, Amy? But you'll repent it, and I shan't have one moment's peace."

"Repent it? Never! Now for a name. Mrs—Mrs— What is my husband's name, Bel?"

"I decline all acquaintance with myths."

Miss Morgan, after some thought—"I have it now Bel, dear, let me present you to Mrs. Harding, Mrs. Tom Harding, of Nashville. Nashville is a good far-off place, you know."

Miss Ford tried to frown, but laughed instead and bowed. "Now, Mrs Harding," she said, "perhaps you will find time to look at this charming scenery," and they fell to talking of the beauty of the waves and the white-sailed vessels outlined against the distant horizon.

They sat slightly apart from the crowd of fellow-passengers, and, absorbed in their talk, did not note a single listener, who stole guiltily away as the steamer neared the Vineyard. The listener was a young man, tall and comely, with laughing blue eyes and fine, clear-cut features He wore a suit of well-fitting gray, and carried in his hand a traveling satchel neatly lettered "T. H." His face betokened a little perplexity and much amusement, as he sauntered to another part of the deck, and devoted himself to the pages of a Nantucket guide. He glanced now and then at the young women who had so unwittingly bestowed upon him their confidence, and, as he did so, he smiled.

They talked on in desultory fashion till the summer twilight fell, and the picturesque old town of Nantucket rose in sight. Miss Morgan sprang up from her chair, and, gathering her wrap around her in a careless though not ungraceful way, called her friend: "Come, Bel, I'm longing to begin my new life," and they threaded their way deftly through the crowd to the landing-place below. There they quickly got into a carriage and rolled away through the cobbled-paved streets, with the hoarse notes of the town-crier ringing in their ears. They looked about them eagerly, noting the quaint old houses, and the charming grass-grown streets.

"Oh, Bel," cried Amy, "I'm half sorry we came."

"Why, dear?" asked her friend.

"Because I shall never want to go away again."

They breakfasted gayly the next morning, bestowing but slight attention on their fellow-boarders. They had a map of the island spread out before them, and occasionally invoked the aid of the Nantucket waitress in making their plans for the day.

"There's the old mill, the old house, Surf-side and 'Sconset," said the young woman, conscientiously checking off the spots of interest on her fingers as she spoke, "and Wauwinet, and—"

"Oh, don't, please," interrupted Amy, "don't tell any more I am bewildered now. Bel, what do you say to a walk along shore this morning, and the old mill this afternoon?"

Her friend assented, and they rose from the table and went out in the hall.

"How delightfully free I feel," said Amy, as she stopped at the desk and began to turn over the pages of the register. "I told everybody not to write to me, and I shall write to no one."

She scanned page after page without comment till her eyes rested on the one where she had inscribed her friend's name and her own the night before.

"Bel," she gasped, "look here!" and she turned to her friend a face of horrified surprise!

There were the names she had registered there the previous evening:

Mrs. Tom Harding, Nashville, Tenn.
Miss Isabel Ford, New York.

But beneath them was another in a bold and manly hand:

Tom Harding, Nashville, Tenn.

"How perfectly shocking! What shall I do?"

It was quite late in the afternoon when they climbed the stairs of the old mill, and they found the miller alone. He was an old sailor, brown and weather-beaten, with kindly dark eyes and queer little gold rings, sailor fashion, in his ears. He was a Portuguese, he told them, was born in the Azores, and had spent many years of his life upon the sea.

"Do you like America?" asked Bel.

"Yes, yes, I like it here, it's a big country, but I like better go home to the Azo'. My woman, she have her brother here, and so I stay."

"I hope you will go home some day," cried Amy, impulsively, putting out her hand.

"Oh, yes, I tink so, write you name in my book before you go?" and he proudly produced a register, the gift of some former visitor.

"You write, Amy," said Bel, and the old miller bent over her chair, as she entered:

Mrs. Tom Harding,
Miss Isabel Ford.

He looked at the names curiously a moment and said: "You husband here little while ago. You to meet him when you come?" and turning back to the page before, pointed out:

Tom Harding, Nashville, Tenn.

Amy crimsoned but said nothing.

"It is no you husband?" he persisted.

"Yes—no—I don't know," stammered Amy. "Come, Bel, we must go."

"I tink you catch him if you make haste," said the miller placidly.

They were a little late at supper that evening, and found the chair opposite their own, on whose emptiness they had congratulated themselves in the morning, filled. The occupant was a tall young man with genial blue eyes and clear-cut features. Formalities are blown away in sea breezes, and when he had passed the butter and the cold meat, and Bel had responded with proffers of jelly, they began to converse quite as a matter of course. He said that he had been at Surfside in the morning and out rowing in the harbor later in the day. It was Bel who answered his remarks; Amy sat in silence, occasionally flashing dark eyes at the stranger, as if wishing to wrest from him his name and habitation.

"We were at the old mill this afternoon," she said, with a little abruptness as they were rising from the table.

"Indeed," he answered politely, "it is called an interesting old place, I believe," and poor Amy felt that her remark had been made in vain.

"I'd give anything if I hadn't begun it," she admitted to her friend as they mounted the stairs to their own room; "but I'll carry it out to the end now," she added, defiantly. "If I only knew who that dreadful Tom Harding was!"

Two or three days glided by in uneventful comfort. Mrs. Harding, nee Morgan, and Miss Ford loitered about the queer old streets and whiled away pleasant hours in the bric-a-brac shops. It was in one of those that they heard of a museum kept by a sea-Captain's widow, and decided to visit it. The afternoon was rainy and they found the little room well filled.

"Come right in, young women," said a hospitable voice as they passed in the door. "Young man, hand those women some chairs."

They were seated, and after a moment's pause the lecture went on.

"Barnacles from a ship's bottom," said the lecturer, displaying some specimens as she spoke, "of which they form themselves on the ship's bottom and prevent it from sailing."

Amy stifled a laugh behind her fan, and looking around to avoid meeting her friend's eyes, encountered those of the young man who sat opposite them at table. They exchanged a glance of sympathy and amusement

"This," said the widow, "is the head-dress of a chief's daughter worn at boat-racing, of which the materials are found in the palm-tree, and a very beautiful head-dress it is. Will thee put it on, my dear?" addressing Amy.

After a moment's hesitancy, Amy complied, and the curious structure proved not unbecoming to her glowing face and dark eyes.

"Behold thy face.
And think no disgrace," quoted the lecturer, offering a small hand-glass as she spoke.

When the exhibition was over, Amy and her friend lingered to ask a question or two, and were called upon to register their names.

"One would think everybody here kept an intelligence office," grumbled Amy, as she again wrote her friend's name and her own baleful title.

And she bade good bye to her hostess—a formality carefully observed by all visitors—the old lady detained her.

"Where does thee live, my dear?" she asked, looking kindly at the pretty young face.

"I am visiting in New York with my friend Miss Ford," answered Amy with an attempt to draw Bel into the conversation, but the young lady was intent on some ivory carvings, and turned a deaf ear to the appeal.

"Is thee a married woman?" next inquired the old lady.

Poor Amy looked up to find the eyes of the young man fixed upon her with decided interest.

"Yes, I think so," she said, confusedly, and was fain to get away.

"Has thee a good husband, my child?"—but the young man came to her rescue.

"Good-bye, madame," he said, holding out his hand. "I have enjoyed the afternoon greatly."

"I am glad thee has, friend, I like thy face. Come again and see me. What is thy name, so that I may remember thee?"

He cast a look of mingled deprecation and amusement at Amy's retreating figure and, answered distinctly: "Harding, Tom Harding, from Tennessee."

Amy did not appear at supper that night, and Miss Ford in answer to Mr. Harding's question said briefly that she was tired.

As they sat in their room that evening, they heard the twang of a guitar in the parlor below, and snatches of song sung in a fine baritone voice.

"Oh, we had such a treat last night, Mrs. Harding," said one of the ladies, meeting her on the stairs next morning, "your husband's singing is charming; we were so sorry you were too tired to join us."

"I haven't any husband," cried Amy, fiercely. "That is," she added, lamely, "he isn't here."

"Oh," said the lady, with a certain inflection. "We all thought from your having the same name, and coming from the same place, and eating at the same table, you know. It is odd, isn't it? Quite a coincidence! One of your husband's cousins, I suppose?" she added, insistently.

"My husband has no cousins," said Amy, and the lady passed on to confide to another guest that she thought "young Mrs. Harding was, to speak as mildly as possible, odd."

Amy said nothing to her friend of this encounter, but proposed a visit to Wauwinet and Coatue in search of shells. As they glided along over the blue waters in the yacht Lilian, she forgot for the nonce the troubles of matrimony and the inconvenient presence of Mr. Tom Harding from Tennessee. Coming home toward evening, they were met in the hall by the waitress who handed Miss Ford a card.

"He asked particularly if one of you ladies wasn't small, with big dark eyes and I told him yes, and then he asked if there wasn't a Miss Morgan here with Miss Ford, and I said, no, there wasn't, and he seemed real surprised when I said there wa'n't only you and Mrs. Harding as come together, and he said he'd call this evening, and he hoped he'd find you as he was going away to-morrow."

Having thus delivered her message, the girl went away, and left them alone. Bel held the card out silently to Amy. She took it mechanically from Miss Ford's hand, looked at it helplessly a moment, and then dropped it on the floor with a little gesture of despair. It bore on its smooth, white surface the inscription—"Harry Thorndyke, New York."

They ate supper in a pensive silence, broken now and then by a remark from Mr. Harding and a brief reply from Miss Ford.

The young man glanced now and then at Miss Ford's companion, but beheld nothing but downcast lashes for his pains.

"I shall be sick this evening, Bel," said Amy, decidedly, as they paused a moment in the parlor, "and you may tell Harry Thorndyke what you like."

"But he didn't come to see me, Amy," expostulated Miss Ford.

The woman who deliberates is lost. A tall figure darkened the door.

"Then you are here, after all, Miss Morgan," and Harry Thorndyke shook hands rapturously with poor Amy. "I never was so down in my life as when the girl said you weren't here with Miss Ford. I looked at the register myself, too, and couldn't find your name anywhere."

"Oh, Mrs. Harding," said an expansive voice, and a young lady came hurriedly into the room. "I beg your pardon," as she saw the young man, "but could you lend me a shawl, if you are not going out? No, don't come; I can get it myself."

The gladness died out of the young man's face. "What—what did she call you?" he stammered.

"Mrs. Harding," said Amy, sharply.

"Then you are married?" he said, last.

"Yes," said Amy.

Miss Ford started from her chair, and seemed about to speak.

"And the Mr. Harding whose name is in the register is your husband?"

"Yes," cried the girl, frantically, and the young man turned to go."

"I—I congratulate you," he said slowly, "but I shouldn't have come if I had known," and he went sadly away.

"Oh, Amy, what have you done?" cried Miss Ford.

"I don't know," and she turned toward her friend a face of such utter wretchedness that she forebore further speech.

"How could I do it when I love him so?"

As they left the dining-room the next morning, Amy turned suddenly and addressed Mr. Harding:

"I want to speak to you alone, please. Will you take me for a little walk?"

The young man assented, and they walked almost in silence to the top of the hill that overlooks the harbor. Once there, Amy turned and faced him.

"Mr. Harding, I don't know what you will think of me, but I am the most wretched girl in the world. When I was coming here I made a little plan—"

"Will it make it any easier if I tell you that I know—"

"You know—?"

"Yes, I couldn't help hearing you on the boat," he explained, hastily, "and when I found you had fixed on my name, I was amused, and—"

"Yes, I see—but last night he came here, and somebody called me Mrs. Harding, and he asked me if I was married, and I said yes, and he asked if you were my husband, and I said you were, and"—here her voice broke into irrepressible sobs—"he's gone away, and I shall never see him again."

"Shall I go and bring him back?" asked the young man, helplessly, looking down on her bowed head and quivering form.

"Oh, yes, do," she cried, "tell him I didn't marry you—that I wouldn't marry you for anything—"

"If you will tell me his name," said the young man, a trifle grimly, "I will try and make that fact clear to his mind."

"His name is Thorndyke, Harry Thorndyke, and he's going away to-day—"

"Thorndyke, a broad-shouldered young fellow with gray eyes?"

"Yes, that's him," cried Amy, with charming disregard of grammar.

"Can you wait here a little while?" and before she could answer, he was off, going down the hill with light, springy tread.

She stood where he had left her, looking out toward the sea.

An hour later a hand was laid caressingly on hers, and she turned to meet Harry Thorndyke's honest eyes.

"So you are not Mrs. Tom Harding after all?" he said.—Mary Lyle, in Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

WARREN LELAND,

whom everybody knows as the successful manager of the Largest Hotel Enterprises

of America, says that while a passenger from New York on board a ship going around Cape Horn, in the early days of emigration to California, he learned that one of the officers of the vessel had cured himself, during the voyage, of an obstinate disease by the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Since then Mr. LELAND has recommended AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failure to effect a radical cure.

Some years ago one of Mr. LELAND'S farm laborers bruised his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, an ugly scrofulous swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible itching of the skin, with burning and darting pains through the lump, made life almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. LELAND'S direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to use.

Mr. LELAND has personally used

for Rheumatism, with entire success; and, after careful observation, declares that, in his belief, there is no medicine in the world equal to it for the cure of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of high living, Salt Rheum, Sores, Eruptions, and all the various forms of blood diseases.

We have Mr. LELAND'S permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the extraordinary curative powers of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him personally either at his mammoth Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, or at the popular Leland Hotel, Broadway, 27th and 28th Streets, New York.

Mr. LELAND'S extensive knowledge of the good done by this unequalled eradicator of blood poisons enables him to give inquirers much valuable information.

ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP

FOUR POINTS

Prepared by an entirely NEW METHOD.
Composed of the PUREST MATERIALS.
WILL NOT INJURE THE FABRIC.
WILL CLEANSE WITHOUT RUBBING.

You can do a large washing without any rubbing; use the boiling process instead. You can save Time, Labor, Fuel, Soap and Clothing.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.

Cut up fine and dissolve one half bar in half gallon of hot water. Pour half this dissolved soap into a tub with just sufficient hot water to cover a boiler full of clothes. Then put the clothes in to soak, rubbing plenty of soap in the most soiled parts. Be sure that the soaking water is hot; soak the clothes half an hour; stir them occasionally so that they may get the full benefit of the hot suds; pour the remainder of the dissolved soap into the boiler, adding sufficient water to cover the clothes; wring them lightly out of the suds. Soap the stained spots and place loosely in the boiler; boil 10 to 20 minutes, rinse well, blue and hang to dry. Do not crowd the boiler too full. The same boiling water may be used for further boiling by adding a little soap to each boiler-full of clothes. Fannels and prints should not be boiled, only a little rubbing required after soaking. This soap will cleanse clothing as thoroughly as any other without the use of the boiler. We prefer and recommend the boiling process as in itself a cleansing process, saving labor, the wear of the wash-board, and being the best disinfectent known, it is easier to boil the dirt out than to rub it out. You can cleanse perfectly the finest fabric without injury; the finest point lace and lace curtains. Soak point lace in hot suds made with this soap, press water out with the hand; boil 3 to 5 minutes in clean suds made with this soap, rinse thoroughly, press carefully between the folds of a towel, roll in a dry towel, and iron between pieces of old flannel. Soak curtains 10 to 30 minutes and boil 5 to 20 minutes, rinse, stretch on frame, or pin every scallop to carpet over a sheet to dry; no ironing required.

Be sure and ask for ELECTRIC-LIGHT SOAP, and take no other.

Sold by leading wholesale and retail grocers everywhere. Dealers may obtain our goods upon application. ELECTRIC SOAP MANUFACTURING CO., Indianapolis, Ind., and 26-28 South Water St., Chicago, Ill.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRES.

Narrow Escape of Guests from a Burning Hotel—Several Persons Injured at Asbury Park, N. J.

DOVER, N. H., September 23.—The Half-Way House, a tavern situated on the road between Dover and Great Falls, together with its contents, was completely destroyed by fire Sunday night. Several of the inmates had a very narrow escape from death. The proprietor was absent and Clerk Long in charge was awakened by the smoke. He jumped from the third story to the ground, escaping with slight injuries. He re-entered the house, gave the alarm and four girls and other inmates who would otherwise have perished made their escape. William Berry, a lodger, was so stupefied that he attacked Long and was only pulled out by the aid of several men. John Moulton had his back and head badly burned and others in the building were more or less injured. The origin of the fire is supposed to have originated from a lamp explosion.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., September 23.—A fire broke out in the Riggs cottage on Madison Avenue at eight o'clock Sunday evening. A high wind was blowing from the sea, and in a few minutes the adjoining cottages were in flames. Githen's block on Cookman Avenue was partially destroyed. Ten families are rendered homeless. The loss will reach over $30,000, which is fully insured. During the fire a twenty-foot ladder broke, precipitating three firemen to the ground. Two of the men were severely injured. When the alarm was sounded the Salvation Army barracks was crowded and a panic ensued, women fainted and a rush was made for the exits, causing several women to be tramped on. The fire was caused by the explosion of a lamp.

SOMERVILLE, Mass., September 23.—The Middlesex Bleachery and Dye Works, comprising several large buildings, covering two and a half acres and filled with valuable fabrics, were burned yesterday. Loss $200,000; insurance $65,000. The works were the most extensive of the kind in the country and were founded in 1880.

A Candidate Arrested for Murder.

TOM'S RIVER, N. J., September 23.—The mystery surrounding the strange disappearance of James Warnwright, hunter, guide and laborer, who was murdered last Monday morning seems in a fair way to be solved. On Sunday the woods were scoured for several miles around the scene of the murder, hundreds of citizens joining the Sheriff's posse in the afternoon. A party searching was attracted by a strange odor, and discovered the nude body of Warnwright in the water at the source of Cedar Creek, at an old mill. The suspicion that has attached to a prominent citizen, (Mr. E. H. Rockwell,) was considered sufficiently confirmed to warrant his arrest on the charge of murder. He was arrested and committed to jail. The excitement runs high. Rockwell is candidate for Sheriff of this county. The motive of the crime seems to have been the alleged intimacy between Rockwell and the murdered man's wife.

Awards for Niagara Falls Park.

Startling Disclosure.

PORTLAND, Ore., September 23.—Investigation of the mysterious murder of A. Pickler, whose body was found a few days ago near Chehalis, W. T., resulted in a startling disclosure. A reliable Indian states that he saw Pickler descending the Chehalis River some days ago; he was closely followed by two white men, who compelled the Indian at the point of their rifles to yield up his canoe. He gave up the boat in which the men embarked and followed Pickler. Nothing more was seen of the men, and a few days later Pickler's body was discovered by a searching party. Pickler had with him $2,000 and a gold watch. There was nothing on the body when found. There is evidence that a very desperate struggle occurred before Pickler was killed. It is believed one or both murderers were badly wounded and are still hiding in the woods. The whole country is aroused.

Belgian Glass Workers at Pittsburgh.

PITTSBURGH, September 23.—According to a telegram received by President Cline, of the Window Glass Workers Association, a party of prominent Belgian glass workers will arrive in this city to-morrow for the purpose of gathering statistics of American glass manufacture. Upon their report will depend largely the maintenance of the International Glass Workers Association in their country. The Belgian committee will also collect statistics of other great industries of America.

Pardoned That He May Die at Home.

ALBANY, N. Y., September 23.—The Governor has pardoned Richard Unger, convicted in the county of New York of burglary in the third degree, sentenced February 21, 1883, to three years imprisonment in Sing Sing. He has been transferred to the State Asylum for insane criminals, the medical superintendent of which, states that Unger is also afflicted with rapidly progressive consumption, and his case is hopeless. He is pardoned that his mother may take him home to die.

Precautions Against Yellow Fever.

NEW YORK, September 23.—Every precaution has been taken by the health officials to disinfect the room at the Hotel Espagnol where Domingo Morales lay sick with yellow fever the greater part of last week. The patient himself was removed from the reception hospital to the hospital at quarantine, where he lays in an extremely critical condition. Dr. Day, the Sanitary Superintendent, said yesterday that he feared no epidemic in consequence of an isolated case like this that has been brought from abroad.

Raising the Tallapoosa.

VINEYARD HAVEN, Mass., September 23.—The steam tug Rescue, with two pontoons of 175 tons floating capacity each, arrived at the wreck of the Tallapoosa yesterday morning. When other pontoons have arrived from the wreck of the State of Maine, an attempt will be made to raise the sunken vessel.

A CIRCUS ROW.

A Fatal Row with Showmen Belonging to Orton's Circus.

ATCHISON, Kas., September 23.—A special says that a serious row occurred between the citizens of Burr Oak, Jewell County, Kansas, and the showmen belonging to Miles Orton's circus Friday night, in which one man was killed and several wounded. The disturbance was raised by a drunken citizen named Elliott, and a general fight occurred. Elliott was arrested and the circus men took their effects to the train. The crowd followed them and just as Mayor Mann had restored order a man named Evans appeared at the depot with a double-barreled shotgun and fired into the train. At this moment the train pulled out and the circus men fired a volley at the crowd, killing J. Long necker, mortally wounding Mayor Mann and slightly wounding a boy. Long necker had not taken part in the row. He leaves a wife and six children. The Orton circus is the same that was in a horrible affair at Greeley, Colorado, some time ago. It was billed to show at Washera, Saturday, and thither about a hundred Burr Oak people went by special train to arrest the murderers. Great excitement prevails at Burr Oak.

Another special from Washington says that sixteen circus men were arrested there by the Sheriff of Jewell County. Saturday afternoon they were taken to Greenleaf by the Sheriff of Washington County. At seven o'clock in the evening 100 men arrived there from Burr Oak, and at last accounts 500 men were at the depot awaiting developments while the circus was performing up town. The Burr Oak people demanded the arrest of Orton and his son. The crowd was orderly.

A Fatal Saloon Row.

HAMMOND, Ind., September 23.—At Hessville, near here, yesterday a party of eight ordered several rounds of drinks in Joseph Hess' saloon and refused to pay for them. This led to a quarrel and a scuffle in which a window got broke. This so incensed Hess that he took up a pitchfork and stabbed a German named James Yearson in the breast and his son, Edward Hess, took up a double-barreled shotgun and fired into the crowd, completely riddling Thomas Welsh in the neck and breast. Half a dozen shots entered just below the heart of George H. Adams, a colored man. James Conley was shot in the right arm. After the shooting was over a hand-car was procured and the wounded brought here. Welsh died on the way. He begged for water and also for his companions to cut his throat, his sufferings were so terrible. Adams cannot recover. Welsh is supposed to hail from New York. Adams was from Irondale, Ill. Conley is from South Chicago and a son of a saloon keeper. All the party were employed in a brickyard near Hessville. Edward Hess, who did the shooting, is about twenty-five years old and works on the railroad as a laborer and bears a hard reputation. He escaped soon after the shooting. He got a hand-car and pulled out toward Chicago, being assisted in his flight by three of his companions.

Indian's Idea of Justice.

SALT LAKE, Utah, September 23.—"White-Eye," the Indian who was on trial at Beaver for putting strychnine in the food of herders near Canab, killing one, was convicted of murder in the first degree with recommendation of a life sentence. One of the Mormon Mountain Meadow's massacre men was the interpreter at the trial. The Indians of his band object to the proceedings, saying that there is no sense in taking the life of "White-Eye," who is a young buck, against that of the murdered man, who was old. Accordingly, they offer one old man of their band in exchange, or they will give six ponies to settle the whole matter. In spite of the declination of the officers they sent for the ponies, expecting when they arrived to turn them over to "White-Eye's" attorney and secure his release.

A Desperado Captured.

FORT SMITH, Ark., September 23.—Jim Wasson, one of the most notorious desperadoes in the Indian Territory, and for whom there was a private reward of $1,000 offered, was arrested near Muskogee, I. T., Wednesday, being taken unawares by his captors. He has been an outlaw several years and is wanted in the United States Court here for a murder committed two years ago. The latter part of July last he and a man named Jerry Lewis murdered a man named Watkins in the Choctaw country, and the murdered man's wife offered $1,000 for Wasson and $500 for Lewis, dead or alive. The reward first offered was $3,000, but was afterward reduced. Wasson will likely be brought to this place, as both murders come under the jurisdiction of the Federal court here.

Scull Race.

PITTSBURGH, September 23.—The postponed three-mile single scull race between Peter Priddy and Edward Claytor was rowed yesterday evening over the Braddock course. Priddy was given a half-length start, and at the end of the first mile was a length ahead of his opponent, the mile being made in the remarkable time of five minutes fifty-five seconds, the fastest on record. After passing the mile stake, Priddy broke down and allowed Claytor to gain the lead, which he kept without much effort and finished easily in twenty-one minutes and five seconds.

Fatal Railroad Accident.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., September 22.—Two freight trains on the Hannibal road collided near New Cambria at half-past three o'clock yesterday morning. The trains were wrecked and three men, including the engineer of the west-bound train, were killed and the conductor of the west-bound train and one other were fatally injured. The names are not yet learned. It is reported the west-bound train was running contrary to orders.

Will Resume.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., September 23.—The National Bank of New Jersey will resume business again on Wednesday morning with unimpaired capital and every depositor will be paid in full. Director Lewis Howell will act as temporary President, and the two vacancies in the directory have been filled by the election of John R. Russell and Peter Runyon.

The Model Farm.

The Keota (Iowa) Eagle has at last found a western man who is satisfied with a fifty acre farm. His name is Artemus Fisher, and he lives one mile and a half south of Keota. The Eagle tells the story of his management and of his success as follows:

He keeps one team of horses, three first-class cows, and a nice little drove of the best hogs. He milks his cows for the creamery, and they made him nearly $200 last year; will perhaps do better this year. He will sell $500 worth of hogs this year, and have thirty stockers to keep over. He has $200 worth of flax-seed to sell; has an abundance of hay and grain to keep his stock in first-class condition during the winter. He keeps everything in apple-pie order about his farm; his cows revel in clover up to their eyes; he attends to feeding, watering and milking as regularly as the clock strikes, hence he gets the best results with the least possible feed. He keeps his stock under cover, and never allows any animal to shiver in the fence corners. He has a barn, that is a model of convenience and economy. It is snow-proof, and as warm as the old kitchen. He has a first-class selection of fruit—not a large orchard, but a choice selection of the varieties that thrive and bear the best in this locality. Everything about the farm bears marks of intelligence, thrift and economy. Besides making a living for himself and the "old lady," he will sell at least $800 worth of stuff off his fifty acres this year, and not be exceeding former years either. There is no rush or hurry about this model farm. Everything goes off quietly and regularly. The expenses are very small and the gains sure.

Nervous debility, indicated by loss of memory, universal lassitude, constant fatigue, vivid dreaming, unnatural excitements, fits of dizziness, etc. is quickly cured by using Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. This remedy purifies the blood, strengthenes the weak portions of the body, quiets the nerves, produces dreamless slumber, and is the only remedy that permanently cures the many distressful ailments resulting from nervous debility.

A Bird that Turns Somersaults.

There's a pretty little bird that lives in China, and is called the Fork-Tafled Parus. He is about as big as a robin, and has a red beak, yellow legs, black tail, and red and-yellow wings. Nearly all the colors are in his dress, you see, and he is a gay fellow. This bird has a trick known by no other birds that ever I heard of. He turns somersaults! Not only does he do this in free life on the trees, but also after he is caught and put into a cage. He throws his head far back, and over he goes, touching the bars of his cage, and alighting upon his feet on the floor or on a perch. He will do it over and over a number of times without stopping, as though he thought it great fun. All his family have the same trick, and they are called Tumblers. The people of China are fond of keeping them in cages and seeing them tumble.

In hundreds of instances where Hot Springs and other treatment failed to cure scrofula and syphilitic disorders the sufferer has sought and found cure in Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. It enriches the blood, strengthens the urinary and digestive organs, and quickly removes all indications of ill health and blood disease, from a pimple to a running sore, from a headache to a rheumatic pain. Its superiority over all other blood purifiers and strengthening medicines is admitted by all who test its curative effect and influence.

The blessings of life are many. Live long and be happy. Don't neglect a cough or cold. Keep yourself well clothed in changeable weather, and always keep a bottle of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry in the household. A single spoonful will cure an ordinary cough or cold. Its continued use will cure consumption.

Rev. H. H. Van Auken (congregationalist), of Union City, has at the request of his people withdrawn his resignation.

"100 Doses One Dollar" is true only of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it is an unanswerable argument as to strength and economy.

TECUMSEH, MICH., SEP. 25, 1884.

The latest sum in mental arithmetic: If it costs $50 to secure a nomination for County Clerk, how much will it cost to secure an election?

John B. Gough, the veteran temperance apostle, who has always voted the Republican ticket, has come out for St. John and Daniel, and he urges all Prohibition Republicans to do likewise.

Master Crandall is not opening his campaign for County Clerk very auspiciously. If the young man expects to "get there" he should take counsel of the older veterans and pay his convention debts promptly.

Wm. H. Wiggins and John G. Mason will make the race in the second representative district of this county. The candidates are both good men and evenly matched. There will be some fun in that district.

The campaign is beginning to warm up in this State. The triangular contest is becoming interesting, and Michigan is looked upon by the best political observers as debatable ground. Public meetings will be started all along the line early in October, and Butler will be here again for three or four days and Blaine will visit us on the 15th and 16th.

Politics in Ohio are warming up to fever heat. Both parties are throwing an army of orators into that state and from now until the date of the State election, Oct. 14th, the battle will be hotly contested in every election district. The Butler and St. John movements have but little strength in that State, so it will be a square stand up fight between the Blaine and Cleveland forces. Both parties realize the importance of the struggle. The Republicans will strive to hold their normal majority, the Democrats will fight to reduce it. The result will have a great influence upon the general election in November, and may indirectly decide it.

MY DEAR MR. TURNER:—You can do me a favor and I know it will give you pleasure to do so. If you can persuade the rural delegates at the County Convention that the interests of the party require my nomination for County Clerk, I would gladly cast an anchor to windward in your behalf. I do not feel that I shall prove a deadhead in the enterprise, if I once embark in it. Owing to your political position you will be able to work it on the delegates successfully. Name your terms. If you can't get an answer in the mail on Monday, let it start on the first mail Tuesday morning. Kind regards to Mrs. Turner.

Sincerely, C. T. C.

Burn this letter.

Senator Bayard, who was Cleveland's principal competitor at Chicago, pays this noble tribute to the reform Governor:

But this is the leading influence in the character of Grover Cleveland as I discern it—not love of money, not to achieve success nor arouse noisy admiration, but chiefly to perform his duty in that station of life to which it may please God to call him. He has done this alike in offices comparatively humble as well as those of great distinction and power, for he has governed the Empire state and 5,500,000 of people honorably, honestly and well for two years. As a son and brother he has done his duty; as a citizen he has done his duty; as sheriff he has done his duty; as mayor of Buffalo he has done his duty; as governor of the State of New York he has done his duty, and, God willing, as president he will do his duty.

Master Cyrus Crandall had an ambition to be County Clerk. This was certainly a laudable ambition. Ben Turner was an old veteran who could pull the wires. But as veteran Turner was a delegate "for revenue only," a free trade was agreed upon between them, by which Turner was to put Master Crandall in nomination, and Master Crandall was to swell Turner's bank account to the amount of fifty dollars. Turner performed his part of the contract. Master Crandall was put in. He thereupon paid Turner $15, and politely requested Turner to charge up the balance to his "profit and loss" account. To this Turner demurred, and straightway sued Master Crandall for the remaining $35. The suit came off last Monday and was adjourned for one week. The public will await the issue with breathless anxiety.

TEMPERANCE DEPARTMENT.

EDITED BY A COMMITTEE OF THE UNION PROHIBITION PARTY.

Motto:—No License for the Liquor Traffic in any form or for any price.

UNION PROHIBITION TICKET.

For President—John P. St. John, of Kansas.
For Vice Pres't—William Daniel, of Maryland.

Can a man readily be a prohibitionist and vote the saloon-keeper's ticket?

The time has come to vote for what we want—not for what we do not want.

Six steamers now announce St. John and Daniel as presidential preference in the vicinity of Ridgeway.

At the late election in Maine, Mr. Blaine refused to vote for the prohibitory constitutional amendment which was carried by three-fourths of the entire vote. If Mr. Blaine refuses to vote for prohibition ought not prohibitionists to refuse to vote for Mr. Blaine?

A Practical Matter.

The Adrian Times says: "The prohibitory submission plank in the republican platform does not commit the party to either side of the temperance question." It is true the party is not committed to submission. Right here in Lenawee county, the party nominee for the legislature in the 2d. district, is a bondsman for an Adrian saloon-keeper. Will the editor of the Times please explain in some of its temperance editorials why a saloon-keeper's bondsman would be a good man to "demand" the submission of a prohibitory amendment?

Of Two Evils Choose Neither.

In determining for which party to cast our vote this proverb is often quoted, 'of two evils choose the least.' It is applicable, however, only when there is no other choice to be made. In present politics nearly all will concede the two evils—the Democratic and Republican parties—and if we are obliged to choose between the two there would be reason for proceeding in this manner. But we are not obliged to do this because of an existing third party which has been organized for the purpose of correcting these evils. If truly conscientious and unbiased we will not support either evil, but will cast our vote for clean men, standing upon, and openly supporting right principles—vote the Union ticket.

The Detroit Post is recognized as the best Republican authority in Michigan. The following is taken from its editorial column:

It is interesting to note the relative strength of the Prohibitionists and Republicans. The largest Prohibition vote ever cast in Michigan was in 1883, being less than 14,000. The smallest Republican vote since 1876 was also in 1883, being more than 120,000. The one-eighth part tail wants to wag the seven-eighths part dog.

The Republican leaders have heretofore shown too great attention to the one-eighth. When the party adopted the submission plank favoring the right of the people to settle the question by a majority vote and the Prohibitionists refused to abide by the majority's decision, they deserved no further concession, and if the Post's advice be followed they will get none.

All right. We are sure the "Republican leaders" will follow the "Post's advice". That is just why the Prohibitionists propose to set up housekeeping by themselves.

THE GUNS TURNED.

Our Republican friends are continually telling us that our independent party action will result in a Democratic victory. It is quite evident from the tidings brought us by the daily press that the Prohibitionists are "sticking to their party" as never before in their history; and more, that they are increasing in numbers faster than any other party in Michigan. Hence, if the Republican complaint be true, either the Democrats or Prohibitionists will be victorious in this state next November. It must be confessed, that if the Republicans persist in their independent party action, the Democrats are likely to carry off the prize. But if the Republicans will abandon "their insane purpose to throw their votes away, and will cast them where they can have some influence upon the coming election," the Democrats will be kept out and the Prohibitionists will go in. It remains to be seen whether the average Republican will help the Democrats into power.

How our presidential candidates stand on the question of prohibition:

"I would make the tax on spirituous liquors a permanent resource to all the States as a source of revenue."—Jas. G. Blaine.

"The issue on the temperance amendment to the constitution has been very properly and very rigedly separated from the political contest of the State to-day. I decided not to vote at all on that question."—James G. Blaine.

"Laws unnecessarily interfering with the habits and customs of any of our people which are not offensive to the moral sentiments of the civilized world are unwise and vexatious."—Grover Cleveland.

"To-day this question more than all others reaches the heart and conscience of the people, and the ultimate triumph of the homes of this country, in the struggle against the liquor traffic is only a question of time. It is for us to do our duty and God will take care of the rest. There is no middle ground touching this matter and the man or party that is neither for or against the saloon system of this country is unworthy the support of the people."—John P. St. John.

A CHALLENGE.

At a recent meeting of the state central committee of the union party held in Jackson, Sept. 15, 1884, the following was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, Republican speakers are asserting that temperance men would manifest practical wisdom and give substantial aid to the temperance cause by supporting the republican party, therefore

Resolved, That the state central committee of the union party do challenge the state central committee of the republican party to a public discussion of the question at issue. The following is suggested. Let the republican committee select some gentleman to represent them; our committee will do the same. The republican speaker will take the affirmative and our representative the negative of the following:

Resolved, That those citizens of our state who believe in and advocate the legal suppression of the liquor traffic ought at the coming election to support the republican ticket, state and national. The time and place shall be selected by the speakers and the discussion shall be conducted under the usual rules of public debate.

From an Independent Standpoint.

Just now the republican organs are demonstrating the weakness of the prohibition movement in column articles and long interviews with those supposed to have been partial to the prohibition idea. This will have the same effect on the prohibitionist as the condemnation of the abolition movement had on the leaders of that party. The republican organs can do David Preston and all the other prohibition candidates no greater service than to continue their efforts in belittling the movement.—Detroit Evening Journal.

More republican advice concerning the prohibition movement.

What may be the outcome of this agitation in the approaching election it is too soon to say, but that it will have a strong influence it would be folly to deny. That influence cannot be overcome by sneers, or by calling the Prohibitionists "Deputy Democrats," or any other of the choice epithets from the slang dictionary of the Blaine partizans. The temperance men may be entirely mistaken in the policy they are pursuing, but they are obviously bent on pursuing it to the end.—New York Times.

WHY SUPPORT A NEW PARTY.

There are a great many who are interested in temperance work who do not fully understand the present object and purpose of the Union party movement.

The movement for the present at least, is directed toward the inconsistency of our laws, wherein we find it unlawful, under any circumstances, to sell poisoned or adulterated food, but at the same time, for a money consideration the sale of poisoned and adulterated drink, is permitted. To say that our present law allows or permits the sale of poisoned drink, is putting it too easy by far.

The tax or license required of a person to entitle him to the privilege of engaging in the sale of poisoned drink, is not levied under the general tax law on property he may have invested in said drink, but a special tax which buys him the right to engage in such traffic, because, without buying the right, for a stated money consideration, he is prohibited.

This right then to sell, is not simply a permission, but an open agreement with the state, that as soon as the price is paid, said state in return must guarantee that right and protect him in the enjoyment of it. Now if it is right by law to prohibit the sale of poisoned food, can it be right, for any price to allow, guarantee and give protection to the sale of poisoned drink?

To remove this monstrous contradiction in our existing law, is the object and purpose of the Union party.

But some say "the means employed is a mistake. Your third party movement will defeat good men in the only temperance (?) party, and finally the party itself," etc.

Let us see about it. We find in our statute, a law entirely wrong in principle—a law which gives a bad man the right and protection to engage in a bad business.

This law ought and must be changed. The legislature—the law makers—have the only power to change it. The law makers are selected from the people by political parties, and elected by nearly a strict party vote. Every member of the legislature elected is committed before hand to the principles of the party to which he belongs, and is expected in his official acts, to adhere to them or otherwise be open to the charge of unfaithfulness and and treachery.

There is perhaps no question in which party dictation has a greater influence with a legislator, than the question of temperance.

This being true, the only hope of getting the law straight upon this question, is to get a political party to make it an issue, and elect a majority of the legislators, who will be bound by party principles, to bring about such results. This is why Michigan has so long been refused this thing, because, of the two leading parties in the state, one by tradition and outspoken words is unalterably opposed to it, and the other has the record of repealing the law when it was right in principle and enacting in its place the one which now is so offensive to a large majority of her citizens. All of which was done in response to the demand of the liquor dealers of the state. While both of these parties think more of satisfying, and in that way retain the liquor vote, which they now have, than they do of granting the request of nearly 80,000 citizens who a short time since asked for the question to be submitted to them for decision, it is plain to every serious and consistant mind that the wishes and prayers of Michigan's best citizens will avail nothing with either the old political parties.

The policy of serving the Lord as much as possible without offending the devil, will never put a prohibitory law on the statute books of any state.

Let it be remembered then, that the purpose of the Union party movement is to correct laws which are wrong in principle. And that experience and history teaches that no reform, especially in temperance laws, is brought about without a political party being commited to the work.

That neither of the old parties in in this state have ever done anything to satisfy the temperance people, but their action has been such as not to offend the liquor vote which each has succeeded in retaining.

A Mormon Courtship.

The courtships of the saints are not always romantic affairs. Dr. Sharp, of this city, has four wives, and if he has good luck he will have another before long. During the last few weeks he has had a courtship on hand which has given him great trouble. He employed a girl named Mary White as a servant in one of his families. Mary was a fresh, plump, rosy-cheeked young Mormon. Her father was a saint with two wives. Mary was the daughter of wife No. 1. Wife No. 2 was gay and giddy, and when Dr. Sharp carried Mary back and forth between her father's home and the place of her service, he saw her and bewitched her, as White said. After a while Sharp enticed wife No. 2 away from her husband, and then White got an idea that the Doctor had bewitched him also. Another saint came along who was in the soothsaying business, and he told White that he had something that was good for him, but that it would cost money. The price was agreed upon. White bought the charm, worked it, and the evil spirit of Sharp was exorcised. Just as White was beginning to feel at ease once more, Sharp drove up with Mary and asked permission to make her Mrs. Sharp No. 5. To this the old people objected, for they believed he was possessed of a devil, and they thought he did not support his other wives any too well. When they gave Sharp the reasons for their refusal he was furious, and he took an oath in their presence that he would have Mary.

In the course of time he convinced the old man that it had been ordained from all time that Mary should become his wife; but the old lady said that the doctor had hoodooed her husband once more, and she refused to assent to the union. Then Sharp had a vision or two which he related to Mrs. White. She was still inexorable. Two or three days later he had a revelation that it would be very acceptable to the Lord to have Mary become his wife. It had no effect on her mother. Then Sharp dreamed dreams of mighty import every night, heard tremendous rumblings in the skies, saw a great light, and read many commands written on the fleeting clouds, all to the effect that Mary was his and his only. The old lady's teeth were set tight.

Taking a new tack, the doctor then threatened to summon Mrs. White before the High Council. She told him the Sanhedrim of the saints had no terrors for her. Then he appealed to the Bishop of that ward, and finding him dull of comprehension, he went before the Council with his grievance. Here he found sympathetic listeners. The old Bishop was promptly removed and a new one who believes in marrying off the young women, was appointed. Sharp is on good terms with the new ecclesiastic, and considers himself as good as married already. Mary is now at school at Provo, and Sharp has gone after her. The new Bishop is wrestling with her mother, who now sees the futility of further resistance, and who will in a few days, it is understood, formally consent to the union. In Mormon society this is considered a very romantic courtship. All Mormon love stories begin and end something like the above.—Salt Lake Cor. N. Y. Sun.

The Arbutus.

The arbutus is a flower of Nature's giving. Bred, as it were, from stormy skies and fed from the chill of ice and snow, theirs is nothing of the passionate beauty of the rose or the lily's regal stateliness. No gay coloring of greenhouse skill attracts us in these shy, uncultured children of woods and fields. Theirs is quite another and different charm. Absolutely pure, as are the glacier flowers of the upper Alps: of colorless waxen white, or tinted with a blushlike pink such as might have graced some Puritan maiden's cheek in by-gone days, this is the typical flower of austere and granite-grounded Massachusetts. Their day is a brief one.

If arbutus is welcomed in town or city, its home is still in the country. Hidden in quiet hollows, among sheltering hills, or on deserted wood roads, where the warm spring sunshine creeps tardily in, unseen of human eyes, it most frequently and gladly grows. Nestling to the warm, earthy-smelling ground it springs from, covered with the sere, brown grasses of a dead winter, it lifts to the sun the smile of its white or pinken clusters in prophecy of the summer. It never intrudes. In these quiet nooks it waits always to be sought. Many a city sportsman, prepared to break the Sabbath laws with carefully chosen rods, is ready to forbear whipping unoffending trout brooks with impossible flies and bend over gray moss and little clusters, mindful, perhaps, of numerous promises to his expectant lady friends. To our novice each step is a discovery and a surprise. Treading gingerly, he stumbles on a low-lying, half-hidden cluster. He stoops to pick it. Mindful of feminine injunctions for "long stems" (which has nearly exterminated the flower in once plentiful spots), he pulls vigorously at the tough little vine. When it is his, he finds it enriched with flower buds he never dreamed of, strung along on this slender thread. He stows his prize, and on for the next. It is a chance if he finds himself alone. School children, boys and girls, for the nonce preternaturally quiet, are diligently working on the same errand as himself. At times he must dodge the enshrouding sun-bonnet of a mature damsel, whose basket somehow fills rapidly. If she pick much or little. Under gray skies, in "the uncertain glory of April days," seldom far from sad solemn woods or the twittering of venturesome birds, in a silence broken only by the sounds of awakening Nature or the shout of an occasional "find" the city's supply of arbutus is picked.—Boston Transcript.

Rev. Fidelia W. Gillette will preach at the Universalist church next Sunday, the 28th, at the usual hour. A parish meeting will be held after service to elect delegates to the coming State convention to be held at Grand Rapids, Oct. 7 and 8.

SHAKEN BY AN EARTHQUAKE.

That venerable personage, the oldest inhabitant, has finally been outwitted. Something has at last happened, which has no parrriel in his recollection. A genuine earthquake struck this latitude last Friday afternoon about twenty minutes before three o'clock. Two distinct waves passed over the town a few seconds apart. Door bells were rung, movable articles in houses were shaken, and goods on the shelves of stores were rattled about. No damage was done that we have learned although some timid people were considerably alarmed. The same wave was felt quite generally throughout Ohio, Indiana and Michigan. Our correspondence shows that it was felt distinctly in all the townships of Northern Lenawee.

The following extracts from our county exchanges show how the neighboring towns received the new visitor.

Morenci Observer: The earthquake. Yesterday afternoon a sudden tremenduous shaking of all the buildings in town brought everybody to the street anxiously inquiring what was the matter. For a moment it seemed that the building in which our office is situated would topple over. In the drug store bottles jingled, and the iron-ware rattled in every kitchen in town. The primary department of the schools was closed, and for a while the great shaking up was the subject of conversation everywhere; and no wonder, for it was the first earthquake shock ever experienced in this village. The telephone reported the fact that all the neighboring towns had experienced a shock similar to our own. Beyond the scare and excitement, no damage was done, and we know more about earthquakes than we did before.

Adrian Record: At last! Protectionists have always told us that this country possessed resources for raising anything that any country could raise. Now we know it! This country has produced everything heretofore that any other country has produced except an earthquake. The event of this afternoon proves indisputably that we can raise our own earthquakes. Let us be proud.

At about half past two o'clock this P. M. there was heard a low rumbling noise, accompanied by a perceptible jarring and shaking of the ground. Bottles in the drug stores skiped and danced about, furniture was, in some instances, moved, tinware rattled, people turned pale and a general uneasiness took possession of timid people. Many rushed into the streets and some ready to declare all bets "off" on the election under the impression that this mundane sphere had run about as long as was intended.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH., SEPT. 25, 1884.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Lots of fun at the skating rink.

"The Patterson" will soon be completed.

The county fair will always bring a rain storm.

John F. Murray, of Detroit, was in Tecumseh on Tuesday.

The millers are wishing for rain, so they can do more grinding.

The passenger and freight traffic on the M. & O. is rapidly increasing.

George Smith, wife and little Edna, are spending the week at Ypsilanti.

A large number of our citizens have taken in the county fair at Adrian.

Ab. Usborne's new building is now completed and ready for occupancy.

Morg. Miller, of San Francisco, will please accept thanks for late California papers.

The old corner store of Alf. James is being raised and placed upon a solid foundation.

Fred H. Burlingame, of Dundee, has been spending a few days at his home in this village.

C. A. Thatcher entered his horse at the Tri-State fair at Toledo last week and took the first premium.

G. R Williams, of Milan, publishes a lot of deadbeat accounts for sale.—He will hardly dispose of them.

C. A. Kiel, formerly of Tecumseh but now in business at Toledo, was in town a short time yesterday.

Miss Mame Foster, of Chicago, has been in Tecumseh a few days, the guest of Mrs. C. M. Burlingame.

Eight hours is a day's work now at Brewer's foundry. The new order took effect last Monday morning.

The Democratic Representative Convention takes place at the Council Building next Tuesday afternoon.

The friends of Rev. G. W. Hudson will be glad to learn that he has been returned to Tecumseh for another year.

H. Brewer & Co. will exhibit their brick and tile machines at the Indiana State Fair at Indianapolis next week.

Mr. and Mrs. Noah Burroughs and Mrs. H. Packard have returned from a visit of several weeks with friends in Iowa.

Be sure and read the advertisement of W. & S. W. Anderson & Co. on 4th page. They are offering rare inducements to buyers.

Trade is improving. Our streets presented an unusually live appearance Saturday, indicating that business is "picking up."

James McCowen returned home on Saturday last from Detroit where he says he has been having lots of fun for the past few weeks.

Harry Lee and wife took the train Tuesday afternoon for a trip to western New York. They go to visit Harry's old home and have a good time.

The next regular meeting of Tecumseh masonic lodge takes place next week Friday evening. Oct. 3. Work in the M. M. degree. A full attendance is desired.

Although the price of grain is very low, still the price of produce and merchandise is correspondingly cheap and can be purchased about 25 per cent. less than at this period last year.

Mrs. Sarah Stout accompanied by her sister and daughter from Oakland, Cal., left Tecumseh on Monday last for a few weeks' visit in western New York among the scenes of their childhood.

The editor of the Ypsilanti Commercial has been married thirty years—longer than most men have lived.—The most surprising thing about the matter is how a man can live so long and run a country newspaper.

Soap is essential in a political campaign and lie is essential in the manufacture of soap. There will doubtless be a generous supply of both dispensed to the unwary voter between now and the November election.

Miss Lizzie Smith and Miss Louise Phelps left Tecumseh on Tuesday last for Chicago. Miss Smith, after doing Chicago, will continue her trip to Sterling, Ill., where she will spend a few weeks visiting relatives and friends.

All who are interested in the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle are requested to meet on Friday evening of this week at the residence of Dr. House. At this meeting plans of work for the year will be arranged, officers elected and matters pertaining to make the Circle beneficial and pleasant to all its members will be fully discussed and acted upon.

The prince of butchers, Jim Cole, is now taking special pains to furnish our citizens with the very best variety of meats and vegetables that can be procured. If honorable dealing will bring success he is bound to succeed. He finds an occasional spare hour to work up the Butler cause and being the corresponding secretary of the B. & W. club if no other way will bring you he will write you a letter.

Fine weather to-day for the county fair.

D. D. Marshall, of Detroit, spent last Sunday in Tecumseh.

Mahlon Sherd is home again, having returned from a lengthy visit in Iowa.

A. J. Sinclair, of Adrian, state agent of the Home Ins. Co. of N. Y., paid the HERALD his respects last Tuesday.

The champion fast skaters of the west will give an exhibition three mile race at the Skating Rink next Saturday evening.

James W. Hastings went to Ann Arbor last week and entered the freshmen class at the University.—We wish you success, James.

Having bought out Mrs. Stout's millinery business Mrs. N. R. Brown kindly invites the ladies of Tecumseh and vicinity to call and look at the new goods.

Mrs. P. J. Welling arrived in town last Monday, and will remain among her Tecumseh friends a week or two. She is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. David Van Tyne.

Daniel T. Lewis, of Lake Ridge, has been spending three months with his son Lorenzo in Iowa, and returned last week. He is delighted with Northwestern Iowa.

A. O. Crozier spoke at Springville on Monday and a Union club of twenty-five members was organized. He spoke Tuesday evening at Tipton, and a number of new names were added to the St. John club.

C. A. Thatcher is as usual leading the trade in Crayon and Ink portraits. He is collecting a very large order to be delivered during the holidays and offers special inducements to any who desire making a fine present.

Among the decisions rendered last Tuesday by the Supreme Court was one affirming the judgment in this circuit in the case of Boyd vs. Conklin. Another page in the Boyd dam history and another victory for the township.

A terrible fire is raging in the Squawfield marshes, near Hudson. The entire community is fighting the flames, but, when last heard from, they were not yet subdued, and several thousand dollars damage had already been done to property.

Adrian Record: A dispatch has been received from the attorney general, instructing the prosecuting attorney to begin the steps necessary to the appointment of a receiver of the Adrian savings bank. Mr. Salsbury promptly began in the matter.

Michigan crop reports show a wheat product of about 26,000,000 bushels, 50,000 bushels better than report at same time last year. Corn yields 89 per cent., potatoes promise 93 per cent., apples 67 per cent. and peaches 13 per cent—an average crop.

Arrangements are in progress for a big Union demonstration at Adrian on the 7th of October. John P. St. John will positively be present, also Preston and Mosher, and other noted prohibition orators. The meeting will be held on the old fair ground at two o'clock, P. M.

The unfortunate depositors who were victimized by the failure of Loomis' bank at Adrian, held a meeting for consultation last Monday evening. A committee was appointed with instructions to employ counsel and take steps forthwith for the appointment of a receiver.

The Evening Journal war has finally ended in the complete surrender or rather collapse of the Brezee faction. Brezee went down with his colors flying, however, and was spunk to the last. The paper goes into the hands of a Republican syndicate, who will run it as an independent paper with a high tariff trend.

John C. Palmer, of Ridgeway, drove to Tecumseh Monday morning last to bring his son to the train. He drove quite fast on the way and as he turned the corner by Kies Bro's store his horse dropped dead in the harness. The horse had been in good health, and he can think of no cause unless he might possibly have overdriven him.

Among our marriage notices will be found the wedding announcement of Chas. H. Brown to Miss Julia Tillapaw. The bride's home has been in Hudson, where the ceremony was performed last Saturday. Charley has made a good choice, and he brought his bride home on Sunday. He will live for the present with his father, Henry Brown, who works Judge Stacy's farm.

The M. & O. road required a bonus of $1500 to build a depot at Tipton and $1000 to build one at Sand Lake crossing. The $1000 has been raised and a depot will be constructed at once at the latter point. $900 has been raised to secure one at Tipton, and the remaining $600 will undoubtedly be forthcoming. Some of the Franklin bonus notes were conditioned on the building of a depot there and of course these cannot be collected unless the depot shall be built. Whether these notes are to be included in the $1500 now asked for we do not know, but presume they are. In that case the farmers near Tipton should have no trouble in raising the required amount.

SWINGING AROUND THE CIRCLE.

Since recording our last swing in the HERALD, we have taken occasion to swing around among our country friends some more. Although the weather has been exceedingly warm, the roads remarkably dusty and every thing terribly dry, we enjoyed our trips, renewed old acquaintance with many friends and formed many new ones.

Starting out with "old grey" and the buggy one fine morning, we halted at E. C. Norcross', who now lives with his father, Aaron Norcross, on the old farm. Eugene is managing his own farm and the old farm, both, which gives him 240 acres to take care of. It is needless to say that he has his hands full. Aaron takes life easy, enjoys himself and talks politics. He is an enthusiastic Cleveland man, but believes in a high tariff on wool.

Thomas Wilson was found on his place south of Tipton, which is rented to Dan Hanford. He is spending his time this summer making improvements on the place, having overhauled the barns and "fixed up" things generally around the farm. As Mr. Hanford was in Tecumseh that day, our contemplated visit with him failed to connect.

Mrs. Fitcher and Frank keep the House at Tipton corners where the best of entertainment is provided for travelers. A good chicken dinner there put us in good trim for an afternoon's work.

C. L. Mudge has sold out his blacksmith shop and is about moving to Weston where he will go into business with his son.

J. A. Tuttle still handles Uncle Sam's mail and has no fears of the removal of the post-office to Sand Lake crossing. Franklin needs the post-office where it is and it will stay there.

John Conlin is happy and contented. He is doing what he can to work up the bonus for a depot at Tipton. We are under lasting obligation to him for a sample of the Adrian mineral water. It is the most fragrant boquet we have had in our sanctum for several months.

B. F. Norcross is nicely situated on a farm of his own containing eighty acres. He has a good home and splendid family, and has every reason to be satisfied with his start in life.

James Kimball lives on the old place of 120 acres. His son Eugene runs the farm, and the other two boys, with John Stout, are running a thresher. James Jr. owns the engine. The threshing business is good this fall, for grain is plenty, it is easily threshed, and the weather has been very favorable.

Going west from Kimballs we aimed for Springville, arriving there at three o'clock P. M. Here we found the whole city torn up over the earthquake. It struck that place at 2.40 o'clock. The crockery in T. H. Mosher's store danced about on the shelves, door bells were rung and little articles on shelves were thrown to the floor. It was a new experience to Springville and something that the oldest inhabitant had never known before. Mr. Mosher complains of the slow times in business. He has been in trade continually for forty eight years, has been through wild cat times, war times and financial crashes, and he never knew collections as slow as they are this summer.

George Dunn, who is running the George C. Monaghan farm, was putting in wheat. He is seeding thirty acres this fall and if we have rain soon he will put in another field. The old farm is looking well under his management and is as productive as ever. The old big pear tree is now in bearing, and the pears are prime.

Andrew Ayers, 2d, lives on the old farm where he has lived all his life, having first seen the light of day on the shore of the lake but a short distance from his present residence. He has a good home, a fine farm of 106 acres, and never gets the Dakota fever.

Wm. J. Pawson has one of the best farms in Franklin with good buildings and all modern conveniences. He has 120 acres and is seeding fifty acres to wheat this fall.

We arrived at C. H. Adam's Sand Lake House just in time for supper, and of course, halted for refreshments. The season for boating and fishing is about over, and his summer boarders have left for their respective homes. And now the dancing season begins. He had a large party that night and the guests had already begun to arrive at supper time. We could not remain to the ball, but have since heard that a large company assembled and that it was a very successful party, about one hundred and fifty couples being in attendance. Mr. Adam knows how to get up a good dance and his parties always draw.

Having done the Western towns, we will now turn our attention to the North and East.

Ed Smith's new farm house on the "school section" is approaching completion and, when finished, will be a decided improvement to the section. Since Mr. Smith purchased the Silvers place he has a farm there of 460 acres, which is ably managed by John Schreder. The new dwelling will accomodate a large family, and will be fitted up with all the modern conveniences.

Wm. Silvers still runs the old homestead near Clinton. Having spent a good many years at hard work, he sold his Newburg farm to Ed Smith and gives his attention now to the home farm of 80 acres. He finds enough there to keep him busy. His son Willie has gone to the Agricultural College at Lansing. He enters this fall and will probably take the full course there.

On another day we started Eastward and halted at John F. Temple's in Ridgeway just about noon. Mr. Temple himself was down on his prairie farm but T. H. Temple was at home at work on the addition to the house. Mr Temple has 60 colonies of bees which demand his attention much of the time. We were entertained at dinner at T. H. Temple's where we unexpectedly met Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Remington, of Tecumseh, who had drived down that forenoon for a day's visit.

A short call at Fenner Palmer's found him in his onion patch. He has one and a quarter acres of onions, from which he expects to take 700 bushels of onions this fall. He is now living in the old place on the Ridge and keeps seven acres of land to till, while the rest of his old farm is now managed by the boys.

John C. Palmer's is just below Fenner's on the Ridge where he has lived for so many years. He has 85 acres to care for. The farm is run by the boys, while "Uncle John" enjoys his new house, takes life easy and reads the newspapers.

Chas. B. Dibble is working the old Chris. Barrett farm of 80 acres and, judging from a short walk over the farm, he is doing his work well. Mr. Barrett began life at the bottom round of the ladder with no assistance but a good wife and his own hands. But, by industry and economy, he hopes soon to have a home of his own.

C. Hoagland has a fine home south of Britton where the latch string is always out for visitors. We had a brief visit with Mrs. Hoagland at Geo. Exelby's.

George Exelby was found in the rocking chair nursing the rheumatism. He has been confined to the house for eight weeks, but is now on the mend and hopes to be on his feet soon. His homestead farm of 180 acres is one of the most productive and best cultivated farms in Ridgeway, and he surely has reason to be proud of his home. We had a pleasant visit with him and advised him to banish that "rheumatiz" at the earliest possible moment.

We arrived at Chas. Underwood's about dark and accepted an invitation to "take tea" with him. Mr. Underwood is "well fixed." He has 20 acres with a fine home on the "ridge". Also 120 acres on the "old place" where J. B. Ousterhout now lives, and the Cecil Clark farm of 60 acres on the Tecumseh road. Between the three places he is kept busy. The Clark farm has been much improved since he bought it and he intends to keep on until he makes a handsome place of it. Mr. Underwood has a model family; a splendid wife, two daughters and one son. The daughters are now at home; his son, Cyrus, is attending school at Raisin Valley Seminary.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL

LANSING, Sept. 20th, 1884.

EDITOR OF HERALD:—We have had any amount of sensations here within the last week, but the one yesterday, an earthquake, and a genuine one too, at 3 P. M., was quite a novelty in these parts. It was not much felt in the lower stories of the Capitol Building, but in the upper stories was quite marked—in fact two men came rushing down from the dome very much alarmed by it, and I am informed that for quite a circuit around the capitol it was very preceptibly noticed in the jarring of the doors, and rattling of the windows, and in some instances the glass was broken by it. Of course the shock only lasted one or two minutes and was not I believe repeated.

The contest in the M. E. Annual Conference here over the Prohibition Party Resolutions, was very exciting, and to say the least interesting, but not such as to give one a high idea of their skill as parliamentarians. As it was the better parliamentarians succeeded in wresting the victory from a palpable two-thirds of the ministers who were unmistakably on the other side. Although of course I think the resolutions as finally passed were right, and the only proper and safe thing for a religious body to do.

Politics is just boiling, and all the different parties in the State, and in the Nation are well represented here, and the man who among them all cannot find a party to his mind must be hard to please.

The weather is just beautiful, the woods are gorgeous and the crops are well matured and no frost yet. B.

The County fair is being well patronized this week. It commenced Tuesday and will close to-morrow. We have not been able to attend but we learn that the exhibition has been a very creditable one.

Joe Wilson speaks to the people this week. Read what he says.

A few enterprising and musical young men of Tecumseh have organized a cornet band.

John U. Harkness of Rollin, has been nominated by the Republicans for representative in the third district.

Thanks to Lavern Wheeler for a large landscape view of Chicago street and a similar one of the H. Brewer & Co. group.

Judge Turpie, of Indianapolis, who is the attorney of the Sentinel newspaper in the Blaine libel suit, is a relative of Rev J. Phelps, of this village. Mr. Phelps keeps well posted on the progress of this celebrated case.

The new roller skating rink is well patronized. Every skating night witnesses a good array of skaters and spectators in attendance. Some of our young people are becoming adepts in the art and can cut the "pigeon wing" quite successfully.

A. J. Coddington, proprietor of the Shelby Enterprise, arrived in town Tuesday on a brief visit to his old home. He is well satisfied with his business prospects at Shelby and is running a good newspaper there. He returns this afternoon.

Adrian Record: The case of the Clinton Woolen Mill Company vs. Edwin R. Smith, is still on trial in the circuit court. The case is one of considerable interest and able counsel has been secured by both parties, Judge C. A. Stacy and Bean & Underwood being the attorneys for the plaintiff, and Millard, Weaver & Weaver for the defendant.

A certain married lady of this village and a certain married man, who belong to different families, went to the Jackson House, in Jackson, yesterday and asked for a room, representing themselves as man and wife. They did not obtain one, but obtained a room a short distance away. We are in hourly expectation of receiving news of an elopement.

To those who wish to go to Toledo on Saturday next, Sept. 27th, to hear Hon. James G. Blaine, at League Park, the M. & O. offer the following low rates:

Cambridge	"	1.00
Tecumseh	"	1.00
Ridgeway	"	1.00
Britton	"	95

Returning a special train will leave Toledo at 11:30 P. M. for the accommodation of the public.

On Wednesday the 24th was held a reunion of four generations of the Pitcher family at the very pleasant home of Mr. and Mrs. James Mitchell's, for the pleasure of themselves and Mrs. Dr. Weber, who will return to Boston in about two weeks. Some pleasant feature of the entertainment were music by Mrs. Cooley and Laura Ford and recitations by Eugene Weber, of Boston, and Nora Desmond, of Cleveland. About forty people were present and a general good time passed.

THE G. A. R. AND POLITICS.

The G. A. R. Posts have been not a little annoyed by the efforts made in some quarters to convey the impression that the organization was used for political purposes. Nothing is further from the truth. To enlighten the public on this point, the Dept. Commander of this state, Rush J. Shank has issued Gen. Orders, No. 5, which contains, among other things, the following.

It is reported that comrades in various sections of the State are wearing the badges of the order on their coats by the side of political badges, thus implying that they as Grand Army men, will support this or that candidate for office. Comrades, this practice cannot be condemned in too pronounced a manner. If we—as an Order—are to maintain our present high standing, we must keep it disconnected from all political organizations. Comrades, don't display your G. A. R. badge by the side of political badges or emblems. Don't attend political meetings as Posts or with your badge in a prominent position. Don't assume to speak for the order when you announce your own political preference. Remember that the G. A. R. is composed of comrades entertaining various views, all having equal rights as citizens and soldiers.

Lifted Up

A happy surprise it was to Mr. A. R. Norton, of Bristol, Conn., when ATHLOPHOROS put him on his feet, and sent him cheerfully about his business. Let him tell his own story:

"About three weeks ago I was taken with a severe crick in the back. For four days I was unable to turn in bed without help, and when lifted up could not stand on my feet. I was induced to try ATHLOPHOROS, after all the usual remedies failed. In 20 minutes after taking the first dose I could bear my weight upon my feet. In two days I was able to get about and attend to business. In two other cases which have come to my knowledge its use has been attended with the same results."

A poor man in Philadelphia had to borrow a dollar to buy a bottle of ATHLOPHOROS. On account of his poverty his name shall remain a secret. He had suffered terribly from Rheumatism. He gratefully writes:

"I took my first dose Tuesday afternoon, and on Wednesday, after but seven doses, I had not a sharper or severe ache left. Then I reduced the dose one-half and took the remainder of the bottle. I was able to be steady at work till Saturday, when I took a severe cold and was unable to use my left hand. I purchased another bottle and by bed time I found relief. The medicine is all you claim for it."

Investigate ATHLOPHOROS all you please! Find all the fault you choose with it! and yet the fact remains, that it is doing what no other medicine ever could do for Rheumatism and Neuralgia.

If you cannot get ATHLOPHOROS of your druggist, we will send it express paid, on receipt of regular price—one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it from your druggist, but if he hasn't it, do not be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us as directed.

The Prevention of Forest Fires.

The following article opens up a very interesting and important subject. We are glad to call attention to it. We do not quite agree with the writer as to the time required to grow a pine forest. We once sold at auction a pine growth of forty years for one hundred dollars per acre, for the wood standing, without the land.

Every now and then we read of a fire in the woods which burns up anywhere from a few thousand to a million dollars' worth or more of property; but until these ravages were brought together in one view, by the map about to be published by the United States Census Bureau, it is probable that no one had an adequate idea of the wide range and the vast amount of the damage done.

Without going into particulars, it is safe to say that the prevention of these fires is one of the most serious economical questions. The direct value destroyed is probably greater than that of all the lumber cut—which is not less than three hundred million dollars a year—and the incidental damage is in many cases far greater than the direct. Cutting trees does not necessarily hinder the land from growing more and better ones; in fact, it often helps to that result. But burning them off frequently destroys not only those large enough to be cut, but also a vastly greater number which are not large enough. Worse yet, it not only kills the seed in the ground, but also burns out the vegetable substance in the soil itself, rendering it for a long time incapable of raising anything but fire-weed or brambles, and then, later on, some of the trees least valuable for fuel or timber. In the case of broad-leaved trees, we may say that not less than fifty years, and, in the case of white pine—for which the soil and climate of New England are so peculiarly adapted—not less than one hundred years will generally, under the most favorable circumstances, be necessary before the same trees can be grown again.

Where the underlying slopes are steep this denuding and roasting of the soil often results in its being washed away by rains and if the rock beneath is a hard one, such as granite, it may be centuries before heat, frost and the humbler kinds of vegetable life can so disintegrate and fix it that it will raise trees.

Still further, a great indirect damage is done by these frequent conflagrations, because they make owners of land so uncertain of the future that they are tempted to cut their trees when small and thickly crowded, so as to get as much as possible from them for fuel before fires may destroy them; and of course this uncertainty is also a strong argument against that planting which advocates of forestry urge so earnestly.

The first and most pressing matter then to be attended to is, we are to continue to enjoy a supply of timber, without which we can not long have prosperous civilization, is to make or find a way to prevent, as far as may be, the starting of these fires, and their spread if once they do get under way. For the first we need more stringent legislation, such as making it as much felony to burn woods as houses intentionally, and a criminal offense to set the fires carelessly. Large bounties should be offered for the detection of offenders. Owners of woodland should be compelled to burn or remove all the tops, branches and other debris of logging, and fallen limbs and trees from standing timber. This has been recently urged by a leading lumber journal. Pleasure seekers should not be allowed to enter extensive forests, such as the Adirondacks, without a guide licensed by the State, and he should be held responsible for fires set or left by parties under his charge. Especially railroads should be compelled to put spark consumers upon all locomotives. It is said that three lately built for Vanderbilt work to entire satisfaction. To facilitate the fighting of those fires which do get started, there should be maintained, as in the French forests of maritime pine, frequent roads not less than four rods wide, which should be kept absolutely clear of combustible material.—Congregationalist.

Stopped at Niagara Falls.

A man, seemingly about sixty years of age, was telling the people in the waiting-rooms at the Third Street Depot yesterday that he had been East to old Massachusetts to see his sisters, and that on the way back he stopped off at Niagara Falls.

"That's a place I never saw," remarked a woman with a poke-bonnet on.

"You didn't. Well, you've missed the awfulest sight on earth. I was jest stunned."

"What is it like?" she asked.

"Well, there's a river, and the falls, and lots of hotels, and several Indians, and the bridle veil, and land only knows what else. If my old woman had a-been along she'd have wilted right down."

"There's water there I suppose?"

"Oh, heaps of it. It pours and thunders and roars and foams and bumps around in the terriblest manner. You have fit on a shirt-button in a piece of pie, haven't you?"

"No, sir."

"Well, the feeling was about the same—kinder shivery. Why, the biggest man that ever lived ain't half as big as Niagara Falls! Let him stand thar and see that 'ere water tumbling over them 'ere rocks and he can't help but feel what a miserable hoss fly he is. You've fallen out o' bed haven't you?"

"No, sir."

"Well, it's about the same thing, you wake up and find yourself on the floor, and feel as if you had been stealin' sheep or robbin' blind men."

"What portion of the falls did you most admire?" she asked.

"The water, mum," he promptly replied. "If you'd put ten thousand kegs of beer on the roof of this building and set them all running, they couldn't begin with Niagara. It's the terriblest, appallingest thing ever patented."

"Cost you much?" inquired a gentleman.

"'Bout sixty-five cents. It's pooty tight times, and sixty-five cents don't grow on every bush, but I ain't sorry. It's sunthin to talk about for twenty years to come. There's a chap in our town who used to travel with a circus, but he'll have to take a back seat when I get home. Flip-flappin' around in a circus don't begin with Niagara Falls."

"So, on the whole, you were pleased, eh?"

"Pleased! Why, I was tickled half to death! I tell you, if I had one on my farm I wouldn't sell it for no fifty dollars in cash! I've looked into a field what seven hundred and fifty fat hogs was waitin' to be sold for solid money, but it was no sich sight as the Falls. I've seen barns afire, and eight horses runnin away, and the Wabash River on tear, but for downright appalling grandeur of the teriblest kind gim me one look at the Falls. You all orter go thar. You can't half appreciate it till you've gazed on the rumpus."—Detroit Free Press.

Fashion Notes.

Fans remain very large.

Crinoline is on the increase.

Draperies grow less elaborate.

The Figaro is the coming jacket.

Small Greuze bonnets are in vogue.

Jetted braids appear among dress trimmings.

Skirts are nearly all gathered in at the waist.

No heels and full gathered skirts are coming in.

Cameo clasps fasten belts to round waisted dresses.

Belts and sashes tied on one side are much in favor.

Satin corsets are easier to wear than those of coutil.

Every woman of fashion has at least one lace toilet.

Braids of all kinds will be much used for dress decorations.

Foulards are the favorite wear of children for fall dresses.

There is a rage at this moment for excessively small bonnets.

Figaro jackets are made of velvet gauze for dressy fall wear.

Jackets of ribbed velvet or velveteen are correct for fall wear.

Handkerchiefs with fancy colored borders remain in high favor.

Stout women look better in gathered skirts than in tight gored ones.

A cheering line in a Paris letter announces that bustles are less prominent.

Silver braid in rows and rings will be the stylish trimming for black cashmere dresses.

At a late fashionable wedding in England the bride's bouquet, composed of white lilies, was large enough to fill a big wheelbarrow.

It is gratifying to learn that corsets are undergoing a change; they are made shorter in the waist and allow more room for the hips.

When the fall traveling dress is not of gray mohair, it is preferred of biscuit or mushroom colored light wool, and dark green or olive velvet collar, cuffs, and parements braided with gold.

The fan must match the toilet and suit the occasion. There are race fans, regatta fans, ball-room and dinner fans, parlor, and theater fans, but no church fans. Fans should never be carried to church.

The Empress of Austria, whose skill in all physical exercises is well known, has organized a school of fencing for young ladies at Vienna. The art is practiced considerably by French ladies, and all French actresses handle the foils with skill.

Some of the new colors found in fall velvets are nutria, castor, beaver, colorado, madura, and Havana cigar browns; also seal and mink fur shades, hazel, a nut shade, and iron rust browns, vert de gris, cresson, and bronze shades of green, and coquecot, or poppy red.—N. Y. Sun.

Old-Fashioned Furniture.

Quaint "bits" of old-fashioned furniture have for a long time past been much sought after, and pretty examples are now to be met with in almost every house of refinement and taste. One occasionally meets with old-fashioned things which from change of circumstances can no longer be used for their original purpose. The silver-handled steel, knives and double-pronged or tined forks—which most members of the present generation have never even seen—were, when not in use, stored away in a specially made satin-wood or mahogany box, often beautifully decorated with inlaid marqueterie work, and in the better examples the mountings were of chased silver. The interior of the box was apparently solid, with a separate slit for each knife and fork, which, handle uppermost, stood upright. Until recently these beautiful specimens of the cabinet work of a bygone age could be purchased for a few shillings each. Some one has lately discovered that by removing the interior false top and adding divisions for paper and envelopes, these old knife boxes can be easily transformed into choice and covetable stationary cabinets, and dealers are now buying them up, and when transformed are asking almost as many pounds as they gave shillings. Another ingenious person—a lady well known in society—has discovered that the highly-polished, old-fashioned double-handled plethoric copper or brass tea urns, wherewith our great-grandmothers delighted to adorn the table when their friends assembled to discuss a dish o' tea, can easily be transformed into a noble table lamp of striking proportions. The urn proper forms the body, and a paraffine lamp, with its ordinary glass receptacle for oil, is fitted into the space formerly occupied by the heater, which with the lid is, of course, discarded. The projecting spout is likewise banished, and a simple metal boss, with a corresponding one for uniformity on the other side. To complete, an extra large shade is fitted over an octagon-shaped wire framework of ordinary construction.—Chambers' Journal.

—The "heated term" can have no terrors for so cool a character as the editor of the Quitman (Ga.) Free, who refreshingly remarks in his valued journal: "The family of the editor of this paper is beginning to return to the hammock plantation in squads of two or three at a time. Our neighbors can resume at once the pleasant and charitable custom of sending in things."

—The oldest member of the Zoological collection at the Regent's Park, in London, died recently, being a black parrot from Madagascar, which was presented to the society in 1830, just two years after the gardens were opened. The bird had therefore lived in the gardens fifty-four years. How old it was when it arrived is not known.

Downright Cruelty

To permit yourself and family to "Suffer"
With sickness when it can be prevented and cured so easily
With Hop Bitters!!!

Having experienced a great deal of "Trouble" from indigestion, so much so that I came near losing my Life!

My trouble always came after eating any food—

However light
And digestible,

For two or three hours at a time I had to go through the most Excruciating pains.
"And the only way I ever got"
"Relief!"
Was by throwing up all my stomach contained. No one can conceive the pains that I had to go through, until
"At last"
I was taken! "So that, for three weeks I lay in bed and—
Could eat nothing!
My sufferings were so that I called two doctors to give me something that would stop the pain, their Efforts were no good to me.
At last I heard a good deal
"About your Hop Bitters!
And determined to try them."
Got a bottle—in four hours I took the contents of One!
Next day I was out of bed, and have not seen a "Sick!"
Hour, from the same cause since.
I have recommended it to hundreds of others. You have no such.
"Advocate as I am."—Geo. Kendall, Alston, Boston, Mass.

Columbus Advocate, Texas, April 21, 1885. Dear Editor:—I have tried your Hop Bitters, and find they are good for any complaint. The best medicine I ever used in my family.—H. TALENKER.

The three outlets of disease are the bowels, the skin and the kidneys. Regulate their action with the best purifying tonic, Burdock Blood Bitters.

S. Willard Beakes is about to start a new daily paper at Ann Arbor, to be known as the Evening Star and to be independent politically.

The tenacity with which people abide by their early faith in Ayer's Sarsaparilla can only be explained by the fact that it is the best blood medicine ever used, and is not approached in excellence by any new candidate for public favor.

The Osceola county huckleberry crop is a failure this year.

THE INSANE DODGE in murder cases is becoming so very common it may be expected any minute that some bright lawyer will spring up and declare that Eve was laboring under a fit of emotional insanity when she eat the apple, but no one would bring such an accusation against a lady for using DeLand's Chemical Baking Powder.

TECUMSEH, MICH.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures; while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Sciatica, Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Prices 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

Wonderful Dakota.

"Speakin' of the perductive soil," said the man from Dakota, "the half has nev r been told. The newspapers have gone jest as fur as they dared, an' though they have shot away under the mark, the editors have bin denounced as three-ply liars by the hull East. Perductive soil? Why, pardner, that don's express it! I remember last fall I was walkin' across my claim an' found a big log-chain about twelve feet long. I dragged it into my shack, an' happened to notice a peculiarity about the hook, the point o' which was in the form of a snake's head. All to once I remembered havin' lost a steel watch chain about two months afore, an', pardner, I hope I may never see that claim agin if that soil hadn't tuk hold o' that chain an' it growed to the size described. Why, sir, it's wonderful"

He gazed around at the faces of the Herald staff in search of looks of doubt, but all being serene, he continued:

"One evenin's jest afore dark, my wife looked outen the window an' said: 'John, I believe that calf's stuck down thar in that swampy spot.' I told her I guess not, an' we didn't give the critter another thought. When I got up next mornin' an' went out to do the chores I'm a bald-headed liar from the Jim River if thar wan't a full-grown steer a standin' whar that calf was the night afore, stuck fast in the mud. It was the soil, gents, the pow'ful, perductive soil that had growed that calf into a steer in a single night. It beats the hull world"

He munched at his quid of tobacco a few moments and went on:

"We never think o' settin' hens on eggs out thar. We jest bury the egg in the ground, an' the next mornin' we have a chicken big enough to kill for breakfast. Jim Daniels, a fear neighbor o' mine, is makin' oceans o' money raising telegraph poles. He jest sticks wooden tooth-picks in the ground and gives the soil a lick at 'em, an' when they're big enough for poles he pulls 'em up. He shipped a car-load to Fargo day afore yisterday. That soil 'ud raise the dead. A few weeks ago my wife said: 'Why, John, I b lieye you've took to growin' agin'. I measured myself, an' I hope Gabriel 'll miss me at the final round-up if I hadn't grown six inches in two weeks. I couldn't account for it for some time, till at last I tumbled to the fact that thar war holes in my boots an' I hadn't washed washed my feet doorin' the time mentioned. The infernal soil got in thar an' done its work. Did you see that boy that was with me on the street this mornin'? Looks like he was about eighteen years old. Wal, about two months ago my wife sot our six-months-old kid down in the p owed-ground to play, an' gent, I'll be billy dog-gone if— But you wouldn't believe that if I told it. Yes, it's a wonderful country, gents; a wonderful country! I could sit here fur a year relatin' actual facts, but I must rush out an' do some tradin'. I've got to buy a hatchet to shingle my barn with. I left my old hatchet out over night last week an' in the mornin' it war a full-grown ax. Good-bye."

Westminster Hall.

Although a surprising change has lately passed over Westminster Hall, both inside and out, it is an error to suppose that the glory of the venerable place has departed for ever. It is no longer the meeting-ground for wigged barristers and the solicitors and clients who used to throng it before the course of judi ial reform transferred them all, bag and baggage, to the Royal Courts in the Strand. An end has certainly been put to its history as a vast chamber for the practice of the law, and no State trial will ever again take place under its roof of Spanish pine. Originally the hall is said to have been built as a banqueting chamber; but if Rufus so designed it, the purposes to which it has actually been put have been widely different. Here Lord Chancellor Moore's trial took place, and hence occurred that touching scene when his son, after the death sentence had been pronounced, rushed forward, and on bended knees besought his doomed father's last blessing. The Duke of Norfolk, Strafford and Charles I. were also tried for their lives between these massive walls. Thr Seven Bishops were acquitted here in James II.'s time; and, to come to more modern days, this was the scene of the famous impeachment of Warren Hastings, and of Burke's oratorical displays. In Nelson's report of the trial of his sainted Majesty, King Charles of unhappy memory, a picture is presented of the scene in Westminster Hall, from which it is plain that in the olden time there was a sort of gallery for distinguished strangers perched in each of the southern corners of the building: in the center, beneath the arms of the Commonwealth, sits the "Lord President Bradshaw," and on his right had none other than Oliver Cromwell. The King himself has his back turned to the audience, and is seated fronting the mace and sword of State, with his royal hat on, in a comfortable chair, with ink and paper before him on a table. Even more quaint is the representation of the trial of Lambert by King Henry VIII. in person, wherein his Majesty is represented as sitting beneath a canopy closely resembling that erected over a modern bedstead, and is evidently engaged busily in ordering everybody about—for his royal hand is outstretched in an attitude of command.—London Telegraph.

—It is curious, says an exchange, how few people know the benefit of fruit at breakfast time. A saucer of berries, an orange or banana, pear or apple; at six in the morning will make the sky look brighter and fill the world with sunshine even on cloudy days; and yet many people never think of eating fruit in the morning.

—Mrs. Van Cott, the revivalist, has been engaged in her special work for nineteen years. She is now in her 54th year, and says she is the spiritual mother of 40,000 souls.—Chicago Journal.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—It is said there are five genuine signatures of Shakespeare in existence in each of which the name is spelt in a different way.

—Cyrus W. Field was once a clerk in A. T. Stewart's store at two dollars a week. In twelve years he made a big fortune.—N. Y. Sun.

—The late Alexandre Dumas said that, having traveled all over the world, he had brought back from every country save England a recipe for a new dish and a decoration; from England alone he obtained neither decoration nor recipe.

—James Payn, the novelist, offers his own experience as encouragement to young aspirants for literary fame. He was 32 years of age, and had written many books and a large number of miscellaneous articles be ore he made his first success in literature.

—"Gath," the correspondent, attends strictly to his newspaper work. He does not make his own contracts with his journals. His wife does it 'or him. She, in fact, transacts all his business, while he does the literary labor. His income cannot be less than $15,000 a year.—N. Y. Tribune.

—London has nearly 2,000 newspapers and periodicals, Paris 1,558, New York and Brooklyn 587. The combined circulation of the Paris publications exceeds that of the London. One-tenth of the circulation of the periodical publications of the globe is enjoyed by Paris publishers.

—Somebody has discovered that John Smith in Latin is Johannes Smithius; in Italian, Giovanni Smithi; Spanish, Juan Smithas; Dutch, Hans Schmidt; French, Jean Smeets; Greek, Ion Skmiton; Russian, Jouloff Skm towski; Pol sh, Ivan Schmittiwcisk; Chinese, Jahan Shimmit; Icelandic, Jahne Smithson; Welch, Ilhon Schmidd; Mexican, Joali t'Smiti.

—One of the most remarkable facts in the recent history of English journalism is the space devoted to American news and to editorial comment thereon. The American department is now a recognized feature of every daily paper, and the quality as well as well as the quantity of the matter referring to the United States has vastly improved.

—The late Jun us Brutus Booth built the Masconome House at Manchester by the Sea, near Boston, for a summer residence for himself and his family, but was forced by numerous applications for board to convert it into a hotel, which his widow, Mrs. Agnes Booth, now keeps and is making more money in the business than she can ever on the stage.—Boston Journal.

HUMOROUS.

—"She is a beautiful poem," says a gushing lover. We are glad to hear it. It does not harm a young woman to be well versed.—Philadelphia Call.

—A San Francisco naturalist sent a nice cage and a wagon to a friend's house for a fine specimen of ground-hog that was offered him. He received a sausage, and it took him three days to see the joke.—Exchange.

—"I have been going around all day, and now I am tired," remarked an exhausted Austin mother. "You are not like a wheel, are you, ma?" asked Tommy. "Why, little boy?" "You are t red after you go around, but a wheel is tired before it goes around."—Texas Siftings.

—"Say, Tobbs," said a young fellow, meeting him late in a saloon last night, "you're a lawer and a scholar. Which would be right—I drank blindly, or, I drunk blindly?" "Nezzer's right," said Tobbs, bracing himself up on the counter. "You should say, I'm blind drunk." The witnesses present thought so, too.—Scissors.

—Stationery Poetry.

Why did the penholder so tight,
And the paper cutter so?
When Papa Jerry knew 'twaant write
To have a ruler for a beau.

Why did the inkstand idly by,
And note that things wern't straight?
It should have tried to rubber dry,
And make the paper weight.
—Merchant Traveler.

—"Why," he pleaded, "our very circumstances bind us together: our similar tastes, our friendship, long acquaintance—" "Yes," she replied, "even age could bind us together." "What age, dearest?" he asked. "Mucilage," answered she, gluemily. A minute later, as he paste up and down the room alone, he realized that his failure was gumplete.—Life.

—"Man Pa," complained a little girl, running into the house, "me and Willie wanted nurse to sit down and let us pour sand in her back, and she wouldn't." "Certainly not. She did quite right." "Well, that's what you told her she was to do when she first came." "I told her she was to let you and Willie pour sand down her back?" "Not exactly that, mamma, but you to d her she was to mind the children."—N. Y. Sun.

—"I had no idea you were a machinist" said a bright Gotham girl to her escort, an Anglo-maniac of the first degree, as they stood watching the monkeys in Central Park. "Aw, weally, you surpwise me, aw," he stammered, in great confusion. "Will you, aw, do me the favor, aw, to explain your conundwum?" "It is no conundrum, Mr. Addlepate. It's a fact." "But, aw, weally, why d'ye think I'm a howwid machinist?" "Because every time you look in that cage you make a monkey w ench," murmured the cruel maiden. Mr. Addlepate fell back into a baby carriage and was aken to the Home for Incurables.—N. Y. Journal.

The Earthquake Nowhere.

Two fashionable New York ladies met, and the following conversation took place:

"Did you feel the shock?"

"I did not perceive it at all."

"Were you asleep when it occurred?"

"No, I was wide awake."

"I suppose you were outside of the range of the earthquake?"

"O, no, I was in New York. I was at the dinner-table at the Fifth Avenue Hotel when the shock occurred. Everybody else noticed it except myself."

"Why, how is that possible?"

"There was a woman from Boston sitting opposite me at the table, eating peas with her knife. The shock I experienced at this breach of etiquette was so much greater than the earthquake that I took no notice of the latter."—Texas Siftings.

Most Certainly A Specific.

"Infallible" and "specific" are round strong terms for a remedy, especially for those determed and painful diseases—Rheumatism and Neuralgia. But ATHLOPHOROS seems to deserve them. Says Rev. Wm. P. Corbit, Pastor of George St., M. E. Church, New Haven, Conn.: "I wish to say that for Inflammatory Rheumatism Athlophoros is infallible. I suffered for two months the most excruciating torture. Was almost instantly relieved by Athlophoros. If there is a specific for the disease Athlophoros is most certainly it."

A CURE FOR GRAVEL,

A Common and Painful Complaint—A Statement you may Confide in.

It seems to have been reserved for Dr David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., to accomplish, through his preparation widely known as KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, what others have failed to compass. The subjoined letter will be found of vital interest to sufferers from gravel and to the general public:

ALBANY, March 20, 1884.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—Let me tell you frankly that I have never been partial to proprietary medicines as I believe the majority of them to be nothing better than obtaining money from people whom suffering makes ready to catch at any hope of relief. They are mean cheats and delusions. But your Favorite Remedy I know by happy experience to be a totally different thing. I had been a sufferer from gravel for years, and had resorted to many eminent physicians for relief, but no permanent good came of it. About three years ago your Favorite Remedy was recommended to me. I can give you the result in a sentence: I tried it and it cured me completely. I am confident it saved my life. You can use this letter if you think best.

Yours, etc., NATHAN ACKLEY.

Captain Nathan Ackley was for a long time connected with the Canal Appraisers office in Albany. He is well known and writes for no purpose but to do good to others.

As a medicine for all diseases of the blood, liver, kidneys and digestive organs, Knnnedy's Favorite Remedy has fairly won its high reputation. Write if desirable to Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

KING OF THE BLOOD

The Most Thorough Purifier of the Blood Yet Discovered.

Cures all Humors, from a Common Eruption to the worst Scrofula.

It purifies the Blood.
It invigorates the Liver.
It regulates the Bowels.
It strengthens the stomach.
It gives vivacity in place of lassitude, cheerfulness in place of gloom, and robust vigor in place of debility.

Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Disordered Liver, Constipation, Nervous Affections, General Debility, in short all the numerous diseases and discomforts caused by impure blood are speedily conquered by this powerful corrector, the chief and sovereign of all ancient or modern medical discoveries—KING OF THE BLOOD.

Its name is its best description as it is a royal dispenser of the blessings of health and vanquishes the foes that lurk in the blood.

It banishes PIMPLES, SALT RHEUM, SCALY ERUPTIONS, ULCERS, SCALD HEAD, FEVER SORES, and all SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

It checks CONSUMPTION in its early stages. It has frequently cured it when advanced.

It disperses TUMORS and CANCERS without the Surgeon's knife.

It cures DROPSY, general or partial.

It cures FEMALE WEAKNESS and DISEASE.

It reduces in a safe and effectual manner all swellings, external or internal.

It eradicates the effects of Venerial Disease and Mineral Poisons, and establishes a sound constitution.

Many certificates, much further information and full directions for using, will be found in the pamphlet, "Treatise on Diseases of the Blood," in which each bottle is enclosed.

Price $1 per bottle containing 12 ounces, or to 50 doses. Sold by dealers in medicine.

If your druggist does not happen to have it on hand, request him to order a supply of it for you as it will be cheaper than for you to order direct of us, and less trouble.

General News Summary.

Interesting Home and Foreign News.

DOMESTIC.

THERE were 206 business failures throughout the United States reported for the week ended September 20, against 180 the preceding week, and 177, 141 and 96 in the corresponding weeks of 1883, 1882, and 1881 respectively.

GENERAL SCALES, Democratic candidate for Governor of North Carolina, while crossing Cowel Mountain, near Charlotte, N. C., was thrown down a precipice by the upsetting of his buggy and badly hurt. His life was saved by lodging in a tree. The buggy was smashed and horse killed.

THE postmaster of Rock Fort, Arkansas is reported to have absconded, leaving his account with the Government $1,200 short.

WILLIAM H. PAYNE'S large flour mill in New York City burned on the 19th. Loss, $60,000. The offices of three local newspapers, with their contents, on the second floor of the mill were also consumed.

AT Berlin, Wis., on the 19th fire destroyed sixteen frame residences and stores. Loss, $50,000; insurance light.

FIVE prisoners in the county jail at Watertown, N. Y., on the 19th overpowered the jailor, whom they bound and gagged, and securing the keys, made good their escape. The next day one of them voluntarily returned.

FIVE incendiary fires on the night of the 18th excited the citizens of Bellefontaine, Ohio. Among the property destroyed was Dickinson & Co's spinning mill, Starr, Cort & Co's carriage works, and three barns. Total loss $30,000. The fires were at widely different points.

THE dwelling of John Bylow at East Toledo, Ohio, was burned on the 19th and a little four-year-old daughter perished in the flames. In escaping Mrs. Bylow and her babe were badly burned.

JOHN ROGERS, of Bloomington, Ill., has brought suit for $10,000 damages against several parties in that place for an alleged conspiracy to injure the sales of his cattle by circulating false reports about their having pleuro-pneumonia.

A FREIGHT train on the Williamstown branch of the Camden & Atlantic Railroad dashed into the rear car of the Camden accommodation train at the intersection of the two roads, twenty miles below Camden, N. J., on the 19th. The car was demolished and eleven of the occupants, railroad workmen, seriously injured.

A PETITION is being circulated in Pittsburgh, Pa., requesting the Legislature to enact a law providing for compulsory temperance education in all schools supported by public money. It asks that systematic instruction be required in these schools in physiology and hygiene, with special reference to the effects of alcoholic drink stimulants and narcotics upon the human system.

RINDSKOPF BROS. & Co., New York clothiers, assigned on the 19th. Liabilities estimated at $900,000; assets $1,100,000.

THE remains of General B. H. Helm, killed in the battle of Chickamauga, which were brought from Atlanta, Ga., were reinterred at Elizabethtown, Ky., on the 19th with military honors.

Near Bridgeville, Ala., on the 19th, twelve men were putting a roof on a barn, when it fell in, throwing them to the ground. All were seriously injured, three probably fatally.

THE Columbia Valley Bank at Alkali, Oregon, and the Spokane Bank, of Cheney, W. T., owned by J. F. Danford, have both failed and Danford has run away. The indignant depositors have Cashier Ainsworth in their possession and threaten to lynch him if he don't bring Danford back.

DANIEL E. JONES, Deputy Internal Revenue Collector of the Marshall, Texas, district, suicided on a train near Mexia on the 19th. Jones was married and had eloped with the sixteen-year-old daughter of a citizen of Marshall. They were apprehended at Austin, and Jones was in the custody of an officer at the time of suicide.

AT Coal Center, Pa., the suits against the miner's wives for conspiracy have been withdrawn on condition that the women keep the peace in the future, and not interfere with the non-unionists going to work.

THE Connellsville (Pa.) Coke Producers' Association met at Pittsburgh on the 19th. On account of the banking of a number of pig iron furnaces in the East, the ovens were closed on the 18th. The coke manufacturers say they will pull the fires from all the ovens in the region before they will furnish coke at less than the syndicate prices, $1.10 per ton.

CERTAIN Washington claim agents have issued circulars informing postmasters who are entitled to a readjustment of salary under the act of March 3, 1883, that if these claims are not presented before December 1 they will be barred. The postal officials say that there is no authority for such a statement.

THE river steamers Morning Mail and Bonanza were burned to the water's edge at Fulton landing, near Cincinnati, on the morning of the 20th. The fire also communicated to the United States lighthouse tender Lily, lying alongside, which escaped with the loss of her upper works. The Morning Mail was valued at $30,000, and the Bonanza at $24,000. Each was insured for $20,000. The Lily's damage was estimated at $2,000.

SEVEN convicts were whipped at New Castle, Del., on the 20th, in the presence of four hundred people.

JOHN SLIM, a bricklayer, and John Reno, a helper, were suffocated by gas in a sewer at the Edgar Thompson Steel Works, Braddocks, Pa., on the 20th.

A WIDOW named Gait was gagged and robbed in her home at Heath, Mass., on the 20th, the robbers obtaining a large sum of money.

HARRY CLAY, a well-known lawyer and politician and a grandson of the great Henry Clay, was shot and dangerously wounded in a drunken row at Louisville on the 21st.

A RAILWAY train on the Pennsylvania Railroad collided on the 20th with a horse at the Market Street depot crossing, Newark, N. J., fatally injuring one passenger and seriously injuring several others. The horse car was crowded and it is marvelous that the calamity was not greater.

AT Nashville, Tenn., Sam and Will Wells, aged respectively four and two years, were put to bed on the 20th to take nap. Sam carried a box of matches with him, and striking one in the bed both boys were burned to death. The mother and Mrs. Hovie were badly burned in trying to extinguish the fire.

THE court of inquiry appointed to investigate the circumstances of the collision between the Tallapoosa and the Baltimore schooner finds that the Tallaposa did all in her power to avert the collision, complied with the law in all respects, and that the blame for the collision rests with the schooner. The Department has approved of the finding of the court.

FIRE at Muskegon, Mich., on the 18th destroyed the Temple Manufacturing Company's buildings, together with a large amount of stock and lumber. Loss about $60,000; half covered by insurance.

THE annual report of the Inspector of Buildings, shows that during the past year 932 brick dwellings and 132 frame dwellings have been erected in Washington, D. C., at a total cost of $3,108,074. This is an increase of 500 buildings over the number erected the previous year, and a larger number than in any year in the history of the city.

AT Dubuque, Iowa, on the 20th John Lange and his wife had a quarrel which culminated in his shooting her through the head, and then himself. He is dead, but she may recover.

ISAAC KINSEY'S block containing the Opera House, Jones & Co.'s dry goods store and other buildings at Milton, Ind., burned on the 20th, entailing a loss of $20,000.

ABOUT half the claims expected against the Geneva award in settlement of the damages caused by the Confederate privateer Alabama have now been passed upon and paid. If the remaining half amounts to as much as those disposed of the total paid will reach $10,000,000. The amount awarded by the Geneva Board of Arbitration was $15,500,000, so that the net gain to the public treasury bids fair to be close on to five or six millions.

THE large new silver vault under the cash room of the Treasury Department at Washington is finished, and the transfer of silver to it began on the 22d. It has a storage capacity of fifty million dollars. The silver now stored in the Treasury, amounting to $5,000,000, will be transferred to the new vault, where will also be stored the surplus coinage of the different mints accumulating every month.

THE acting assistant surgeon at Brownsville, Tex., reports to the Surgeon General of the Marine Hospital Service that there have been no cases of yellow fever at Matamoras, Mex., nor at Brownsville, and that the season at the Mexican Gulf ports has been one of the healthiest ever known. The fever is decreasing at Hersomollo, Mex.

FIRE at St. Louis on the 20th destroyed the Golden Eagle Clothing Store, owned by Browning, King & Co., of New York. Loss on stock estimated at $150,000; insured for $119,000.

THE Merchants' Woolen Mill, at Dedham, Mass., burned on the 20th, throwing five hundred hands out of employment and entailing a loss of $75,000.

THE proprietor of a New York museum has offered the authorities of Vienna $3,000 for the body of Kammerer, the anarchist, who was hanged there recently for complicity in several murders. The offer has been refused.

IT was reported at El Paso, Texas, that a band of Mexicans crossed the Rio Grande at Presidio Del Norte on the 20th, killed three Americans and quickly returned into Mexico. No particulars are yet obtainable.

THE old Government property at Harper's Ferry, on which stood the arsenal and its extensive shops, destroyed during the war, has been ordered to be sold by the Government.

Two deaths from yellow fever occurred at a hospital in Brooklyn, N. Y., on the 20th. The victims were sailors on the British steamer African, which arrived at New York August 19. A case of yellow fever was reported to the New York Board of Health on the 21st, being that of a Spaniard named Morales, who arrived on the steamer Newport from Havana on the 19th.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

THE President on the 18th appointed Harry Kislingbury, son of Lieutenant Kislingbury, who lost his life in the Greely expedition, as cadet-at-large to the Naval Academy at Annapolis.

RETURNS from all the cities, towns and precincts of Maine give the following vote at the recent election: Robie, 78,912; Redman, 59,061; H. B. Eaton, 8,168; Eustis, 1,101; W. T. Eaton, 97; scattering 16, making Robie's majority 19,851; over all, 15,411. These returns are official, excepting seven towns, which are from reliable sources.

E. C. LARNED, a well known member of the Illinois bar, died at Lake Forest, near Chicago on the 18th.

THE Democratic conferees of the Eleventh Pennsylvania District have nominated J. B. Storm for Congress.

ANTHONY THOMPSON, the oldest and best known colored man of Essex County, New Jersey, and said to be the last survivor of the old slaves of that county, died at West Orange, N. J., on the 18th, in his eighty-eighth year.

THE Women's Christian Temperance Union Convention in its closing session at Middlebury, Vt., on the 19th rescinded a resolution previously passed which endorsed St. John and the woman suffrage plank in the Prohibition platform, many delegates having objected to the dragging of politics into the work of the convention.

JERRY MCAULEY, the well-known city missionary of New York, died in that city on the 18th. He was once a notorious river pirate and ward tough. For several years after his conversion he conducted the Water Street Mission, and latterly has managed the Cremorne Mission on Twenty-third street.

GEORGE W. BUCHANAN, a pioneer of Washington Territory, died at Portland, Oregon, on the 20th, aged ninety years. Buchanan was Captain of the company that attacked and killed the Mormon apostle, Joseph Smith, at Carthage, Ill., in June, 1844; he also took an active part in the Blackhawk war.

GENERAL DUDLEY, Commissioner of Pensions, has resigned his position, and will enter the banking firm of Bateman & Co., of Washington.

CHARLES W. WEST, who several years ago gave $30,000 to establish an art museum at Cincinnati, died in that city on the 21st.

F. B. HAYES, Republican nominee for Congress in the Fifth Massachusetts District, died at Lexington on the 20th.

FOREIGN.

CAPTAIN ALBERT DELYBOAT, a contemtemporary of Commodore Vanderbilt, and said to be the oldest steamboat Captain in the United States, died at his home in Richfield Springs, N. Y., on the 19th.

THE barkentine Tropic Bird, arrived at San Francisco on the 18th from Papeete, Tahiti, brought news that the greater part of the business portion of the town was destroyed by fire recently. Loss $120,000.

THE McGregor iron works at Windsor, Canada, together with the Essex Mills adjoining, were destroyed by fire on the night of the 18th. Loss $80,000; light insurance.

CAPTAIN DUBLEY and Mate Stephenson, of the lost yacht Mignonette, were committed for trial at London on the 19th on the charge of murder. While drifting at sea in a small boat, without water or food, they killed the cabin boy, drank his blood and ate his body, that their own lives and the life of a seaman named Brooks might be preserved. The seaman was released from arrest.

THE Dutch budget shows a deficit of fifteen million florins, which has resulted mainly from the demonetization of silver. It is proposed to place a tax on tobacco.

IT is asserted that England will lend Egypt £8,000,000 to pay the floating debt and the Alexandria indemnity. The balance will be used in the construction of irrigation works.

THE Grand Trunk car works at London, Ontario, were almost entirely destroyed by fire on the 20th. The works cover an area of nearly five acres and include the freight car shops, the passenger coach shed and iron machine shop, all of which with their contents, comprising seven partly finished coaches and cars, and an immense amount of seasoned lumber in the yards, were consumed. Loss estimated at $400,000. Four hundred men were thrown out of employment.

NEWS from General Gordon, which reached Cairo by messenger on the 20th, is to the effect that on the 24th of July his troops signally defeated the rebel army which had been sent against him from Kordofan. Another battle was fought on the 30th of August, which resulted in General Gordon's forcing the rebels to raise the siege of Khartoum, and during which Sheikh Sidi, his son, and their followers were killed.

TEN thousand persons collected at the Cathedral at Naples on the 20th to witness the liquefying of the blood of San Gennaro. The low quarters of the town were illuminated. All the public houses were closed by order of the police.

LATER.

HON. HENRY CLAY, who was shot on the 20th at Louisville, Ky., by Councilman Andy Wepler, died on the 22d. Wepler is in jail.

Two freight trains on the Hannibal Railroad collided near New Cambria, Mo., on the 21st. The trains were wrecked and three men, including the engineer of the west-bound train, were killed, and the conductor of the west-bound train and one other were fatally injured.

THE Middlesex Bleaching and Dye Works at Somerville, Mass., comprising several large buildings, were destroyed by fire on the 22d. Loss $200,000; insurance $65,000. The works were the most extensive of the kind in the country.

CAPTAIN W. P. CLARK, of General Sheridan's staff, probably the most thorough student and writer in the world upon the Indian language, died at Washington on the 22d.

A BROTHER and sister named Chambers were struck by a train on the Pennsylvania Company's railroad near Scranton, Pa., on the 22d. The boy, aged seven, was killed outright, and the girl, aged thirteen, was mortally hurt.

THE Phillips well at Baldridge, Pa., is proving the most productive of any ever struck in the entire oil region. At noon of the 22d it was flowing at the rate of 138 barrels per hour. Thousands visit it daily.

A TWELVE-YEAR-OLD girl of Framingham, Mass., a few days ago packed a valise with diamonds and negotiable bonds to the amount of $75,000 belonging to her mother, a wealthy lady, and started for Boston to meet a young man to elope with him. She was arrested, the valuables recovered and the girl taken home.

THE assignment of the Newcomb-Buchanan Company, one of the most extensive liquor farms in the country, was filed at Louisville, Ky., on the 22d. Liabilities not stated.

THEODORE DWYER was shot and killed in his own house at Butler, Pa., on the 21st by James Peterson. The two men with several friends had been drinking together all the evening, but finally became engaged in a quarrel with the above fatal result. Both were prominent citizens.

BENJAMIN T. O. HUBBARD, the defaulting cashier of the First National Bank of Monmouth, Illinois, was arrested in that city on the 22d, charged with embezzling funds of the bank amounting to $106,000. He waived examination and was held in $10,000 bail to appear at the October term of court. The sum in the complaint is said to be not all of his defalcation, as the real amount which he took from the bank was $118,000, and he also took depositors' money to the amount of $250,000 or more, making a total steal of $368,000.

AT Schenectady, N. Y., on the 21st E. D. Hopkins and wife and two other members of the Bohemian Glass Blowers' Company went out on the Mohawk in a light boat. The boat capsized and Mrs. Hopkins was drowned.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly

The October number is even more interesting than usual, the 12 quarto pages being filled with articles, stories, sketches, adventures, poems etc., by some of our most popular writers. The illustrations number over 100 together with a colored plate frontispiece, "The Intoxication of Draught." "The House of Lords," by Noel Ruthven; "A Day at Chiselhurst," by Sarah K. Bolton; "An American Impressario's Experience in British Burmah," by J. Charles Davis, are among the elaborately illustrated articles. The serial "A Dark Deed" is concluded, and there are stories and sketches by M. Norcott, Annie Thomas, Imogene H. Skyes, Agnes James, etc., and some excellent poetry by F. H. Parker, C. Grindrod, Susan K. Phillips, etc. The great merit of this magazine seems to be fully appreciated by the public, and it is really the cheapest and most popular monthly published. A single number is sold for 25 cents, and the yearly subscription is $2.50, postpaid. Mrs. Frank Leslie, publisher, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Our Fair began with rain, but Wednesday exhausted the shower programme and the next two days were all of beauty sunshine could burnish. Thursday a great crowd covered the ground, lined the road, made landladies distracted, and found fault because the wild west failed to materalize as promised; but there was twenty five cents worth of attraction furnished for each and all, and good humor prevailed.

I did see the races, and the hour spent in floral hall enables me to speak particularly of but few things. A case of elk, snakes, frogs, birds, lizzards, and fans, attested the whittling skill of T. Wheaton of Napoleon, and some fine rock specimens and Indian relics were also enclosed, making altogether a very artistic curiosity cage. A finely carved clock case and bracket were the work of John Campbell when but fourteen years of age. Birds that retained the beauty of life, in death, were there, and art needlework in variety frescoed the walls. Kensington painting was conspicuous and table-scarfs and screens were plentiful, that merit more than this brief notice.

The editor of the Enterprise came to the front with a case of floral cards true to nature, and a ladder of photographed views of homes happy or wretched; landscapes and tenantry, kept a throng of admirers in a state of squeeze, rendered doubly compact by everybody within hearing of Will Sharp's voice, trying to get near enough to order their favorite song. The telephone harp was out of tune, at least not going just then, but am told its tones have facinated some of our business men. The canned fruit and vegetable department were fair, and the display of stoves extra nice. The flowers were pretty but not as nice variety as the owner usually exhibits. The only sewing machines were the White. They were nice and the operators in charge understood their business well enough, figuratively speaking, to embroider lace with a plow-share. Nearly every place within reasonable distance was represented. The band played well, and please chalk the item, they went home sober.

On the whole, the fair was good, attendance immense, and we regret that many charge the last to trickery. A prohibition lecture was furnished instead of the show, by Rev. Harvey Hodgkiss. A larger number of men attended than usual. They were of all political colors, but listened respectfully while the Elder painted taxation and estimated the value of unkept promises, and faith without works. He has always been an earnest republican, but throws no clubs at candidates, and says he will be satisfied if those who pray for temperance will drop their prayers and votes in the same box. PEARLIE.

ADDISON ATOMS.

Numerous of our citizens "took in" the "Plumed Knight" at Toledo Monday.

The fairs and fair sex, attract the attention of our beau material pretty generally of late.

Those of our people who have adopted the St.'s faith announce a pole raising for Friday of this week. Hon. Chas. Mosher will be the orator of the day.

Steps have been taken by our village folks preparatory to securing a village charter and the prospect appears favorable for better order and better sidewalks in the near future.

A bran new boot and shoe store will soon swell the business facilities on the west side of the creek. A Shadow shop will now be in order.

Mr. D. C. Durgin, of Hillsdale College will deliver his famous lecture on Iceland, Saturday evening at this place.

Fred Curtis's new banking building is fast nearing completion and will be by far the finest business block in town.

We learn that our enterprising hardware dealer F. A. Smiley will go east soon to visit his parents.

Our business men now possess facilities for supplying the public with goods and appliances equal to any in the market and at prices to compare favorably with those of any country town in the state, and the only thing necessary to make Addison one of the best business centers in the country in a few years is the patronage of the people. And we have no doubt they will take cognizance of this fact and govern themselves accordingly.

RIDGEWAY RACKET.

We had a fine rain at last.

Prof. H. C. Wilson was home over Sunday.

Ridgeway is solid for Holbridge.

Mrs. W. H. Arner is visiting friends at Jackson this week.

Mr. W. R. Wilson is repairing his house quite extensively and will make a fine improvement.

Mrs. Seydan and her child, and Mrs. Dave Coryell have been quite sick for the past week.

Mr. Geo. Boss is very sick and his recovery is doubtful.

W. R. Wilson and T. H. Temple went to Toledo Monday to see James G. Blaine their standard bearer.

Mr. and Mrs. Wakefield of Monroe Co. called on friends Monday.

Mrs. C. B. Sutton after a long sickness passed away Saturday morning. The funeral was held at her home on Sunday morning.

Our new pastor Rev. W. J. Clark occupied the pulpit Sunday. We extend the hand of welcome.

Miss Allie Palmer is visiting her brother Dr. R. H. Nelson. Her health is improving slowly.

Misses Wilcox and Johnson were the guests of Miss Belle Barlow Tuesday night; they are college friends of hers.

Misses Lou Arner and Ella Jackson made friends at Pennington's corners a visit the first of the week.

Several went to Britton to hear A. O. Crozier and A. K. Johnson speak on Prohibition Friday night.

Mrs. Dr. D. W. Loree left for St. John, Clinton Co., to visit friends on Tuesday.

The church social will be held at the home of Mrs. Jonathan Hall next Friday evening. A cordial invitation is extended to all. Good music is to be the order of the evening.

Mrs. S. W. Jackson, having gone into the millinery business, would respectfully invite the ladies of Ridgeway and vicinity to call and examine goods and prices.

F. A. Plumbley, of Vermont, addressed a Republican rally Tuesday evening. He told the Prohibitionists that prohibition was a success in Vermont and it was brought about without a third party in 1852. (Not a republican measure there.) He said he did not understand the situation in Michigan, but still offered considerable advice to the Prohibitionists.

Mrs. Emeline Smith returned from her visit in Clinton and Gratiot Co., last Saturday, and reports Mr. Courtland Snedicor and family well. Marshal has gone to Northfield, Minn., to attend school the coming year.

Miss Kittie Clark has commenced her duties as assistant teacher in the village school. It was a wise choice the board made in employing her. We think the kickers against a new school house had better let up, for we need a $5,000 instead of a $3,000 building, with two rooms convenient to accommodate all, and then employ two teachers.

MACON MUSIC.

Farmers are finishing seeding now.

DeWitt Martin has been engaged to teach the winter term in the Culbertson district, Tecumseh township.—Mr. Martin taught this school last winter.

Fred Rogers, of Raisin, will tutor the young minds of the Baker district this winter.

Mark Mills went to Detroit last week to finish his commercial course, which he commenced last spring.

The prohibitionists seem to be alive. They held a meeting on the evening of Sept. 24, in Sage and Cary's hall. A very respectable attendance. A. O. Crozier, of Ann Arbor, discussed the issues of the campaign.

Mrs. Edwin Howell, Mrs. Dr. Howell, together with Mrs. Chambers, of Ft. Wayne, Ind., visited relatives in Northville last week.

Mr. Stebbins, of Detroit, will address the people of Macon at Grange Hall on the evening of Oct. 11. The protectionists should come for they will go away more convinced than ever that they are right. The free-traders should come to hear why a protective tariff is necessary to a country like ours.

Capt. E. P. Allen talked to the people of Macon, Thesday evening, Sept. 30. Capt. Allen "takes well" with Macon republicans, and with some who are not republicans too. Prohibitionists will exhibit much wisdom by supporting him.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

We noticed on our streets on Monday last Mr. Newcomb Brown of Jackson.

The business men of Clinton report business very good and increasing. So may it continue to improve.

The people of Clinton have been listening for a decision of what is known here as the water suit between the Woolen Mill company and E. R. Smith. We understand the case was submitted to the court for decision a week ago but no decision reported yet. It is thought by some that this suit will in some way start the mill again. So may it be.

The Episcopal social at Frank Lancaster's last week was a success in every way. A nice time was had with good receipts in cash.

Clinton is considered a good place for socials, there being one at the lecture room of the Baptist church Tuesday afternoon and there was also a social at the residence of Dr. Burchard in the interest of the congregational church. Both were fairly attended with very liberal receipts at both places.

The political cauldron is beginning to boil in Clinton and they claim (all parties) that there are large numbers of converts to each party. Bob Frazer I understand will orate to the Republicans here Saturday evening the 4th inst. where the Democrats can have a chance to be converted if they will only go and hear him.

Our Drain Commissioner Bruce seems to be the right man in the right place and he is pushing the Drain business put into his hand with energy, and as we think his doings will have a tendency to dry up many (places) persons who are continually drinking to much (not water). May they become dry and more productive.

Ed. Semark our enterprising builder has recently purchased of Alonzo Clark a lot on Benton street upon which he has commenced to build himself a comely residence. He has already the cellar dug and he has also the most of the lumber on the ground for the job and with his usual energy he will have his house completed and ready for occupancy ere the snow falls. Who says Clinton is dead?

Our Public school is prospering finely under the management and control of Prof. Laflin, who the boys say, means business. A word in the future in reference to our Sunday schools.

Our Hotel here is doing a good business but some times turns out a bad job unavoidably. May he be more careful in the future with the country boys.

HOLLOWAY HICKUPS.

Our usually quiet village was very much shocked last Sunday morning when it was announced on the street that a dead man was lying in the woods just below the ridge, on a piece of land owned by Horace Holdridge, and notwithstanding the rain was pouring in torrents, everybody made a break for the woods. The facts in the case appeared to be as follows: A man and woman giving the name of Hooper, were tramping through the country from Ohio, going up to Saginaw County where the woman claims that her husband has a son and daughter living. Saturday, just at night, they called at Stephen Palmer's and procured a loaf of bread and some other eatables, and then struck directly through Geo. Riley's fields to the woods to camp for the night. The woman states that they ate their supper as usual and then lay down for the night on the ground. Says she noticed nothing unusual until near morning, probably about three o'clock when she was aroused by hearing him breath in a sort of gurgling manner. She immediately set to work to relieve him with camphor and alcohol which they had with them, but was unsuccessful in her efforts. After daylight she made her way out of the woods and aroused the neighbors, telling them that her husband was dying in the woods and begging them to come immediately to their assistance. Nathan Spencer was notified, who as soon as he arrived, appointed Jerome Green to act as constable. Mr. Green choose a jury from among those present. Dr. Begel was authorized to examine the body, after which the inquest was adjourned to meet at the office of Dr. Begel on Monday at 3 o'clock P. M. The body was then removed to the residence of Mr. Whiting, who very kindly cared for the woman, doing all in their power to make her comfortable as possible under the circumstances. Just before night a coffin was procured, and the remains were interred in the Raisin Cemetery.

At the meeting on Monday, it was decided after taking what evidence could be procured, the deceased came to his death from natural causes. The woman stated that her husband was fifty-five years old, but his appearance would indicate a man of least sixty-five.

She gave her age as eighteen but is probably two to four years older. She has the appearance of a simple inoffensive creature, and it seems a pity that she should have chosen so poor a lot in life. Aunt Jane Kelly with her big heart has offered her a home for the present until some way shall open up for her to gain a livelihood or her friends, if she has any, shall call for her.

Tuesday afternoon the Republicans raised a pole in honor of the Plumed Knight after which Captain Allen spoke very enthusiasticaly to the people on the tariff question, followed by Dr. Howell and others. There was a good attendance which, together with the fine weather and the presence of the Raisin band, brought about a good time for all.

Al. Hoxsie has returned from Dakota looking pretty fair for him. Of course it is understood that Al. never was very good looking.

Vern Hoxsie is now convalescent after a four weeks pull of typhoid fever. That beats Doc. out of another job.

Mrs. Dunham went to Chicago on Tuesday to visit her many friends residing there.

Last Tuesday the little son of Jas. Ash, two and one-half years old, met with a rather serious accident, and the wonder is that he was not killed outright. A wagon containing forty-five bushels of oats and three persons on top of it, passed directly over him, crushing him into the ground. Dr. Begel was called and found the collar bone broken as the result.

TWO NEW WHEAT INSECTS.

I have recently received specimens of an insect—larva of a moth—from Saginaw, Huron and Wexford counties, with the report that it is doing no little damage to the wheat. It is said to "hollow out" the berry by eating the flower. I should like very much to know how general this insect is, how much damage it is doing, when and how it works, and to receive specimens from every place where it has been observed. The caterpillar is light colored, with faint stripes and brown head, and about one half inch long.

I have received from the eastern part of the state some larval insects, hymeopterous, which work above the joints in the wheat straw. In each straw I find from six to twelve of the larvae. They are from one-half inch to two inches above the joint, and the straw where they are found, for a distance varying from one-half inch to more than an inch, is solid instead of hollow. The larvae are imbedded in small oval cells in this solid mass. These cells are little more than one eighth of an inch long. The larva which is yellowish-white, is a little less than one eighth of an inch. It has a few short hairs and 13 joints besides the head. It has very small dark jaws. The pupa is a little longer than the larva. The legs and nine jointed antennae show plainly, color same as larva, antennae darker. The pupae may all turn dark soon. The pupae have just appeared. I have none of the flies yet. I wish to urge the same in regard to this insect as to the other. Let all send information and specimens. By copying this our state papers can help a good cause. These insects are new, and in attacking one of our most important crops may do great harm. The fullest and most speedy investigation is very desirable.

EVENING REST. By J. L. Pratt. Young Folks' Library. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co. Price 25 cts. A simple, quiet story, whose character is adequately expressed by the title. Evening rest is the name given to a little hamlet in the Blue Ridge region of Pennsylvania, remarkable for the beauty of its surroundings and the lovely character of its people. Thither goes a young man from the East to visit an uncle whom he has never seen, and his experiences during the stay make up the contents of the book. One incident of the story is strongly dramatic in character. A family party, one of the members being the young man referred to, visit a coal mine. While passing through one of the narrow passages the guide fires a pistol to show the effects of the echo. The concussion of the air starts a loose part of the roof overhead and a portion falls in. The little company is shut up in the earth with little chance of seeing the light again. They have lights, however, and stumble across some tools, and by dint of many hours' hard labor they are at length able to communicate with their friends outside, who are at length able to rescue them. The author, throughout the story, dwells much upon the sweet and tender influences of home. In Evening Rest he creates an ideal household and community, and strives to show how much they have to do with the formation of character.

UNKNOWN.

Oh, what can be the glory of that land
That lies beyond our ken,
By poet and by prophet vision scanned,
But baffling word and pen—

Since here within these lovely, perfected days
Which grace and beauty gift,
Such clouds melt slowly in the sun's warm rays,
Such shadows clothe each hill?

How can we picture aught beyond more fair—
The fragrant breath of pine,
Incense from flowers that wave in Summer's air,
Lakes burdened with white lilies, half divine!

Can there be other, grander skies unseen?
Shall there be no more sea,
With its wild sweep of waves, its changeful sheen
And strange, weird melody!

Could we but break the silence, and unveil
The world that lies so near,
Would not the present prove a weary tale
We would not pause to hear?

Aye, it is best, but still the asking soul
Would fain send buoyant wings,
To know what death and change unroll,
And whence such glory springs!

The very breezes murmur of some home,
Curtained from mortal view,
And round our pleasant Summer dwelling roam,
Our longings to renew!

METEORS.

Their Origin and Cause—Where to Look for Them—Historical Notices of Meteorites.

Almost any clear night when the moon is absent, a few meteors may be seen shooting about through the sky. They look like stars, and, with good reason, are often called shooting stars. It should be admitted that the real stars are at very great and mostly unknown distances, and in general, never appear to move with respect to each other; while meteors, or shooting stars, are never seen outside of our atmosphere. But they originally exist entirely outside, being small solid bodies of metallic, or stony matter floating through space, in orbits around the sun, like planets. In this original form they are called meteoroids. And when the earth meets or passes near them they are attracted by the earth with great force and enter the atmosphere with amazing velocity, which develops heat so intense as to set them on fire, and they burn with a most brilliant light, thus giving them a star-like appearance. They generally burn up and vanish while they are yet high up in the sky. Their visible paths are often only a few degrees long. Indeed one is occasionally seen without any apparent motion, because it moves right towards us. Some of the larger ones burn longer, with greater light, and leave a reddish train behind them, which is the red-hot ashes left streaming through the air, and gradually disappears on cooling. Others, still larger, with a brilliant light, nearly reach the earth, and are called fire-balls. Some of these bodies—probably of still greater size—fall to the earth and penetrate the soil without being entirely consumed. Such bodies have been seen to fall and taken up while they were still hot. Others have been heard and found before they got cold. Such bodies are called meteorites—meteoric stones, and sometimes aerolites—stones from the air. Some are much smaller than one's hand, others as large as a good-sized rock, weighing several hundred pounds. A very singular meteorite was found many years ago near the village of Tucson, Arizona. It was removed to the Smithsonian Institution, at Washington, in November, 1863. Its form is that of a ring, about four feet in diameter. One side is much thicker and heavier than the other. Its weight is about fourteen hundred pounds. Meteoric stones have thus been deposited in many of the world's museums, and are valuable scientific curiosities.

These minute planetary bodies wandering through space around the sun, are much more numerous in some places than others, occasionally forming a collective ring, in some parts of which great numbers are met with. And this accounts for the extraordinary meteoric showers on record. I suppose nearly everybody has heard of the wonderful meteoric shower which occurred early in the morning of November 13, 1833. It seemed like all the stars of heaven were increased in brightness and falling to the earth. The alarm which it caused was very great. Wonder how many people would be scared by such an exhibition in these latter days! A similar show, though not so great, was witnessed in 1799—just thirty-four years before; and another still less, though very considerable, in exactly thirty-three years afterwards, viz: November 13, 1866. But it was much more prominent in England than in America.

Sometimes a large meteoroid strikes the atmosphere with such violence as to explode with a loud noise, and break in several pieces, which fly along in their separate tracks. A noted example of this kind was seen by many persons in this State at nine o'clock in the evening of December 21, 1876. When meteorites are analyzed and examined with a microscope, they are found to be composed largely of iron, mixed with other substances, all of which are known to exist on the earth, but in different proportions of combinations. So that a meteorite, as a mass, is different from any other body we know of, although of the same materials differently put together. Besides the group of meteoroids which the earth passes, or penetrates, near the middle of November each year, there is another which we pass about the 10th of August, when we may expect that shooting stars will be more numerous than they are in ordinary clear nights.

Observations for a number of years show that the August meteors generally move in a direction from north to south, and by extending their paths northerly they seem to meet in the constellation Perseus, near the northeastern horizon. This is called the radiant point, and the August meteors are called Perseids. The November meteors are called Leonids, because their radiant point is in Leo. A Chinese record indicates the fall of a great meteorite on January 14, 615 B. C., which "broke several chariots and killed ten men." Another chronicle "informs us that in the year 944 A. D., globes of fire traversed the atmosphere and burnt several houses." A shower of stones fell at Rome in 343 B. C. Perhaps no other single meteorite ever caused so great a sensation, or created so much interest in several ways, as one seen to fall about noon in a wheat-field near Ensisheim, Germany, on November 7, 1492. A strange and loud noise was heard between eleven and twelve in the morning over a considerable portion of Southern Germany and Switzerland, followed by a confused roar, and the fall of a great stone from the air. It was taken from a depth of nearly six feet, and weighed two hundred and sixty pounds. This meteorite was a theme of general conversation for a long time. The Emperor Maximilian talked with the nobles about it, and they decided the occurrence to be a wonderful miracle from God. The stone was ordered to be hung up in the church at Ensisheim, not to be molested by anyone. But the Emperor must have two pieces of it, one for himself and one for the Duke of Austria. Many people came to see the wonder, and it remained in the church for three hundred years. In the turmoil of the French Revolution, 1790, it was removed to Colmar, for greater safety, and afterward restored to its resting place. A fragment of this interesting relic has been secured and placed in the British Museum, and one in the Garden of Plants, Paris.

On the 27th of November, 1627, Pierre Gassendi, a noted astronomer, witnessed the fall of an aerolite surrounded by a halo of rainbow colors. It was in the southeast corner of France, and the stone weighed fifty-nine pounds. He, with others, then supposed it to have come from a volcano. In 1795, December 15, afternoon, a man plowing in a field in the County of York, England, heard a loud explosion, followed by a hissing noise. He looked and saw a stone falling, which went several feet in the ground not far from where he stood. Its weight was fifty-six pounds. In Normandy, Northeastern France, seen passing through the air with a about one o'clock in the afternoon of the 26th of April, 1803, a very brilliant fire-ball was rapid motion, and soon a violent explosion was heard, the sound of which was prolonged five or six minutes. Then fell an immense number of mineral fragments, of which about three thousand were picked up, many of them weighing several pounds, but none more than seventeen. A stone weighing nearly seven hundred pounds and about one thousand smaller ones, fell in Hungary in 1866, and on April 20, 1876, a mass of meteoric iron, nearly eight pounds, fell at Rowton, England. The fall of this meteorite was preceded by a noise like thunder, that shook the air for many miles. It occurred near four o'clock in the afternoon, and was quite hot when dug from a depth of eighteen inches an hour afterward. These are only a few of numerous meteoric phenomena which have been observed at different times in many parts of the world.—W. Dawson, in Indianapolis Journal.

Lightning.

At this time of the year one commonly reads of persons struck dead, blind or senseless by lightning; some of the phenomena are very puzzling, especially in cases where persons are but slightly injured.

On June 6, 1881, I was in the open country near the sea between Gosport and Southampton, in a place where there was no shelter. Here I was suddenly overtaken by a violent storm of thunder, lightning and rain. Before I had time to think of escape, the air became darkened by the pouring rain, and to save myself from a drenching I, perhaps foolishly, put up my umbrella; at the same instant I saw a blaze of fire on the right-hand side of my face, the thunder burst the same moment, and a violent wrenching pain seized the fingers of my right hand (which held the umbrella), the pain instantly traveling to my elbow and shoulder, where it ceased. With the exception of a strong pain in the arm like rheumatism for the rest of the day, I felt no further ill effects.

There is a blind beggar sometimes seen about here who carries a label stating that his eyes were destroyed by lightning; there is no iris to either eye; both are quite white. One day lately I asked him how he lost his sight. He said that he was leaving a country public house during a thunder storm, and he received the blow from the lightning at the street door, as he stood on the top of a short flight of stone steps. He could only remember seeing the blaze of the lightning, and being hurled to the ground down the steps into the street. On his senses returning, he was blind. He states that he had a little glimmering sight at the time of recovery, but first one eye and then the other soon became totally blind.

A few years ago several letters appeared in Nature regarding the descent of balls of fire in thunder storms. On July 5, 1881, while watching a storm from my windows at 11:30 p. m., I distinctly saw in the south a ball of fire drop from the clouds to the earth. The descent was rapid, but not comparable with lightning, and with an inclination to the east. The ball appeared large, and about one-half or one-third the apparent size of the moon. A carpenter who was working for me at the time, Mr. George Hebb, on calling upon me a few days after the storm, told me (I had not previously mentioned the matter to him) that he had seen the descent of the same ball of fire from Mildmay park while he was walking toward the south. It is the only example I have seen.—Worthington G. Smith, in Nature.

—A bright little fellow about eight years of age was very anxious to go to walk with his father. "No," said the latter, "you can't go; you're too little." "Oh, no, papa," he said stoutly, "I'm a big boy." "All right," said his father, "come along." On the way home the little fellow became tired and wanted his father to carry him. "I thought you were a big boy," said his father, pretending to sneer. "I was a big boy when I started out," he said, "but I'm a little boy now." He was carried the rest of the way.—Boston Globe.

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral.

No other complaints are so insidious in their attack as those affecting the throat and lungs; none are treated with by the majority of sufferers. The ordinary cough or cold resulting perhaps from a chill or unnecessary exposure, is often but the beginning of a fatal sickness. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has well proven its efficacy in a forty years' fight with throat and lung diseases, and should be used in all cases without delay.

A Terrible Cough Cured.

[illegible] gave me up. I tried AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which relieved my lungs, stopped my night sweats, and afforded me the best of sleep. For the recovery of my strength, I fully attribute it to the use of the PECTORAL, a remedy whose virtues cannot be too highly praised. I am now [illegible] years old, have had healthy and unbroken health since. CHERRY PECTORAL saved my life.

HORACE J. FITZ ROTHER."

Rockingham, Vt., July 15, 1882.

Croup.—A Mother's Tribute.

"While in the country last winter my little boy, three years old, was taken down with croup; it seemed as if he would die from strangulation. One of the family suggested the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, a bottle of which was always kept in the house. This was tried in small and frequent doses, and to our delight in less than half an hour the little patient was breathing easily. The doctor said that the CHERRY PECTORAL had saved his darling's life. Can you wonder at our gratitude?" Sincerely yours,

MRS. EMMA GEISNEY."

159 West 128th St., New York, May 15, 1882.

"I have used AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL in my family for several years, and do not hesitate to pronounce it the most effectual remedy for coughs and colds we have ever tried.

A. J. CRANE."

Lake Crystal, Minn., March 18, 1882.

"I suffered for eight years from Bronchitis, and after trying many remedies with no success, I was cured by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL.

JOSEPH WALDEN."

Holyoke, Mass., April 5, 1882.

"I cannot say enough in praise of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, believing as I do that but for its use I should long since have died from lung trouble.

E. EKANDEN."

Palestine, Texas, April 22, 1882.

No case of an affection of the throat or lungs exists which cannot be greatly relieved by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and it will always cure when the disease is not already beyond the control of medicine.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unprecedented demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most fatal forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA

Works through the blood, regulating, toning and invigorating all the functions of the body.

Ringworm Humor and Salt-Rheum.

RAYNHAM, MASS., Aug. 12, 1878.

C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gentlemen— * * * I have had ringworm humor and salt-rheum so badly that my body was covered with raw sores; so, also, my head and face. I have had any number of doctors in the last seven years, and none of them could cure me. One day my mother was in the city of Taunton, and found one of your cook books, and in reading it I found many people testifying to cures from the use of your Sarsaparilla and Olive Ointment. I felt forced to try it, although I had seen many things advertised that never did me any good. I have now taken two small bottles and one large one of Sarsaparilla, and used three boxes of Ointment. I now call myself cured. Nothing can be seen of the humor but the dim outlines of the sores. I shall take two more bottles, and then the cure will be complete.

I am gratefully yours,
EDGAR F. WHITMAN.

Biliousness, Sick Headache.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gents—Please send me by express two bottles HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA and a few Cook Books for distribution. Your preparation has worked wonders in the case of my wife, who has been troubled with sick headache and biliousness for years. She only took one-half teaspoonful at a dose, and has not been so well for five years as now. She found that within a week after taking it she felt very much better, and is now entirely free from those severe headaches. She has not taken any of any account since last spring, and what little she had is lent to do some others some good, and we must have it in the house.

Yours truly,
HOMER B. NASH.

AN ALASKIAN PRIZE.

A Vessel Flying the German Flag Captured While Shooting Seal in the Behring Sea.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., September 30.—The schooner Adele, flying the German flag, arrived yesterday in charge of Lieutenant Lutz from the Aleutian Islands, where she was captured while taking seals. Lieutenant Lutz and two men were detailed last June from the Corwin to remain on Otter Island, in the Behring Sea, and watch for seal catchers. Several vessels were seen bent on either smuggling or sealing, but it was not until September that Lutz made his capture. That day four vessels were in sight, two of which were shooting seals. The Lieutenant with his two men took a boat and rowed out and boarded the Adele. The Captain admitted his business was seal catching and after a little growling submitted to arrest, although the schooners complement consisted of four officers and eighteen men. The officers were all well armed and half the crew were taken to St. Paul to remain until the arrival of the Corwin. The remainder of the crew, consisting of nine Japanese, worked the schooner down to San Francisco. She had on board 250 seal skins and several otter and fox skins and the prize is valued at $10,000. The German flag is undoubtedly a blind, as her Captain, Gustav Erickson, is a Norwegian, two officers are Americans and one is a Swede. The crew are Germans and Japanese. She was built at Hamburg and served as a pilot boat three years at Shanghai and cleared for her last trip from Yokohama, no international complications are likely to arise.

FATAL RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

Two Trains Collide on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad—Two Persons Killed and Several Seriously Injured.

GRAFTON, W. Va., September 30.—Passenger train No. 4 and freight train No. 89 on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad collided one mile west of Farmington yesterday afternoon, owing to the freight train being on the passenger train's time. Conductor Tom Turley and Fireman Cornelius O'Connell of train 89 were killed. Engineman George Leonard, of the freight train, and Fireman D. W. Boyd, of the passenger train, were seriously injured. Engineman John Smith, of the passenger train, postal clerks S. C. Sapp and J. F. Adams and a lady passenger, named Mrs. Dwild, were slightly injured. Both engines were badly damaged and four freight cars were considerably damaged. Trains are now running as usual.

Tammany Hall Nominates Candidates.

NEW YORK, September 30.—Tammany Hall held its County Convention yesterday afternoon to nominate candidates for Mayor, Comptroller, District Attorney, President of the Board of Alderman, Judges and a Coroner. John Kelly called the meeting to order, and in a somewhat lengthy address said that as chairman of the Committee on Organization it was his duty to call the convention to order, and carry out the wishes of the delegates, and as he understood it, they intended to hold their convention as the regular Democratic organization of the city and county of New York, without regard to other organizations. Hugh J. Grant was then unanimously nominated for Mayor, and P. Henry Dugro, for Comptroller; George H. Foster, for District Attorney; Hugh F. Daly, Richard L. Larrimore and David McAdam, for Judges of the Court of Common Pleas; General John Cochran, for President of the Board of Aldermen, and Dr. M. T. Messemer, for Coroner.

Funeral of Commodore Fillebrown.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., September 30.—The funeral ceremonies over the late Commodore Thomas Scott Fillebrown took place yesterday morning at the Commodore's residence at the navy yard and were conducted by the Rev. Dr. Hall, of Trinity Church. There were a large number of naval officers, prominent citizens and ladies, who had been intimate with the deceased in life, present to pay their last tribute of respect to his memory. After the services a marine battalion took charge of the body and the line of procession, in which there were several companies of sailors, formed. As the procession passed down Main Street to the wharf, eleven minute-guns were discharged. The remains were placed on board the Catalfia to be taken to Washington, the home of the late Commodore.

A Close Contested Scull Race.

BOSTON, September 30.—The five mile with three turns, single scull race for $1,000 a side between John Teemer and Wallace Ross, postponed from Saturday, in which Teemer gave five seconds' start, was rowed yesterday afternoon at the Point-of-Pines, in the presence of 5,000 people. The betting, which on Saturday was two to one on Ross, opened in the afternoon two to one on Teemer and closed at five to seven on the McKeesport sculler. The race was an elegant exhibition. Ross led at every turn, but was beaten within fifty feet of the finish. The bow of Teemer's boat crossed the line about four feet ahead of that of his competitor. Time thirty-five minutes. The water was in splendid condition.

Foundation of the New West Virginia State House Fails.

WHEELING, W. Va., September 30—A special received in this city last night from Charleston, states that the foundation to the new State House had fallen in and the structure had been damaged in a large sum. An effort was made to ascert in the particulars, but as the telegraph office at Charleston closes at nine o'clock it is impossible. The State Board of Public Works was convened last evening, but they refuse all information.

Our South American Trade.

NEW YORK, September 30.—The South American Commission met a large number of gentlemen interested in the trade of South America yesterday, for the purpose of hearing their views as to the best means of enlarging and improving it. The Consul General of Peru, was of opinion that the commercial difficulties between the United States and Peru were largely of freights and credits.

Fatal Boarding House Row.

ONTANAGON, Mich., September 30.—During a row at a Swedish boarding house here Sunday night, Andreas Sundin shot William Berg through the heart. The murderer then fled to the woods and is still at large.

THE BELL TELEPHONE SUIT.

The Arguments of Judge Hill and Senator Edmunds—The Case Closed.

NEW YORK, September 30.—Ex-Judge Hill yesterday continued his argument in the telephone suit. He said seventy-three witnesses had identified exhibits B and E (operative telephones) as being in use prior to Bell's first experiment of June, 1875; more than forty had identified them as being in existence prior to the 4th of July, 1874, the date of Bell's alleged conception of the practicability of meeting audible results by the vibration of an armature in front of an electro-magnet, and twenty had testified that they talked through the machines and heard and understood words and sentences prior to June 21, 1875. In reviewing the whole evidence which had been presented Mr. Hill said that 197 persons had testified to a knowledge of the Drawbaugh speaking telephone prior to February 4, 1876. Of these 126 actually saw the instrument and the majority of them had identified the particular machine, or were present when others were successfully talking through them.

Senator Edmunds made the closing argument. He reviewed the evidence to show that Drawbaugh had brought his invention to a point where conversation could be carried on with his neighbors over an electric wire two years before Bell, according to the latters' own statement, had reached the stage of transmitting indistinct sounds, but not audible words. The Senator drew a vivid picture of the old man, contending with poverty, and with sickness in his family, unable to convince capitalists of the value of his discovery, and compared his case with that of the youthful Bell, unhampered by family ties and enjoying the advantage of influential friends after a careful presentment of the evidence. The Senator closed with an eloquent appeal for justice for his client.

100TH ANNIVERSARY

Of the Establishment of African Masonry in the United States.

PHILADELPHIA, September 30.—Yesterday was a gala day among the colored population of this city. It was the one hundredth anniversary of the introduction of Free Masonry among colored men in the United States. The Centennial celebration will last three days, the three departments into which the Masons are divided, each being entitled to a day to parade in. Yesterday morning the parade of Symbolic Masons took place. Last night a grand complimentary reception was tendered to the Grand Officers of Pennsylvania and visiting bodies by the ladies' Centennial Commission at Horticultural Hall. To-day a parade of the Capitular Masons will take place, and in the evening a grand banquet will be tendered the visiting Grand Officers at Horticultural Hall.

BOSTON, September 30.—Yesterday the colored Free Masons celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of the establishment of African Masonry in Boston, with a parade of resident and visiting lodges in the morning and with literary exercises in Tremont Temple in the afternoon. They gave a grand concert and banquet at Odd Fellows' Hall last night.

Inhuman Treatment of a Negro.

NEW ORLEANS, September 30.—Trustworthy information has been received from West Carroll parish that a negro named Bob Henderson was arrested last week charged with horse stealing. He was overtaken by a party of whites and hanged by the wayside, but before life was extinct was cut down and was then cut with a sharp instrument from his heels to the back of his head, on both sides. The Sheriff corroborates the statement as to the cutting, or attempted skinning, as some people term it, he having examined the negro. Warrants have been issued for the arrest of the persons who are said to be the parties to this crime. The horse which was alleged to have been stolen had never been disturbed, having been found in its owner's pasture. The Sheriff has been very diligent in bringing the perpetrators to justice. The victim is now at Floyd and the scars on his person corroborate the statement.

A Slight Clash Among Revenue Officers.

KINGSTON, Ont., September 30.—A few days ago the revenue cutter Bibb ran into Charlotte harbor and its officers boarded the schooner Annie Falconer and asked to see the captain, way bills and manifests. The captain did not then have the manifest, and as a consequence the case was reported to Washington. The vessel is liable to a fine of $500. The law on this point is about twenty years old, and has not been enforced for nearly as many years. The officers of the revenue cutter said that as the Canadians are becoming particularly strict the seizure of the Island Belle at Gananoque being cited they intended to enforce the law to the very letter. The mariners here deplore the unfortunate action of the Collector at Gananoque and desire a modification of matters as soon as possible. They said no Government could have acted more leniently than that of the United States in recent years.

The Cattle Plague in Kentucky.

CINNINNATI, September 30.—The cattle breeders of Kentucky having sent a committee to ask Governor Knott to call an extra session of the Legislature to take action looking to the stamping out of the cattle disease, now apparent in the herd of Frisbie & Lake, Saturday received the committee's report to the effect that the Governor declined to call the Legislature, that Frisbie & Lake had agreed to destroy their herd upon receiving payment, and they had been appraised at $28,000. The breeders voted to raise $15,000 to offer for the destruction of the herd, and if received to take such legal measures as could be employed to stamp out the disease.

Feared That She Drowned Herself.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., September 30.—Nothing has yet been learned of the whereabouts of Miss Sarah Carpenter, who disappeared so mysteriously from her home last Wednesday, although the most diligent search has been made for her in all quarters. It is feared now that while laboring under a fit of insanity, she may have thrown herself in the river. Her mother is prostrated by the shock.

A Riot in Boats.

BRISTOL, Pa., September 30.—A riot occurred Sunday night between the occupants of two small boats from Burlington, which nearly resulted in the death of several of the participants. The party in one boat had stolen it from the other. One man named Fitzpatrick was terribly beaten. All were thrown in the river but rescued.

Roman Remains in London.

Modern London is built on the debris of the London of the times of Julius Cæsar and Agricola, and it is by no means infrequently that 1800-year old relics of the Roman town are found many feet below the surface of the existing streets. There was a rich find recently in the vicinity of Warwick Square at the depth of nineteen feet. The most interesting relic that came to light was hitherto unknown coin of the the year 50, which lay alongside of about a dozen urns containing the products of cremation. Just think of the pangs which dying would have inflicted on those ancients if they had known that their ashes would have been seen and handled by an unknown race eighteen centuries and a half, nearly, after their decease! The most aristocratic urn was of glass and fifteen inches high. Well-executed leaden pots inclosed several of these depositories, and roofing tiles the rest. The use of lead as well as of tin, by the way, has great antiquity in Britain. Herodotus speaks of the production of tin there. Emblems of more or less significance touching the future state appeared on some of the receptacles. Along with the coin of the year 50 were others of dates between 40 and 300. But the Romans left something besides these useless things to be remembered by. They introduced, into Great Britain its chestnut, walnut, peach, pear and cherry trees.

Nervous debility, indicated by loss of memory, universal lassitude, constant fatigue, vivid dreaming, unnatural excitements, fits of dizziness, etc., is quickly cured by using Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. This remedy purifies the blood, strengthens the weak portions of the body, quiets the nerves, produces dreamless slumber, and is the only remedy that permanently cures the many distressful ailments resulting from nervous debility.

After the Sunday Dinner.

After the Sunday dinner, what? Well it all depends. A person whose brain is wearied with intellectual work during the week, or whose nervous system is exposed to the strain of business or professional life, ought to sleep within an hour or so after his Sunday dinner, if he can. It is surprising how much like a seven-day clock the brain will work if the habit of Sunday nap be once formed. Nature will take advantage of it as regularly and gratefully as she does of the nightly sleep, and do her best to make up lost time. People on the other hand, whose week of toil is chiefly physical, may well give their minds activity while their bodies are resting. Two sermons and three or four hours of solid reading are a real rest to some on Sunday, while to others such a course amounts to a positive Sabbath-breaking. Sunday is a day of rest, not a day of work, religious or otherwise. It is a day of repose, not for exhaustion. But what the dogmatists on one side and the illiberal liberals on the other are apt to overlook is the fact that all men do not rest alike any more than they labor alike, and what may help one may kill another.

In hundreds of instances where Hot Springs and other treatment failed to cure scrofula and syphilitic disorders, the sufferer has sought and found cure in Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. It enriches the blood, strengthens the urinary and digestive organs, and quickly removes all indications of ill health and blood disease, from a pimple to a running sore, from a headache to a rheumatic pain. Its superiority over all other blood purifiers and strengthening medicines is admitted by all who test its curative effect and influence.

The blessings of life are many. Live long and be happy. Don't neglect a cough or cold. Keep yourself well clothed in changeable weather, and always keep a bottle of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry in the household. A single spoonful will cure an ordinary cough or cold. Its continued use will cure consumption.

Rev. H. H. Van Auken (congregationalist), of Union City, has at the request of his people withdrawn his resignation.

THE MODEST FATHER.—"Father," began a young Detroiter the other evening, "were you in the war?"

"Yes, my son."

"Was it awful?"

"Yes."

"Lots of dead and wounded men?"

"Yes."

"Did you kill many?"

"Well, I shouldn't like to answer that question."

"Are you very modest, pa?"

"I hope I am too modest to brag."

"That was what Mr. Smith meant, then, when he was telling the men down at the drug store that you hadn't any war record to brag of."

"He did, eh? Smith is a liar!"

"That's what I thought. He told the men that you run so fast he couldn't catch you on horseback, and any boy knows that a horse can catch a man with a stiff knee."

Observe the Birthdays.

Let the birthday of each member of the family be always remembered when it comes. Let there be something a little out of the ordinary routine in the arrangement of the table; cookies fashioned as Johnny likes them best; one of Frank's favorite plum puddings, or Julia's special liking, a loaf of ginger cakes or a wonderful lemon pie, such as only mamma can make.

Then there must be presents. Sometimes people may think they cannot be afforded, but reflect. The little one needs shoes, dresses, aprons and many other things. Purchase one or more for the birthday. It will seem just as much present to the recipients as though they were not obliged to have it.

Next come school-books and story-books, a set of furs or a pair of skates, (should the birthday occur in the winter,) a pretty little dinner-basket, or, if the parents can afford it, a little gold band for one of the white fingers, a necklace, a watch with a shining chain, or the pony that has been wished for so long.

Encourage the little ones in giving to each other, and also remember father and mother's birthday; believe me, it will be bread cast on the waters; the days will only be a few ere some returns, and there will be a never-failing supply of pleasure as long as you and your children live.

The Fountain of Youth.

Dyspepsia is the prevailing malady of civilized life. A weak dyspeptic stomach acts very slowly or not at all on many kinds of food; gasses are extricated, acids are formed and become a source of pain and disease until discharged. To be dyspeptic is to be miserable, hopeless, depressed, confused in mind, forgetful, irresolute, drowsy, weak, languid and useless. It destroys the Teeth, the Complexion, Strength, Peace of Mind and Bodily-ease. It produces Headache, Pain in Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of Heart, Inflammation of Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms. Dyspepsia invariably yields to the vegetable remedies in GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS, the great purifier of the blood and restorer of health. In these complaints it has no equal, and one bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement. We warrant Golden Seal Bitters. Take no others. Sold by Baker & Hall, and C. A. Wright & Co.

A New York man recently dreamed that he was a Texas desperado in a town threatened by Indians, and when he woke up he found that he had crawled under the bed.

ESTATE OF RUFUS R. HALL.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee, s.s

At a session of the Probate Court for the County of Lenawee, holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, on Friday, the 12th day of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four.

Present, Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Rufus R. Hall, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Mary J. Hall, widow of said deceased, praying for the probate of an instrument now on file in this court, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, and the administration of said estate may be granted to petitioner and Francis Kent, executor named in said testament, or to some other suitable person.

Thereupon it is ordered, That Monday, the 13th day of October next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate office, in the City of Adrian, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of said Petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said Petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County of Lenawee, for three successive weeks, previous to said day of hearing.

ESTATE OF JOHN F. SCHREDER.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee, s.s

At a session of the Probate Court for the county of Lenawee, holden at the Probate Office in the city of Adrian, on Wednesday the 17th day of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four.

Present, Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of John F. Schreder, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Israel H. Schreder and William H. Acker, executors of the last will and testament of said deceased, alleging that they have paid the debts of said deceased, the expenses of administration of said estate and the specific legacies bequeathed in and by said will, and praying for the allowance of their final account, for an assignment of the residue of said estate to the persons entitled thereto and for their discharge.

Thereupon it is ordered, That Monday, the 13th day of October next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, and show cause if any there be, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County of Lenawee, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT TECUMSEH, MICHIGAN, AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TECUMSEH, MICH., OCT 2, 1884.

The ladies are considerably exercised in their efforts to ascertain how Mrs. St. John manages to make orthodox mince pie.

Gen. Scott stumped the country in his own behalf and was defeated. Stephen A. Douglas did the same. Horace Greeley the same. James G. Blaine, opens his campaign in a similar manner. Our readers can draw their own conclusion.

Mr. W. G. Smith, of Palmyra, candidate for coroner on the democratic ticket, was formerly a next door neighbor to Senator Lapham, of New York. It is just wonderful how those old Farmington boys will climb up to responsible positions.—Morenci Observer.

Roscoe Conkling, of New York, has finally settled down and announced his intention to vote for St. John. His hostility to Blaine is well known. When asked if he was going to take the stump for Blaine, he replied in his usual sarcastic manner—"I am not engaged in criminal practice."

The Democratic National committee is a very charitable body. It distributes the Mulligan letters gratis along Mr. Blaine's route in Ohio. Thousands of Republicans will thus be given an opportunity to read the interesting Fisher letters who would be unable to get them from any other source.

A ton of anthracite coal costs less in Liverpool than in Philadelphia, within one hundred miles of the mines. Do the mine owners sell coal in Liverpool at a loss? Not much. But the miners are paid 70 cents a ton for digging it out of the earth, while the mine owners grow rich by fleecing home consumers.

Horace Holdridge is the Democratic nominee for Representative in this district. It is needless to say that he is an excellent candidate and will make a strong run. It will be a nip-and-tuck race in this district. Holdridge, Dr. Howell and Geo. Humpersey are all good men; they are all temperance men; they are all well fitted for the position; they all have lots of friends who will work for them. The Republican candidate will not have a walk over this time.

Monday was a big day for Toledo. The Democrats had arranged for a mass meeting to hear P. A. Collins, the eloquent Irish orator of Boston. Blaine was to have been in Toledo on Saturday but the change of program brought him into Toledo on Monday, and hence both meetings were held on the same day. Both parties had monster torch-light processions in the evening and it was difficult to tell which was the largest. Toledo never saw such a crowd before. A large number of Tecumseh people went down to Toledo on the M. & O. road to witness the affair.

"I can't afford to sell my wheat for seventy-five cents," says farmer Jones. "I can raise wheat at a dollar a bushel and have a margin but no man can sell wheat at seventy-five cents and save himself. I shall hold my wheat." This is undoubtedly true. But can you afford to hold your wheat, let your store debts go unpaid, and thus add to the stagnation of business, lose ten per cent of your crop by rats and shrinkage, and run the risk of being compelled to accept seventy-five or eighty cents six months hence? This is the cold practical question which addresses itself to most farmers in Lenawee county at the present time.

Gen. Butler will enter the state from Indiana and make his first speech at Jackson next Saturday evening, Oct. 4. On Monday morning he will speak in Marshall and in the afternoon at Kalamazoo. In the evening he will speak at Lansing. Tuesday morning he will speak and breakfast at Ionia, dine and speak at Petoskey, and speak and sup at Cheboygan. Wednesday the general will speak in Bay City, East Saginaw and Flint, and close the tour in the evening at Port Huron. At every stopping place along the route the platform will be used in making short speeches. This trip of 700 miles is to consume three days and include 10 speeches and 50 or more short talks.

TEMPERANCE DEPARTMENT.

EDITED BY A COMMITTEE OF THE UNION PROHIBITION PARTY.

MOTTO—No License for the Liquor Traffic in any form or for any price.

UNION PROHIBITION TICKET.

For President—John P. St. John, of Kansas.
For Vice President—William Daniel, of Maryland.

TO THE HON. CHARLES MOSHER.

Congressional nominee on the Union Prohibition ticket, Tecumseh, Lenawee County, Michigan.

We the undersigned Prohibitionists of this district, expecting and intending to vote our convictions upon the question of prohibition at the coming election, recognizing that the Prohibition party of the State of Michigan is a vital factor in the politics of the state, demanding such recognition as one of the fixed facts in the history of the common wealth; that the right and privilege of said party to nominate a congressman from that party is unquestioned, but feeling that in the prior nomination of Capt. Ed. Allen by the Republican congressional convention, we have a man, well known to yourself, who represents us in all the material interests of the prohibition cause, and that his election is possible in the event of your withdrawal from the nomination; that in the event of your remaining in nomination, and running against him, a three-fold injury will attach, to wit: Injury to the cause you represent, injury to Capt. Allen and to yourself—that we deprecate the almost certain political slaughter of two such "good men and true," when we need the combined influence of both at present and in the near future:

We, therefore, respectfully submit that, in our opinion, you can best serve the cause of your party by withdrawal of your name from said nomination, and your putting in good work in the canvass for Capt. Allen, thus assisting the one hundred and sixty thousand intelligent people of this Second district to an honest, upright, and temperance congressman for the next two years.

Hudson, Mich., Sept. 3, 1884.

Mr. Mosher's Reply.

To H. Alverson, G. F. Cone, Chas. D. Allen, and several other citizens of Hudson, Lenawee Co., Michigan:

GENTLEMEN—Your kind communication dated Sept. 3, came to hand this day, and contents noted. I notice with deep interest the reasons set forth why I should withdraw my name from the canvass of the Second congressional district of the state.

Now, gentlemen, I wish to say to you that I was not an aspirant for congressional honors—my name being used against my best wishes in the Adrian Union convention. I was in hopes that the Union party would have left me free at this time, but it seems that other counsels prevailed, and I was made their nominee.

Believing, as I do, that these are momentous times, and that the present time is a critical period in the history of our nation, upon this great question of the suppression of the liquor traffic, and believing that the issue is now squarely before us, and that the time has come when men must take sides; I hasten to give you my position.

I did not leave the Republican party because I desired office, for I had tendered me all that a man in my standing could desire. The Republican party has done me high honors, and I thank them for it. But as a christian man, and a citizen of this commonwealth, I feel compelled to stand up for right rather than party, and come to the rescue of our common humanity.

You, gentlemen, request me to withdraw my name in favor of Hon. E. P. Allen. Now, I wish to say that there is not a man in the Republican party in the Second district for whom I would sooner comply with your request than Hon. E. P. Allen, who I have known only to admire and respect; a man of fine ability and strict integrity. All of this I am more than happy to concede. Yet he belongs to a party I left on account of its adhesion to the liquor power. I have the opportunity of knowing this to be a fact, and that good men are swayed, and few men can stand up against the pressure of party leaders, with the promise of position in the near future tendered, and, knowing the record of the Republican party on the temperance question, in striking from our statute books a prohibitory law by the demand of a very small minority of the people, and enacting the present tax law, legalizing a wrong; and then disregarding the petition of 150,000 people of the state, demanding the passage of a prohibitory law, but catering to the remonstrances of a few thousand liquor men. Then, at the session of the legislature, under the petitions of 100,000 voters of the state, and with scarcely a remonstrance, it was defeated by a small majority in the senate and house. And then, at the last session, after the Republicans had a plank in their platform demanding the submission of the question, and with thousands of petitions flooding the legislature for the submission, nearly one fifth of the senate, and 18 out of 60 Republicans in the house, voted against or were absent when the question came up. If the senate had cast a full Republican vote for the measure, it would have passed that body by two majority. If all the Republicans in the house had voted for the measure, it would have been submitted by seven majority.

Now, I ask in all candor, what is our prospect for removing this terrible evil? Some of the leaders of this party have said to us, that for the perpetuation of this party we must cater to the German vote, or the Democrats would go into power, and then all help for temperance would vanish from the state. They also said that the church vote would stand by the party; and with these two important factors we can hold the state.

Now, gentlemen, will you take the pains to look over the past record of the party, and conclude whether to cast your votes to perpetuate them in power. In view of these facts standing out before me, and seeing no hope of relief in our once beloved party, I resolved to go into a movement, if possible, to unite the entire temperance vote of the state, as the Republican party united the entire anti-slavery vote. And upon this principle the Union party has been founded, with a bright prospect of success in the near future. We have ingrafted as our foundation principle, the prohibition of the liquor traffic.

Now, gentlemen, I do not question your honesty in the request set forth in your petition. Let me propound a few questions: Would you have thought the Republican party wise in its first nominations, as non-extentionists of slavery, to have fused with the Old Whig party, who were in favor of the extension? Does it not appear that it would have been wise with the vital question of non-extension of slavery as the foundation principle? Would it have helped their cause, even if their nominee for congress had been a non-extensionist? Would it have been held by the Republican party to help carry out their principles, or would he have been controlled by his own party?

Now, gentlemen, you say you are members of the Union party, whose foundation principle is the prohibition of the liquor traffic, a party scarcely eight months old, which, it is claimed, has no prospects of success, but a party that is giving a little trouble and considerable anxiety to the liquor traffic in this state, and a party that is pure, for it must be conceded that most political parties are pure in their infancy. Now, can we, in the infant stages of the party, saving nothing of men, and keeping an eye single to principle, for it is principle we are after, and not men, vote to sustain the principles of a party that are diametrically opposed to us? You say in "the event of my remaining in nomination and running against him, a three-fold injury will attach, to-wit: Injury to the cause you represent, injury to Capt. Allen and to yourself."

Does the Republican party represent our interests any more than the Whig party represented the interests of the Republican party? Is not their example worthy of imitation in this respect? They ran a clean ticket; they fused with no party, from the fact that their foundation principle was too sacred to hazzard the attempt, hence the right prevailed. I suppose that many good men were then slaughtered. Now is it not necessary, when a great sin prevails, that there should be a great sacrifice made? We are told in the good Book that "without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins." I see no reason why I ought not to be willing to bear my share of suffering in a good cause.

I believe that we have a majority of temperance men in this state, and this is virtually conceded by the Republican party else they would have submitted the question.

We have a party with its principle founded on the prohibition of the liquor traffic. Now, if we believe that we have a majority of temperance men in the state, what excuse have they to vote with the old parties? Temperance men can now vote as they talk and pray. Why should we stand divided at nomination time, when by uniting, with our influence and our ballots, we have the opportunity of overthrowing this terrible evil.

In view of the facts, I have concluded to accept the nomination as a matter of duty, rather than choice, and am compelled, through a sense of duty to the cause of temperance in the Second congressional district, to decline your proposition.

With the kindest regards to you, gentlemen, I remain, yours truly.

CHAS. MOSHER.

Mosherville, Sept. 18.

WHAT COULD HE DO?

Even suppose, St. John could be elected, what good would it do; he could not prohibit the liquor traffic? He could fill the high position of President with credit to the Nation, though, which is more than any of the other candidates could do. He could institute Civil Service Reform in a manner which would scarcely be possible to any man who owed his place to scheming politicians. He could give the country a pure administration, set the example of a pious Christian life before the Nation and make the White House a center of Christian influence. If this were all that could be achieved by his election, it would be well worth the best efforts of all the good men in the country to bring it about. But it is not all. St. John would, of course, banish liquor from the White House, and from all State dinners. This would have necessarily a powerful influence on public opinion, not only here, but all over the world, as expressing the deliberate conviction of the most advanced nation on earth, that intoxicants are a curse and not a blessing. St. John's election would not in itself put a stop to the liquor traffic, but any man who doubts that such a triumph must be the death-knell of that traffic does not understand the situation. It would be the triumph of a party pledged to the banishment of the whole business, and that would have a great effect on all future elections. All those who hold aloof now because it "would do no good to vote the Prohibition ticket," would swing around in a body, and with their help in National and State elections, it would not be long before the final triumph. People dearly love to be on the winning side, forgetting that the majority is always on the wrong side at the beginning of any reform movement. The important matter to Prohibitionists is not, however, the immediate result of the present election, but their own deliverance from the bondage to party, and establishment on the solid rock of principle.—N. Y. Witness.

The Sham and the Real.

Every good thing has its hosts of imitators; every genuine article its counterfeits. Bad manners and wicked habits have theirs also, but he who shams the bad never boasts of it, while they who ape the virtues of the good or simulate the genuine never hesitate to place the counterfeit before the public in their most alluring tones. When these people imitate they always choose a pronounced type or popular subject to copy from, and when they claim to be as good as "So and So," or sell an article equal to "So-and-So" the public may depend upon it that Mr. "So-and-So" and his article are always the best of the kind. Thus the sham is always proving the genuine merit of the thing it copies.

A firm of enterprising gentlemen produce and popularize an article of household use, such as the Royal Baking powder, whose convenience, usefulness, and real merit make for itself an immense and universal sale. A hundred imitators arise on every hand and as they hold out their sham articles to the public, yelp in chorus, "Buy this; it's just as good as Royal, and much cheaper." The Royal Baking powder is the standard the world over, and its imitators in their cry that theirs is "as good as Royal" are all the time emphasizing this fact. In their laborious attempts to show by analysis, and, otherwise, that the "Snowball" brand has as much raising power "as the Royal"; or that the "Resurrection" powder is as wholesome "as the Royal"; or that the "Earthquake" brand is "pure as the Royal," as well as by their contortive twistings of chemical certificates and labored efforts to obtain recognition from the Government chemists and prominent scientists who have certified the superiority of Royal over all others, they all admit the "Royal" to be the acme of perfection, which it is their highest ambition to imitate. But the difference between the real and these imitations, which copy only its general appearance, is as wide as that between the paste and the true diamond. The shams pay homage to the "Royal."

The great challenge game of base ball played at each performance of Hi. Henry's premium minstrels is a genuine hit in every sense of the word. The contestants appear in regulation base ball suits and do the slang in genuine professional base ball manner.

Adrian Record: The Turner—Crandall case came up to-day before Justice Hulett, when it was expected that one of the most sparkling absurdities of the campaign would be "put on the boards." The entertainment failed to come off, notwithstanding the formidable array of legal talent engaged on either side. The whole affair was peacefully settled and taken out of court, by the payment of Crandall to Turner of a sum which the latter had consented to accept in satisfaction of his services in procuring Mr. Crandall's nomination as county clerk. It gives us no small pleasure to behold politicians settling their differences in this manner. Their little hands were never made to scratch out each others eyes.

The Library Association of Tecumseh holds its first annual meeting at the Library Rooms next Monday evening. It is now a little more than a year since this library was opened to the public and during that time one hundred and seventy-five persons have drawn books therefrom. The whole number of books drawn is three thousand and seventy-one or an average of fifty-nine each week. The amount of money given into the hands of the board by the stockholders was about $650. The number of books purchased and put into the library was 645. Many of the books are read very much and many of them are read very little. But the books were selected with as much care as possible, and with the view of meeting the requirements of those by whom they would be read. There will be presented at the meeting some recommendations by the board and it is desirable that there may be a full attendance of the stockholders and others interested in the matter so that the directors will have their co-operation and support in any new measure that may be adopted. This is the only institution of the kind in the village and should have the hearty sympathy and assistance of all who desire to advance the best interests of our citizens.

If this custom should become popular here, the effects would be terrible. There would not be a head of hair in town and the faces would be scraped "six weeks under the skin."

Rev. Geo. W. Hudson has announced that he will speak next Sunday evening on "The Wonders of Astronomy." It is a big subject, but as he does not make a practice of doing things by the halves, our readers may expect a rare treat if they will go and hear him. Services begin at 7:30 P. M., next Sunday, Oct. 5th.

Next Tuesday Oct. 7th will be known as St. John's day for Lenawee Co. The Ex. Governer will address a mass meeting to be held at Adrian on the old county fair grounds at one o'clock P. M. This will be the only opportunity for our people to hear the great prohibition apostle and, at present, candidate for president.

Hi. Henry is undoubtedly the richest minstrel manager in the world. He owns a score of houses in his resident town and runs his own steam printing house. He has been twenty years a showman and has saved his earnings, besides being successful in other business pursuits. He is plentifully able to retire, but will not do so till he has accomplished his heart's desire—to produce the grandest, costliest, most gorgeous minstrel spectacle the world has ever seen and place it on record as an epoch in minstrel fame.

The unusually low price of wheat is causing a decline in receipts from the west, and many are predicting that farmers will refuse to sell at the present prices. The withholding of one hundred millions of bushels of wheat from market for a year by the farmers of this country, out of the 500,000,000 raised, would result in their receiving more for the other 400,000,000 bushels than they will get for the entire 500,000,000 bushels at present prices. After their pressing obligations are met, we think farmers will not care to throw away the results of their labor.

The days and the nights balance each other now.

Albert Hayden left Milan last week for a trip to Nebraska.

Lucius Lilley spent three or four days last week at Cleveland, Ohio, with his son, Raynor.

As the weather becomes cooler politics grow warmer. Nature has its compensations you see.

Mrs. Yet Erskine, of Battle Creek has been visiting friends in this vicinity for the past few days.

Lew Bates has sold his farm in Raisin and purchased a house in the village, and once more becomes a Tecumsehite.

A Kalkaska editor sees good times in the near future. His income last week rose to the sum total of $1 in cash and a peck of string beans.

A. O. Crozier of Ann Arbor gave the HERALD a call last Friday. Mr. Crozier is doing some effective work on the stump for the Union party.

Saline Observer: It is said hickory-nuts will be very scarce this year, and for years to come because hickory trees have all been utilized for Democratic flag poles.

Rev. G. W. Hudson, of Tecumseh, will lecture on the prohibition of the liquor traffic in the lecture room of the M. E. church, Ridgeway on Monday evening Oct. 6th.

Sugar is cheaper than it has ever been in the memory of the present middle aged generation, and it is supposed that prices have not yet touched bottom The chief cause of the present cheapness is the enormous production of beet root sugar in Europe.

Oscar P. Bills returned last Saturday from his sojourn at Petoskey. As the hay fever season is about over he can safely return to this latitude. His month's visit on Lake Michigan was not only enjoyable but invigorating, and he comes home prepared to resume business with a vim.

Prof. E. G. Walker candidate for Judge of Probate and George Humphrey candidate for the legislature in the first district will address the Union club of Macon at Grange Hall on Friday evening this week. The same gentlemen will address a meeting at Britton on Friday evening next week Oct. 10th.

Rev. R. Wooden of Cambridge has in his possession a copy of the first daily paper ever published in Rochester, N. Y. It is the Rochester Daily Advertiser and was issued Oct. 25th, 1826. It is a five column folio, printed on paper which would now be classed as medium quality of manilla wrapping paper. It is a decided curiosity.

There was a big crowd at the skating rink last Saturday evening to witness the three mile race, in fact about all the rink could accommodate. The race was called promptly on time and was won by Kramer, in twenty and one half minutes. Nineteen times around the hall was reconed a mile, which, however, makes a very long mile.

The house wife should now see to it that the head of the family puts the cellar in apple pie order, and puts into it a bountiful supply of cabbages, pumpkins, potatoes, squashes, beets, turnips and other vegetables that enter so largely and kindly in plentiful and economical living. The man who fails to provide vegetables for his own household is worse than an infidel.

Chancey Cooper, of Cambridge, threshed his oats last Monday. The yield from eleven acres was 660 bushels, machine measure. About a dozen baskets were weighed and they weighed 40 pounds and upwards to each. Mr. Cooper has seeded the same field to wheat this fall. If any farmer hereabouts can show a better yield of oats, let him rise and give his figures.

A young miss was reprimanded by her mother for turning down the gas when her dear Gwage called to see her the evening previous, made reply: "You know pa scolds about the gas bills, mamma, and then you said the other day that 'love is blind,' and Gwage said he believed so, too, so of course we didn't need the light, you see, mamma!" But mamma couldn't see it in that light.

Never before in the history of our State has there been shown so much interest in the breeding of horses as at present. This interest is not confined to any one class, but includes heavy draft, farm horses, roadsters, carriage and trotting stock and to some extent, thoroughbreds. At the State Fair just closed these classes were all well represented, the entries in all classes numbering 520.

Lillian Day, the daughter of a small farmer, named William H. Angell, living a mile west and a quarter of a mile north of Ogden Center, was found dead on Monday morning, in an old straw stack on the farm. She was lying on her face with her arms drawn back as though in a spasm. She had vomited, and the odor of tansey, the drug that caused death, was plainly discernible. The girl was better known as Nellie Day, she was seventeen years old, was married about a year ago, but after living with her at home about six weeks, her husband left her, and she has remained at home ever since.

Thanks to Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Smith for favors received.

Cranberries are in the market and turkeys will soon follow.

Geo. W. Stacy, of East Buffalo N. Y. is spending this week on the old Newberg farm.

Harry Dunn leaves Tecumseh next Tuesday for Sorrento, Florida, where he expects to spend the winter.

The East India Entertainment at the Opera House on the evenings of Oct. 11th and 12th is said to be of the very best.

Last Saturday Mrs. Wm. H. Arner, of Ridgeway, took the train for Jackson, where she will visit friends for a few days.

Minor Davidson exhibited a herd of ten head of Durhams at the county fair and carried off ten premiums, six first and four second.

Mrs. A. M. Henry, of Lansing, is spending a few weeks among her old Tecumseh friends. She is stopping at her father's, Joseph Tilden's.

On our eighth page to-day will be found a striking and instructive illustration of the comparative worth of the various kinds of baking powders now in the market.

Mr. Leroy Dibble, of Alba, Mich., has been at home about a week visiting his old Franklin friends. He returned yesterday. He is located in business at Alba and is doing well.

We are informed that the letter in last week's HERALD purporting to have been written by Mr. Crandall to Ben Turner does him injustice as many persons suppose it to be actually his letter. We would state in justice to Mr. Crandall that our correspondent got it up as a burlesque letter and we construed it in that way and published the same supposing that every one would take it as a burlesque letter.

Adrian Record: Scove Stacy, of the Tecumseh Herald, has been "swinging" around the country behind the "old grey" and writes about "taking tea" at one place where the farmer was "well fixed." Scove knows better than to take tea at a lean establishment. He adds that his host has "a model family," and incidentally remarks that "the daughters are now at home." "Well fixed," "model family," "daughters at home." Might we infer— O, no—can't be possible.

Hi. Henry's Premium Minstrels will appear at the Opera House, Tecumseh Oct. 8th, in a program of choicest excellence, embracing an entirely new collection of sensational features. This organization is a solid and praiseworthy affair and has a reputation second to none. Among its many features are its costly and elaborate first part circle, dressed in velvet, plush, silk, satin and diamonds, with an orchestra of soloists in gorgeous uniforms, followed by an interlude of brilliant specialties. The entertainment terminating with an hour of genuine Opera, written especially for them, entitled "The Legend of Grey Beard's Rock." Mounted in the most lavish style, with elegant costumes, startling effects, imposing choruses, sparkling melodies, and a gorgeous denouement of glittering splendor, under prismatic colored fires. Nothing like this on so grand and costly a scale has ever been attempted in minstrelsy, and it will be an event long to be remembered. Remember only one visit will be made this season, and tickets for the occasion can be purchased at Adamson's, three days in advance.

ORANGE BLOSSOMS.

A very pleasant party assembled at Mrs. M. C. Bryan's last Thursday evening to witness the marriage of her daughter Franc to Mr. J. B. Kennedy. The ceremony was pronounced by Rev. C. E. Conley in his usual happy manner, which was followed by the usual festivities on such occasions. Evergreen and floral ornaments were displayed in profusion, and the elegant array of bridal gifts testified to the esteem in which the bride and groom are held by those who know them best. Mr. Kennedy has a cage already for his bird, owning a beautiful farm in Raisin, and the bride has long been a favorite among the young people of Tecumseh. The parties began housekeeping in their own home on the day following the marriage. May their life's journey be strewn with flowers, and be as happy in the reality, as the present horoscope appears.

On the evening the of 30th, at the residence of Mr. E. Tindall, Mr. Adelbert E. Smith, of McGregor, Iowa, was united in marriage to Mrs. Endora C. Powers of this village. We have not the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with Mr. Smith. From an acquaintance with his bride extending back for many years since we attended school together in "the old school house," we can heartily congratulate the groom upon his good judgement in matrimonial selection. Mrs. Powers has passed through the shadow as well as the sunshine of life in former years, and her many old friends will extend their greetings and sincere wishes for her future prosperity and happiness. We hope the parties will conclude to make Tecumseh their permanent home.

Beautiful fall weather.

The fall advertising season is opening well.

Kies Bros. have a new advertising card this week.

W. & S. W. Anderson & Co. have a new ad. this week.

Dr. W. A. Snyder, of Erie, Pa., is visiting his brother in Tecumseh.

Rev. W. P. Wasell, of Clinton, gave the HERALD a call this morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Wakefield, of Monroe, were in town Tuesday last.

See what V. B. Snyder & son of Toledo have to say about curtains and carpets in to-days HERALD.

Our readers can rely on seeing a first class entertainment at the Opera House next Wednesday evening.

Be sure and attend the East India entertainment at the Opera House on the evenings of Oct. 11th and 12th.

President Stephens, of Adrian College, will preach in the Presbyterian church, in this place, next Sabbath morning and evening.

Geo. L. Graves Esq., of Milwaukee, arrived in town Tuesday to attend the wedding of his sister, Mrs. Powers. He will return home on Saturday. During his stay here he has been kept more than busy accepting the hospitality of his friends.

Adrian Record: The Tecumseh HERALD has a temperance department on its 4th page. It is edited by a committee of the union party. Of course Mr. Stacy will not be bound by the sentiments of the committee, but for a full description of the evils of intemperance he can say "See our inside"—inside page, of course.

Church Congress Episcopal Church.

The ninth annual congress of the Episcopal church in the United States will be held in Detroit Oct. 7-10th.—A number of the most eminent divines in the country will be present and those who feel interested in the topics to be discussed should make it a point to be present. The exercises will be held at Whitney's opera house. Tuesday morning Bishop Potter of New York city will deliver the inaugural address.

The topic for Tuesday evening at 7:30 is "Authority and Conscience;" for Wednesday, 10 a. m., "The Cathedral System in America;" Wednesday, 7:30 p. m., "Moral Education in Public Schools;" Thursday, 10:30 a. m., "The Confessional;" Thursday, 7:30 p. m., "Is Our Civilization Just to Workingmen;" Friday, 10:30 a. m., "Agnosticism;" and Friday, 2 p. m., "The Mission, and Evangelistic Preaching."

While Harpers and the "Century" Company are filling England with their magazines, it is no more than fair that England should send some of her representative periodicals to this country, and it is only a part of the game of turn-about that Cassell & Co., Limited, should publish two of their magazines with a special eye to the American market. The "Magazine of Art" has been published here for some years past, so that it is looked upon almost as an American periodical. The American edition has an American editor, who gives full American notes at the end of the magazine, and the body articles are international in their interest, and during the coming year they will be even more so. Quite recently "Cassell's Family Magazine" has been introduced to American readers, and has found almost instant favor. This magazine is sold at the absurdly low subscription price of one dollar and a half a year, which is so little for what is in it that I don't see where the publishers get their money back, but I guess they are satisfied. It does not appeal to the same audiences as "Harpers" and the "Century," but to a larger one, and I should not be at all surprised if it got as big a circulation here in time as it has in England, where I believe it outstrips all rivals in this matter.

DEMOCRATIC REPRESENTATIVE CONVENTION

The Democratic Convention for the 1st representative district of Lenawee met at the Council Building in this village last Tuesday afternoon with a good delegation from each township. A. P. Coddington, of Tecumseh, was called to the chair and E. W. Scott, of Blissfield, was chosen Secretary. Mr. Coddington upon taking the chair made a brief but good speech.

On motion, a committee on credentials of three was appointed, consisting of

Wm. Corbett, Blissfield.
David Brooks, Clinton.
Wm. Hayden, Tecumseh.

This committee retired, and in a few moments reported. Their report was adopted.

On motion each town delegation was authorised to cast the entire vote of the delegation.

The convention then proceeded to nominate a candidate for representative.

David McNair of Tecumseh, nominated Horace Holdridge of Raisin. Wm. Corbett of Blissfield seconded the nomination. No other name was presented and Mr. Holdridge was nominated by acclamation.

A district committee was then appointed as follows:

Clipton—W. V. Fisk.
Macon—A. Harrington.
Ridgeway—Wm. H. Arner.
Tecumseh—D. McNair.
Raisin—Robert Boyd.
Palmyra—James Steele.
Deerfield—H. H. Osborn.
Riga—W. H. Wise.
Ogden—B. L. Hicks.
Blissfield—E. W. Scott.

The convention then adjourned.

THE MARKET BASKET.

Notwithstanding the "hard times" which nearly every one is complaining of, the average housekeeper with a limited purse can furnish the table with substantial and enticing food at a reasonable cost satisfactory to both herself and he who by the sweat of his brow provides the income whereby it is obtained. A HERALD scribe yesterday visited several of the retail markets and found the vegetable supply large and varied. Potatoes large and mealy, 40 cents a bushel; onions, tear starters, 80 for the same quantity; cabbage, food of friend of the German with its visions of sour kraut, sold at from 3 to 5 cents a head; beans, 40 cts; beets, 60 cents a bushel; sweet potatoes, 15 to 25 cents per half peck; the esculent tomato at 8, and hypocritical cucumbers 10 cents a dozen and the codic thrown in.

The supply of fruit is not nearly so good as it was three weeks ago. The luscious peach has waned and the star of the aqueous watermelon is fast disappearing behind the gathering clouds of rinds, while the succulent cantelope now wears a suspicious look, suggesting that its best uses is for throwing at melodious cats and delusive organ grinders. But all fruit is not that way. Apples are rosy looking and tempting, as well as cheap, selling as low as 12½ cents a peck. Grapes sell at 5 cents a pound.

There are more chickens in the market now that cool weather has come but somehow as the buyers wrestle with the flesh and gravy of the fowls the next day, they cannot forbear the reflection that some dealers will have a great deal to answer for in the next world. If they feed the chickens with half the zeal they feed themselves they would have an annex to their crown and a large pair of wings in the sweet henceforth. Egg-layers can be bought for from 12 to 15 cents a pound.

Eggs sold at 17 cents a dozen, and fresh butter at 25 to 32 cents a pound, according to aromatic qualities of brand.

Staple articles continue firm at scheduled rates.

ONE MAN'S LIFE.

October 3, 1838, was a red-letter day for the democracy—for this day a certain manchild was born in Cherry Valley, N. Y.—He developed cheek till '51—came to Lenawee county, bringing his cheek with him as a permanent investment—split rails—a la Lincoln, taught school when he was 18 years old—learned more than the scholars—state normal school in '57—graduated in '62—head filled—great big head, too. In July, '63, enlisted—made lieutenant—fought more than 100 battles in his mind. After the war read law with Norman Geddes, at Adrian—went through Ann Arbor law school, '67—in a hurry—partner of Gov. Greenley same year—elected county superintendent of schools '71—first democrat elected in county in ten years—always been a democrat—party not to blame, though—candidate on state ticket '72—got left—elected justice of peace '75—served four years—in '78 bought Daily Press—paper died next year—in '78 bought Weekly Press—paper still running—opposes Begole—good thing for Begole—made some more enemies—more the better—weighs 200—enjoys good joke—name Stearns—front name Willard. Dar Allen, of Morenci, calls him "Pog Horn"—wanted to be member of board of control of industrial home for girls—too much ladies' man—ladies kicked—Begole appointed another man—Stearns mad—ladies glad—appointed commissioner to world's fair at San Francisco in '86—serving third term as alderman second ward—wants to be governor—have to, want—too modest to ask for it. His greatest fault is his overflowing modesty. When the "kid" earthquake struck Adrian a few years ago he was the only man in town not shaken off his feet—but Tom Navin got away all the same.—Evening News.

The Mechanic.

A man who is thorough master of a trade carries his capital in his head. He is independent, and should be self-reliant, as his services will always be in requisition, unless, perchance, he has drifted into some section of the world where trade and manufactures are in a state of decadence. It may be an excellent thing to endow a youth with a splendid education, but often we find such young men failures in a business way. But there is no excuse for a first-class mechanic or engineer ever being found in such an unfortunate plight. The man possessing a good scientific or mechanical education, who can not make his way successfully through life must be composed of very poor material. The good mechanic needs no golden ladder to aid him in rising to success, nor is there occasion for his reliance on social standing, or on the good offices of influential friends to open a path to fortune. Indeed, instead of seeking for friends they will seek him. An expert galvanizer a few weeks since was thrown out of employment, and scarcely had the doors of his mill been closed ere there came a telegram from a mill 1,000 miles away urgently requesting his services there. A representative of an extensive manufactory, in speaking of good mechanics recently, said: "We still have difficulty in obtaining all the expert help we need. This matter sometimes assumes a serious aspect, and we fear often that we can not run our works to their best advantage for lack of the proper assistance."

We here speak of the higher grade of workmen—of men who are proficient and who have mastered their calling; but mechanics who have not risen to eminence, but have acquired a good education, are in most favorable position, better than the horde of ill-[illegible] salesmen and collectors, [illegible] a calling that will [illegible] their hands [illegible] putting them to wear. The Boston Commercial [illegible] speaking of the importance [illegible] of the mechanic, very [illegible]

[illegible] ing day makes more [illegible] the fact that we have come [illegible] when the mechanic is [illegible] We have crowded professions [illegible] trades. A chance to fill [illegible] position of sub-assistant clerk in a [illegible] house is eagerly grasped at [illegible] hundred applicants, though the [illegible] received be scarcely more than [illegible] chance to learn the business.' Let a master workman try to obtain an apprentice at three times the salary offered the clerk, and his applicants will be poor alike in quantity and quality. A skilled workman in any trade need never want for hire; he is eagerly sought after by a hundred employers; he is independent of the condition of the market; the skill and cunning of his hand and eye are too valuable to lose, and must be paid whether the products are slowly or rapidly consumed. If business ceases, the master hand is eagerly seized by some rival house, which knows and values the product of his skill. He who would crush down the obstacles to success in our own days must have as well as the wit to see the crevice, the strength to deal the blow. This is an age of the steam-engine, and it is the engineer, not the conductor, who is master."

The men who can do a piece of exact mechanical work, or who can invent a successful working machine or plan its erection, is a valuable member of society. He is a producer, and the world is both richer and better for his presence. His calling demands a fine development of intellectual thought, and, although the mental conception requisite to do a fine bit of mechanical work may not be of the same high order as that required of a sculptor or painter, yet it is of a high degree of merit, and may equal, in special circumstances, the efforts of the best artist in any of the various schools. It is a narrow-minded man who despises the mechanic because of the surroundings of his labor. Those who look down on him are generally men of inferior intelligence, who possess a poor conception of what is worthy of admiration, and whose esteem would be of little credit to any one.—Jeweler's Journal

British Guiana Forests.

In the quiet reaches of the river between the cataracts the scenery was extremely beautiful, but the thickness of the forest made it impossible, except when very near the shore, to distinguish the picturesque kinds of vegetation peculiar to the tropics from the vast wall of green which hedged us in. It was only when taking our midday rest, or at our camps for the night, that I was able to study the flora around me and note the beauty and profuseness of its forms. Orchids were abundant enough, and, although I saw no species of great rarity, yet several kinds which were in flower at the time were very lovely. Bromelias and tillandsias grew in thousands, and the immense leaves of the pothos were seen everywhere. In one or two places I noticed the rare and beautiful climbing palm (desmoncus), and in the open parts of the forest were great numbers of caladiums, the variolored leaves of which are so familiar in our hothouses.

Animal life was in no way prominent, although there could be no doubt that the forest was thickly peopled, for at night as we sat around the camp-fire or lay in our hammocks many were the weird sounds that came from the thick jungle near by. The nightly concert was usually started by the 'bo'sun, a large cicada, who sat in the tree-tops and blew a tremulous whistle which could be heard to a great distance. He was followed by the hylas, or tree-toads, who gave vent to every conceivable sound, from that of the sawing of wood to the clanking of many chains, and were accompanied in their vocal efforts by their relations in the marshes, who kept up a deep and not unmusical bass. All night long the goatsuckers never desisted from their melancholy moaning, and once in awhile a strange, mournful wail came from the forest, causing us to start and shiver as we heard it. It was the note of the bird called lost soul. Once or twice the loud, deep roar of the jaguar was heard, and it never failed to cause a panic among the Indians, who invariably moved their hammock poles nearer the water or raised the hammocks higher in the trees to be out of the tiger's reach should he pass our way. Out of all the appalling, blood-curdling sounds that were heard in these tropical woods none could equal the noise that came from the throat of the red-coated, black-faced, howling monkey (mycetes seniculus), the "baboon" of the colony. Occasionally some of these baboons favored us with a little rehearsal during the night, but it was towards morning that the concert itself began, and then, until I became accustomed to it, there was no more sleep for me. Words are inadequate to describe the sound which these animals produce. It is something between a howl and a roar, with an occasional grunt thrown in, the whole being delivered with about the intensity of a fog-whistle, and the concert being participated in by baboons for miles around. When all these fellows are attending strictly to business the result in the way of a noise may be imagined.

Tracks of the tapir were several times seen in marshy places near the river bank, and I sometimes got a shot at flocks of the little, red saccawinki monkeys, which were very common on this river. Iguanas called "Waimucka" by the Indians, frequently tumbled from the branches into the stream when we paddled near the shore, and on two occasions some of our men brought in peccaries, or bush-hogs, which they had shot with their arrows near our camp, and which proved a most welcome addition to our larder, notwithstanding their rankness; but visible game was scarce, and a man would have had a poor living who depended on his gun for support.—Cor. Chicago Tribune.

Plant Longevity.

Particularly interesting examples of the evolution of different life terms are exhibited in the geographical distribution of plants. If we consider the whole earth as to its climate, we shall observe that in a few regions near the equator, that have a uniform climate, plants will grow all the year through without manifesting any periodical preferences. This is the case, for example, east of the Andes in Northern Brazil, in Guinea and Java, where the vegetation is green and blooms continuously; where most species become woody and nearly all live long and bear fruit often; while the short-lived, once-fruiting species are in the background. In other tropical regions where a periodical climate is produced by the difference in the motions of the atmosphere, the long-lived plants prevail, and the ground is so occupied with them till the coming on of the dry season that the short lived kind cannot find room upon it. The case is different in those regions where spots become barren of vegetation in consequence of the parching heat. Then when the rainy season sets in, the annuals quickly spring up between the bulbous and tuberous herbs that are able to keep their places through the drought. The short-lived species are of most importance where a warm season alternates with a cold one, and the warm one lasts long enough for them to go within its terms through the whole cycle of their life, from their seed time to the ripening of their fruit. As the warm season becomes shorter the number of annuals is reduced, until finally, when the summer is not long enough for any of them to perfect their seed, they disappear altogether. Thus the persistent, often-fruiting species gain the monopoly on the high mountains and in Arctic regions, but with the difference that in some districts they maintain themselves above the ground through the whole year without protection against the climate, while in others they exist through a long period of rest protected against effects of the cold by means of their perennial parts under the soil or under the cover of an effective shelter.—San Francisco Chronicle.

They Drove Him In.

The owner of a place on Sibley street appeared in front of the house yesterday morning with a step-ladder and a saw and began the work of trimming up his shade trees. While he was at the first limb a pedestrian halted and queried:

"Going to trim your trees, eh?"

"Yes."

"Um. I see. First-rate time to trim trees. Um. Exactly."

He hadn't got two blocks away before number two came along and called out:

"Going to trim your trees, eh?"

"Yes."

"Ah! I see. Ought to have waited a month later."

The limb was off when No. 3 halted, stood for a minute with his hands in his pockets, and then asked:

"Going to trim your trees, eh?"

"Yes."

"Ought to have done that last month."

No. 4 said that April was the proper month. No. 5 wou'dn't trim a tree except in May. No. 6 thought November the best time of year, and so it went until every month in the year had been named and there were five or six individuals to spare. Before the last tree was finished the seventeenth pedestrian halted, threw away the stub of his cigar and loudly demanded:

"Going to trim your trees, eh?"

The man hung his saw to a limb, got down off the ladder, and spitting on his hands he walked close up to the inquirer and said:

"Supposing I am! What are you going to do about it?"

"Oh, nothing," answered the other, as he dodged around a pile of bricks; "I was simply going to ask you if you used tar or porous plasters to cover up the scars."

The citizen got his saw and ladder and disappeared in the house, and the remainder of the work will be done at night.—Detroit Free Press.

—In the shop of a boulevard pastry cook in Paris a young masher questioned the freshness of a tart. The shopkeeper was touched to the quick, and remarked: "I made tarts, young man, a good while before you were born." "I don't doubt it," was the reply, "and this must be one of them."

—Forty-nine out of fifty unmarried school-teachers, who recently took up their abode in Washington Territory, have resigned and accepted—matrimony. There is also a good show for the fiftieth, although she is said to be mortal homely.—Chicago Tribune

A Blessing To All Mankind

In these times when these newspapers are flooded with patent medicine advertisements, it is gratifying to know what to procure that will certainly cure you. If you are Bilious, blood out of order, Liver inactive, or generally debilitated, there is nothing in the world that will cure you so quickly as Electric Bitters. They are a blessing to mankind, and can be had for only fifty cents a bottle.

Griggs' Glycerine Salve.

The best on earth can truly be said of Griggs' Glycerine Salve, which is a sure cure for cuts, bruises, scalds, burns, wounds and all other sores. Will positively cure piles; tetter and all skin eruptions. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Only 25 cents. For sale by Baker & Hall.

Factory men at Buchanan are experiencing duller times than ever before, and nearly all are out of employment on account of the shops being closed.

New Jersey Premium Wine.

Physicians state that the Port Wine, produced by Alfred Speer, of New Jersey, that took the Premium at the Centennial, is excellent for medicinal purposes being pure and more reliable than other port wines. Especially recommended for weekly females and the aged. The brown stone shale soil in which the grapes grow is rich in iron, this is the cause of the deep color and the blood making properties of the wine. For sale by C. A. Wright & Co.

A CURE FOR GRAVEL.

A Common and Painful Complaint—A Statement you may Confide in.

It seems to have been reserved for Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., to accomplish through his preparation widely known as KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, what others have failed to compass. The subjoined letter will be found of vital interest to sufferers from gravel and to the general public:

ALBANY, March 30, 1884.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

Dear Sir—Let me tell you frankly that I have never been partial to proprietary medicines, as I believe the majority of them to be nothing better than obtaining money from people when suffering makes ready to catch at any proposed relief. They are mean cheats and delusions. But your Favorite Remedy I know by happy experience to be a totally different thing. I had been a sufferer from gravel for years, and had resorted to many eminent physicians for relief, but no permanent good came of it. About three years ago your Favorite Remedy was recommended to me. I can give you the result in a sentence: I tried it and it cured me completely. I am confident it saved my life. You can use this letter if you think best. Yours, etc.,

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS

The reputation of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as a preventive of epidemics, a stomachic, an invigorant, a general restorative and a specific for fever and ague, indigestion, bilious affections, rheumatism, nervous debility, constitutional weakness, is established upon the sound basis of more than twenty years experience, and can no more be shaken by the clap trap nostrums of unscrupulous pretenders, than the everlasting hills by the winds that rustle through their depths. For sale by Druggists and dealers generally.

COMPARATIVE WORTH OF BAKING POWDER.

REPORTS OF GOVERNMENT CHEMISTS

As to Purity and Wholesomeness of the Royal Baking Powder.

"I have tested a package of Royal Baking Powder, which I purchased in the open market, and find it composed of pure and wholesome ingredients. It is a cream of tartar powder of a high degree of merit, and does not contain either alum or phosphates, or other injurious substances. E. G. LOVE, Ph.D."

"It is a scientific fact that the Royal Baking Powder is absolutely pure. "H. A. MOTT, Ph.D."

"I have examined a package of Royal Baking Powder, purchased by myself in the market. I find it entirely free from alum, terra alba, or any other injurious substance. HENRY MORTON, Ph.D., President of Stevens Institute of Technology."

"I have analyzed a package of Royal Baking Powder. The materials of which it is composed are pure and wholesome. S. DANA HAYES, State Assayer, Mass."

The Royal Baking Powder received the highest award over all competitors at the Vienna World's Exposition, 1873; at the Centennial, Philadelphia, 1876; at the American Institute, New York, and at State Fairs throughout the country.

No other article of human food has ever received such high, emphatic, and universal endorsement from eminent chemists, physicians, scientists, and Boards of Health all over the world.

NOTE—The above DIAGRAM illustrates the comparative worth of various Baking Powders, as shown by Chemical Analysis and experiments made by Prof. Schedler. A pound can of each powder was taken, the total leavening power or volume in each can calculated, the result being as indicated. This practical test for worth by Prof. Schedler only proves what every observant consumer of the Royal Baking Powder knows by practical experience, that, while it costs a few cents per pound more than ordinary kinds, it is far more economical, and, besides, affords the advantage of better work. A single trial of the Royal Baking Powder will convince any fair minded person of these facts.

* While the diagram shows some of the alum powders to be of a higher degree of strength than other powders ranked below them, it is not to be taken as indicating that they have any value. All alum powders, no matter how high their strength, are to be avoided as dangerous.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

C. W. Clough died Tuesday morning. The village has lost a faithful and energetic friend, for he has been first to incite many much needed innovations. Few leave the world with such fearlessness and graceful composure. His remains were accompanied to Oxford, Ohio, by wife and mother; but four children, too small to understand their loss are cared for by friends here and elsewhere, until home doors are again open. Much sickness prevails here, and what will avert second-hand cholera concerns folks more than who will be president. Who knows but a twice reading of Mulligan letters might prove an antidote.

The Republican battle-cry will begin next Tuesday evening, and no doubt Cleveland and Butler echoes will resound soon after. There is no wigwam to dedicate this time, but the hall, without doors added, will hold a fair sized audience. Now that the trial of strength is near, each party will do their best to win converts but if they succeed in repealing the Prohibition scare this time, the conviction will abide with many officials that a few years hence they cannot secure nominations for mouse-trap regulators. Brief happiness is better than none, however, and I wish them bon voyage to the land of rest.

PEARLIE.

RIDGEWAY RACKET.

Fine weather for fall work.

Mr. Frank Allen will hold down Jerome as agent for the M. & O. company.

There were a good many out to the social at Mrs. Hall's on Friday night, and all enjoyed themselves splendidly for it was a fine moonlight evening.

Mr. Enoch French was the guest of Miss Ida Arner Friday and Saturday.

Mr. W. B. Arner husked 40 bushels of corn in 5 hours for Mr. W. P. Cadmus. Who can beat that?

Rev. W. J. Clark and family took possession of the parsonage last Saturday and are busy getting ready to receive calls from friends here.

We wish to say that it is Mrs. G. W. Jackson instead of Mrs. S. W. Jackson that has gone into the millinery business here, as was reported in last weeks HERALD.

There were quite a good many went over to see and hear Ex. Gov. St. John at Adrian Tuesday.

Mr. Wilber is the guest of Mrs. J. D. Freer for the present.

Hon. Chas. Mosher will speak on the Temperance issue at Britton next Friday night.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Linn spent the Sabbath at Dundee with friends.

After a sickness of about 48 hours Mrs. G. P. Waring departed this life on Monday afternoon. She was a great sufferer during her short sickness and all was done that could be for her recovery and comfort. She was 35 years of age and the daughter of Mr. Richard Cadmus and was married to Mr. Waring Sept. 16th 1877 by Rev. Geo. Field. She was a true christian woman and a great help in the church. Her many friends will sadly miss her and are in sympathy for the friends in their sad bereavement. The funeral took place on Wednesday afternoon at the church Rev. W. J. Clark officiating.

Mrs. R. T. Bush bought the Garlinghouse Bros. fancy black team and will take them to her home in Brooklyn in a few days.

Wednesday night Oct. 1st it was our pleasure to attend the 50 anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. James A. Jackson, of Saline township, Washtenaw Co. At 7:30 friends to the number of 150 or more gathered at their home and after some music by the Macon cornet band and an hour of social amusement a short program appointed for the occasion was carried out.

Solo—"Golden Days"—Mr. Isaac Hendershot, Macon.

Poem—"Golden Wedding"—Miss Wadsworth, Adrian.

Poem—Mr. G. W. Jackson, Ridgeway.

Solo—"50 years ago"—Isaac Hendershot.

Address—Rev. Mr. Dutton, Macon.

Presentation of Gifts—Hon. Dr. Geo. Howell, Macon.

Responce—Mr. Jackson in behalf of his wife thanked the friends for their kindness.

Duett—"Good Night"—Misses Ella Jackson and Ida Arner, Ridgeway.

After which refreshments were served. Mr. James A. Jackson was born in N. Y. State, March 21st. 1810. Mrs. Lovenia Jackson was born in Penn. April 27th 1816, and was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Arner and united in marriage with Mr. Jackson Oct. 1st 1834. They came to Mich. in 1835 and settled one mile North of Macon village. In 1843 they purchased of the Government 15 acres of the wilderness for a home where they have lived for 40 years. They raised a family of four boys and four girls all living but two and married, Mathias lives at Brockway, St. Clair Co., Washington at Ridgeway, John and Clarley at Macon, William in Arkansas, Alice at Leslie, Ingham Co. The aged couple having traveled lifes rugged path for 50 years look back with pleasure days when the Indian and wolf were their most frequent guests. The string to the latch of the cabin was always out and all were made welcome when within. It is now as it was then the young as well as the old are welcome. And as we see the aged couple worn out by hard toil and misfortune we know that soon we must bid them a last farewell, but hope to meet them with friends gone before on that "Golden Shore" where parting is not known.

MACON MUSIC.

Rev. Mr. Wright, of Dundee, preached at the M. E. church Sunday.

Dr. Chas. Howell of Alpena, and his daughter, Mrs. Nichols of Ann Arbor, visited relatives in Macon Monday and Tuesday.

A few good staunch republicans went to Clinton Saturday evening to hear R. E. Frazier. They reported a good speech for republicanism.

Mary Richart came home from the Normal last Saturday, and stayed over Sunday.

Will Hatch returned to Detroit last week to complete his commercial course.

Oct. 1st. was the fiftieth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. James Jackson. To commenorate the event a number of their relatives and friends determined to give them a surprise. Accordingly a large company laden with rich eatables, broke in upon them in the early part of the evening. A literary program, consisting of songs, poems, and speeches was carried out. Refreshments were then served. The balance of the evening was spent in friendly "chat," and in reviewing the events of the last fifty years. Mr. and Mrs. J. were the recipients of a number of valuable presents for which they were very grateful. At a late hour the company dispersed, all seeming to have enjoyed the affair. May Mr. and Mrs. Jackson see many more years, is our wish.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

Rev. P. R. Ogden, the Baptist minister, commenced his labors with the Baptist church here last Sunday.

The funeral of Mrs. R. Bartlett who died early on Monday morning last week, was held at her late residence in Clinton, on Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, and was largely attended. The Rev. W. P. Wastell officiating.

Seth Bradner has left home and has accepted a position as salesman in a wholesale grocery house. Clinton has furnished more young men for that kind of occupation than any other town of similar size.

The Episcopal social will be held at the house of W. V. Fisk, on Thursday evening, and from the known hospitality of Mr. Fisk, we predict a large attendance and an extra good time with the usual good results.

The Baptist sunday school institute held at the Baptist church on Sunday and Sunday evening last, was well attended and a good and instructive time was had.

The entertainment given under the auspices of the Congregational church held at their church on Wednesday evening of last week was a good entertainment, there being a goodly number of very nice paintings exhibited which was worth the price charged for admittance, but the attendance was not what it ought to have been.

We notice that Mr. Freeze has now his store nicely arranged in the latest style of architecture and is putting his goods upon the shelves in such a way that they make a nice display. Call and see him.

As was expected Robt. Frazer, of Jackson, was on hand on Saturday evening last and lectured at the Town Hall. His speech was mostly in vindication of the nominees of the Republican party and in abuse of the Prohibition party with an occasional hit at the Democratic party. I have not yet heard of any conversions and the Prohibitionists are mad.

As was expected Rev. Ogden the new pastor of the Baptist church commenced his labors with the church here on Sunday last and as we learn made a very favorable impression and we predict for him a pleasant and useful pastorate here.

There were quite a number of our citizens went to Adrian on Tuesday to hear and see St. John and other apostles of the temperance cause, and they report a good time, a large crowd, with the usual number of conversions.

Mr. S. Browy has taken the agency here for the Mass. Mutual Life Insurance Co., and is doing a good business for this popular old company. J. C. Thompson, of Detroit, the general Agent in this state, spent a couple of days here this week.

HOLLOWAY HICKUPS.

J. S. Gilman has moved his family to Holloway at last, and it does one good to see how the old gent's face has shortened up since that event. We no longer hear him singing in that plaintive tone, "No one to love me, no one to cheer me;" but instead of that we notice he is inclined to sing, "Oh! I am as happy as a child with the love of etc. etc."

Improvements still go on. Mac Sleeper is plastering the upper part of his store.

James Sutherland has just erected a snug little barn on his premises which adds very materially to its appearance.

The new opera house of Robert McWilliams is nearly completed. Its architecture is of the Queen Anne style, and taken altogether it is an imposing edifice. Long live the proprietor.

Mrs. Brainard is visiting her parents in Tecumseh.

Al Hoxie fell into the doctor's hands again last week, but managed to kick loose in a couple of days.

Dysentary still prevails. Al Maclean's children have both been down with it but are now convalescent.

Ferris Dunham passed the Sabbath with his people in Hudson.

Dora Cram has returned to her old place in the store of Kelly, Hoxie & Co. after an extended trip through the northern part of the state. The change has evidently done her good and we shall expect her to be a little better natured in the future.

W. I. Scott has purchased a new carriage and harness, and when he dons that stiff hat and hitches up the mustang one would hardly think it was the man we had seen behind the counter all summer shaving ham for customers.

ONSTED ODDS.

Mrs. J. E. Gibbs is visiting friends in Indiana.

A good many from here went to Adrian Tuesday to hear St. John.

A. P. Kimball of Rome talks of moving his saw-mill to this place.

Onsted base ball players go to Rome Center next Saturday to play, and to Springville a week from Saturday.

Reuben Fox, who has been working in this vicinity for a year or two returned last Monday to his home in Canada.

Cambridge Prohibitionists will raise a pole at Springville, Saturday, Oct. 11th, at 2 P. M. Hon. Chas. Mosher will do the speaking.

W. B. Raymond, who has been station agent here since the railroad commenced operation, has resigned his position. He expects to engage in some other business.

THE ST. JOHN MEETING.

A large number of our citizens went to Adrian on Tuesday last to hear and see Ex. Gov. St. John, the prohibition candidate for president. They all report a large crowd and a very successful meeting. We take the following report from the Adrian Record:

The prohibitionists of the county are thoroughly aroused. Thousands of people were present to hear St. John. Some, it is true came on of curiosity, but many came to gain new enthusiasm in carying on the prohibition campaign.

The happy looking families of all ages denoted that the party is a family party. They brought their dinners with them, and at noon Lawrence park bore a picnic appearance, and was crowded with feasting families. St. John and Preston arrived about noon. They drove to the Lawrence House, where they dined. At one o'clock the Adrian city band serenaded them and brief speeches were made from the hotel balcony to the listening multitude. The procession at once formed and proceeded to Lawrence park.

On arriving Thomas Moore, of Madison, called the assemblage to order and announced that the exercises would commence with music from the band and immediately after the best band in the country rendered that grand old hymn, "Nearer My God to Thee." Mr. Moore then by a few appropriate remarks complementing Adrian and Lenawee county, as to its culture and fine agricultural products, introduced St. John, of Kansas, who acknowledged the favor by a profuse bow and smiling countenance amid applause.

The attendance was very large, the grand stand being completely filled with interested listeners, and the fair grounds proper were a living mass of people who were all attention to this able orator.

Plenty of entertainments at the Opera House.

THE BLUE CHAMBER.

A small party of ladies and gentlemen engaged in conversation were sitting after dinner in the spacious grounds of an ancient manor.

The doors of the mansion stood wide open. The evening breeze whispered and rustled through the branches of the huge lindens, the shadows grew longer and longer, ink-black beneath the leafy roof of boughs, lighter on the patches of turf.

It was a mild summer evening, still, yet full of strange, mysterious sounds; the soft breeze floated into the doors, bearing with it the heavy fragrance of the flowers. In the gathering dusk the members of the group could scarcely see each other.

Conversation languished, passing from subject to subject; no one seemed inclined to enter upon a lengthy discussion.
